

Brit. 53 ^{m.e}₌

<36616026170019

<36616026170019

Bayer. Staatsbibliothek

CHURCH-OF-ENGLANDISM

AND ITS

Catechism examined:

PRECEDED BY

STRICTURES ON THE EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM,

AS PURSUED IN THE

NATIONAL SOCIETY'S SCHOOLS:

INTERSPERSED

WITH PARALLEL VIEWS OF THE

ENGLISH AND SCOTTISH ESTABLISHED AND NON-ESTABLISHED CHURCHES:

AND CONCLUDING WITH

REMEDIES PROPOSED FOR ABUSES INDICATED:

AND

AN EXAMINATION OF THE PARLIAMENTARY SYSTEM OF CHURCH REFORM LATELY PURSUED, AND STILL PURSUING:

INCLUDING THE PROPOSED NEW CHURCHES.

BY

JEREMY BENTHAM, ESQ.

BENCHER OF LINCOLN'S INN,

AND LATE OF QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD, M. A.

LONDON:

PRINTED, 1817: PUBLISHED, 1818:

BY EFFINGHAM WILSON, ROYAL EXCHANGE:

Price 20s.

CHURCH-OF-ENGLANDISM

AND ITS

Catechism examined:

FORWARDED BY

STRICTURES ON THE EXCELSIONARY SYSTEM

AS PUBLISHED IN THE

NATIONAL SOCIETY'S SCHOOLS:

IN THE

REMARKS PROPOSED FOR ADRES INDICATED:

AND

AN EXAMINATION OF THE EXCELSIONARY SYSTEM OF

FORWARD BEHOLD, FIRST PUBLISHED, AND STILL

FORWARDING

INCLUDING THE PROPOSED NEW CHURCHES

JEREMY BENTHAM, ESQ.

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT

AND FATE OF GLASS, COLLEGE, OXFORD, M. A.

LONDON:

PRINTED, 1817: FURNISHED, 1818:

BY KENNEDY AND CO. GENERAL EXCHANGE:

LONDON:

PRINTED BY C. AND W. REYNELL, BROAD STREET, GOLDEN SQUARE.

CONTENTS.

	Page
PREFACE	i to lv
INTRODUCTION.
PART I.—THE CATECHISM—A BAD SUBSTITUTE TO THE BIBLE—IS SUBSTITUTED TO IT	1
§ 1.—Church of England Catechism—this perhaps the First Censorial Commentary ever applied to it	1
§ 2.—On Religion, in a Christian Free-School, the Bible the only fit Lesson-Book	5
§ 3.—No Substitute to the Bible should be there taught— the Catechism is made a Substitute to it	13
§ 4.—Badness of this Substitute in every respect: I. As to Faithfulness.—No Tests of it	20
§ 5.—II. Badness in respect of Matter	32
§ 6.—III. Badness in respect of Form	32
§ 7.—Of the Badness of this Formulary, in respect of Matter, the Framers of it were conscious	32
§ 8.—Of the Badness of this Formulary, in respect of Faithfulness, Matter, and Form, the Imposers of it on the Schools are conscious	33
PART II.—EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION— ITS ESTABLISHMENT—ITS BAD TENDENCIES	52

	Page
PART III. — EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM — GROUNDS FOR THE HOPE THAT THE APPROBATION OF IT IS NOT GENERAL	71
PART IV. — NATIONAL SOCIETY — GROUNDS FOR RE- GARDING THE EXCLUSIONARY ACTS AS SPURIOUS, AND ITS REPORTS AS PURPOSELY DECEPTIOUS	74
1.—Cause and Ground of Suspicion as to Authenti- city	74
§ 2.—Marks of Authenticity, proper and usual, in Reports of Proceedings of Public Bodies	77
§ 3.—Positions and Plan of Proof—Ends pursued by the Institution—Means employed	82
§ 4.—I. Proofs of the System of Exclusion	88
§ II. (should be) § 5.—Proofs of the System of Imposi- tion—2. General Committee—Meetings none	111
§ 6.—Proofs of the System of Imposition continued—II. Sub-Committees and their Meetings, none	123
§ 7.—Proofs of the System of Imposition continued—III. Acts spurious	128
§ 8.—Securities against Spuriousness—Cause of the Omis- sion of them, Necessity and Design—not Inadvertence	151
§ 9.—Authors, acting and consenting, of the combined Systems of Exclusion and Imposition	164
§ 10.—Authors, &c. continued—Dr. Manners Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury	176
§ 11.—How to organize a Chaos—Forms of Disorder ex- emplified in these Reports	189
§ 12. General Committee—Fraud involved in the Title thus given to the Managing Body	222
PART V.—BAPTISM AND SPONSORSHIP PROPER, WHEN INSTITUTED — BAPTISM USELESS, SPONSORSHIP IM- PROPER NOW	236

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND CATECHISM EXAMINED	1
---	---

APPENDIX, No. I.

REMARKS ON THE OBJECT OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND RELIGION, AS AVOWED BY THE BISHOP OF LONDON	87
---	----

No. II.

LORD'S SUPPER—NOT DESIGNED BY JESUS FOR GENERAL IMITATION — ITS UTTER UNFITNESS FOR THAT PURPOSE	154
--	-----

No. III.

REMEDIES TO THE EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM AS APPLIED TO INSTRUCTION	180
--	-----

No. IV.

REMEDY TO ALL RELIGIOUS AND MUCH POLITICAL MISCHIEF—EUTHANASIA OF THE CHURCH	193
§ 1.—Plan of this Paper	194
§ 2.—Euthanasia, in Contradistinction to Cacothanasia, what?—UTI POSSIDETIS Principle—its Application to this Case	198
§ 3.—I. Service	204
§ 4.—II. Pay	231
§ 5.—Pay continued—Merit, whether producible by Si- necures	270
§ 6.—III. Discipline	288
§ 7.—State of Discipline, as exhibited by Authority, and elucidated by a Diocesan Secretary	305
§ 8.—Ulterior Information from Mr. Wright	353
§ 9.—Vices of Excellent Church recapitulated	368
§ 10.—Facienda in the way of Reform	385

No. V.

	Page
RECENT MEASURES OF PRETENDED REFORM OR IMPROVEMENT—THEIR INUTILITY AND MISCHIEVOUSNESS	400
INTRODUCTION	ib.
§ 1.—I. Giving Increase to the Number of Non-Resident Incumbents	403
§ 2.—II. Increasing the Number of Resident Curates	405
III. To that End, out of the Pockets of Incumbents and Patrons, taking Money, and forcing it into the Pockets of Curates	ib.
§ 3.—IV. For Increasing the Value of English Livings, exacting from the Population of the Three Kingdoms the Annual Sum of 100,000 l.	433
§ 4.—V. Regulating the operations of Agriculture, in the case of a Parish or other Priest	442
§ 5.—VI. Over Incumbents and Curates, lodging despotic power in the hands of Bishops	449
§ 6.—VII. Announced, and remaining to be executed. From Christians, and others of all persuasions, money to be exacted, sufficient to render the number of Church-of-England Churches commensurate to the whole population	455

PREFACE

ON PUBLICATION.

NOT without regret, in a manner so contrary to what will be seen to have been his original intention, is the personality of the author at length exposed to the view of the company,—a company, not small either in eminence or numbers,—of those who in so many parts of the work, will find more or less cause to be dissatisfied with it.

From the view of a determinate individual, in the character of the instrument by which the reproach is cast, the dissatisfaction can not but receive more or less increase: and, assuredly, of the object which he has all along been aiming at, never has the production of pain in any shape, to so much as a single individual, formed any part: never any more than of that of the surgeon in the probing of a wound.

To the regret thus expressed one alleviation however remains: viz. that among existing individuals scarcely could any one be found, from whose personality any uneasiness, in the production of which he may thus have been instrumental, could receive less increase. Coming from a recluse, who forms no part of society—whose destiny keeps his person as completely, as if he were immured in a solitary cell, out of all chance of offending the eyes of any of the distinguished functionaries and other personages, to whose mind the offence, such as it is, will have been given—a work presenting no name but that of a person so circumstanced, will in the scale of inoffensiveness be found to stand next in order to an anonymous one.

With the exception of the title and of this last-written though first stationed preface, the whole contents of this volume will here be seen in the exact state in which, more than a twelvemonth ago, having passed through the press, they were made ready for the bookseller.

From booksellers, to whom the work had been either shewn or mentioned by description, the answer was—“Yes, with a name readily: but not otherwise:” with a name, meaning the name of the author whoever he might be: for, as to the name of the real author, it was not, it is believed, mentioned.

In the Introduction to the work intituled Plan of Parliamentary Reform, &c., a sort of sketch was given of one of the two natures, of which our constitution, such as it is, is composed, viz. the temporal one. In the present work may be seen a portrait of the other nature, viz. the spiritual one. The sketch was but a miniature, and that a mere outline: the portrait will be found to be of a larger size, and more particularly delineated as well as coloured.

In this instance, as in that other, whether it be with an immediate view to reformation,—or, as an indispensable means to that end, in the character of an object of censure,—the system—against that it is, and that alone, had there been any choice, the censure could have been pointed. The system, yes: individuals, no: because, the individuals, being but the children of the system—bred under the system,—had the existing individuals never had existence, under that system others exactly like them, differing in nothing but in name, would have occupied their places.

But of the system—a system in the abstract—without bringing to view any of the individuals acting under it, to give any intelligible representation—any representation on which any hope of good, how faint so ever, could have grounded itself, was not found practicable. Of all that, which will here be seen to have been done, (saying included) by an Archbishop of Canterbury, a Bishop of London, a Rector of St. James's, a Lord President of the Council, a Chancellor of the Exchequer, a Chief Judge of the Roman law, Civil and Canon—a Rector of St. James's—with their et cæteras upon et cæteras,—scarce is there anything, that, by any person, if any such there be, in whose judgment it had been better left undone than done, would have been recognized as possible, or at any rate as likely to have been done, if it had not been seen actually done: actually done by certain individuals, such as those by which those same characters will be seen to have been actually performed.

Had it not then been for individual acts and discourses, such as those here exhibited and held up to view in detail, the author would have been called to order for seeking, on grounds so purely imaginary, to destroy all confidence in public men. This for reproof: while for refutation, the words abstract, visionary, utopian, speculative, enthusiastic, with their respective conjugates, on one side of the field,—with the names of Marat and Robespierre on the other, would have been uttered and received—as so many instruments, not less sufficient than simple and concise.

As to accusation, imputation, crimination, condemnation, censure—whatsoever may be regarded as seeking to attach itself, in a strain expressed by any of those words, to this or that individual,—to the acts or discourses of the individual in question, as exhibited by the documents all along quoted or referred to—documents all along of the most authentic and unquestionable nature—everything of that sort not only is now, but from first to last has all along been meant to be confined. Of this meaning and intention, notice, it is believed, will, in places more than one, be found given in the body of the work. But, for further assurance, a declaration thus all-comprehensive, and placed at the very threshold, may perhaps be found not altogether misemployed.

In so melancholy a state of things as will be seen here depicted, the following correspondence will in some sort serve to shew, viz. that the scene, how dark so ever, is not completely destitute of all lighter shades, and at the same time with what alacrity has been laid hold of, and with what perseverance improved, whatsoever opportunity offered a prospect of placing the conduct of the distinguished persons in question, or any of them, in any light more agreeable to a philanthropic eye. Every other opportunity of the like nature that came within his reach, would be noticed by the author with the like alacrity, and whatever occasion it afforded of doing the like justice, improved with the like solicitude.

“ JEREMY BENTHAM, ESQUIRE, to W. SMITH,
ESQUIRE, M. P.

“ Ford Abbey, near Chard, Jan. 24, 1818.

“ SIR,

“ THE occasion of the application I am hereby “ taking the liberty of troubling you with, is—my “ having in immediate readiness for publication a “ work of considerable bulk, in the course of which, “ though on grounds of the utmost publicity, the “ conduct of the Archbishop of Canterbury,—on a “ certain occasion also of an eminently public na“ ture,—is held up in a point of view, such as, in “ some eyes, howsoever it may be in others, seems “ not likely to be an altogether favourable one.
“ Since the completing of the impression, it has “ happened to me to hear—and on what seemed to “ me good authority—through the medium of some “ friends of yours and mine, that his Grace’s con“ duct, on the occasion of that Toleration Act, for “ which the religion and liberty of the country are so “ eminently indebted to yourself, was such, as in “ proportion as it is known, cannot but recommend “ him, in a very high degree, to the admiration of “ the friends of both.

“ What has been done by a man on one occasion “ does not cause not to have been done that which “ has been done by him on another. But it would “ be a conduct not consistent with my notions of “ generosity, or even of justice, if, while thus, by “ the considerations that will be seen, compelled to “ hold up to view what seemed to be the ill deserts
“ of a person in so high and influential a situation, I “ suffered the occasion to go by, without endea“ vouring to make known, to the same extent, what “ it has fallen in my way to be apprized of, and
“ to regard as possessing an incontestable claim, “ to be placed to the per contra side of the ac“ count.

“ Assured of finding the like sentiments on your “ part, I take the liberty of addressing to you this “ letter, for the purpose of requesting the favour of “ your enabling me to give effect to the above wish.
“ As to the being accessory in any way to any accu“ sation, which it may happen to you to see con“ tained in the work in question,—to no such impu“ tation can a compliance with any such request as “ this expose you: for, supposing such compliance “ declined by you, the work in question will not be “ the less published. With your motives on the oc“ casion, his Grace could not therefore but feel satis“ fied, whatsoever might be the case in regard to “ mine.

“ What I heard was to this effect: viz. that on the “ occasion of the Unitarian Toleration Bill, which “ has so happily passed into an act (53 Geo. III,

“ c. 136.) it was in concert with his Grace that the “ Act passed both Houses : passed, and in that tran“ quillity which was at once so decorous and so “ admirable : that, in the state in which it was ori“ ginally drawn or approved by his Grace (I am “ not enabled to say exactly which of the two was “ the case) it was so congenial to your wishes, as to “ have in no inconsiderable degree surpassed your “ expectations : and that it was so, in a degree much “ beyond what the Act is, in the form into which it “ has been moulded : that it went so far as to give a “ complete indemnity not only to Unitarianism, but “ to all opinions without distinction respecting the “ constitution of the Godhead :—(Alack, what a sub“ ject for pretended knowledge ! What a ground for “ punishment on the score of imputed ignorance !)—
“ and this, not only as against punishment under “ statute law, but also as against punishment at com- “ mon law. No effect approaching to this (I have “ the mortification to see) has been produced by the “ Act as it stands at present. This difference—this “ sad difference between that which it is, and that “ which, I think, you cannot but join with me in “ wishing that it had been, had (I understand) for its “ cause the interposition—not of any Bishop, nor of “ any other spiritual person—but of some wearer of “ a long robe of a different cut.

“ Under these circumstances, the following are the “ particulars of the information which I am taking
“ the liberty of requesting at your hands.

“ 1. Whether it be not true, that a Bill, either “ drawn or approved by the Archbishop of Canterbury, “ gave to the liberty of printing and publishing—(or,

“ as Bishop Taylor, using the Scriptural term, more “ emphatically, as well as concisely phrases it, the “ liberty of prophesying)—a basis, broader, in some
“ and what direction, than that which by the Act in “ question has been given to it.

“ 2. Amongst the effects of that Bill, was not that “ of rendering the liberty in question secure, as well “ against prosecution at common law, as against pro“ secution on statute law?

“ 3. Between that Bill and the aforesaid Act “ were there any and what other differences?

“ To these questions, the shortest as well as most “ complete and correct answer the nature of the case “ admits of, (if no decisive objection to your favouring “ me with it occurs to you,) would be—a copy of the “ Bill itself, in the state in which it received the “ approbation of his Grace.

“ 4. By what cause or causes did that difference “ appear to you to have been produced?

“ Of the above four questions, the three first, you “ will be aware, are the only ones which have any “ immediate bearing, on the purpose of this appli“ cation, as above declared. But, surely, what“ soever regard for religious liberty was, in the first “ instance, manifested by his Grace, cannot but “ receive additional lustre, from whatsoever contrast “ may have had place between it and any opposite-“ ness in sentiment and conduct which may have “ been manifested elsewhere:—manifested from a “ quarter less exposed, on this ground, to the seduc-“ tive influence of sinister interest, and interest“ begotten prejudice.

“ I am, Sir,

“ With very sincere respect,

“ Your obedient servant,

“ JEREMY BENTHAM.”

“ W. SMITH, Esq. M. P.

“ Park Street, Westminster.”

“ W. SMITH, Esq. M. P. to JEREMY BENTHAM, ESQUIRE.

“ Park Street, Westminster, 16th February, 1818.

“ MY DEAR SIR,

“ I HAVE received your favour enquiring into the “ particulars of what passed between the Archbishop “ of Canterbury and myself, on occasion of the intro“ duction of the Bill for repealing the Penal Statutes “ against the impugners of the Trinity, which was “ passed into a law in the year 1813: and having “ still in my mind a pretty clear recollection of the “ affair, I apprehend that I shall afford the most “ satisfactory reply to your questions, by a con“ nected relation of the circumstances as they oc“ curred. And this I shall do with the greater plea“ sure, as it gives me the opportunity of acknow“ ledging the obligation which his Grace then con“ ferred upon me by the uniform frankness and libe“ rality of his conduct throughout the whole of the “ proceeding. As soon as I had determined on “ attempting the measure, my first step was to wait “ on the Archbishop at Lambeth, to acquaint him of “ my intention, and to receive from him such com“ munication as he should think fit to make. The “ result of a very open and friendly conversation on “ the subject, with his Grace, was a clear conviction

“ in my own mind that I needed not to be uneasy
“ about any opposition to be expected from him ;—
“ but he explicitly declared his disinclination to “ pledge himself to any particular point, till he had “ taken the sentiments of his brethren, whom, on “ such matters, it was his wish to consult ; and said, “ that as the spring was then pretty far advanced,
“ and several of the Bishops had left London (pro“ bably without any intention to return during the “ Session of Parliament,) he would be glad to have
“ the business postponed till the next year, if it were “ not inconsistent with my views or convenience :—
“ with which suggestion, as the matter could not be “ considered as immediately urgent, I, of course, “ complied. Early in the ensuing session, I again “ waited on his Grace, whom I had the pleasure to “ find in the same disposition. He then told me, that “ supposing my object was only to remove every ob“ struction to fair argument and discussion, he was “ willing to consent to the repeal of all the statutes, “ inflicting penalties, or disabilities for impugning or “ denying the doctrine of the Trinity, either by “ writing or advised speaking :—but that he supposed

“ I did not, any more than himself, intend to open a “ door for the admission of all manner of profaneness
“ and impiety in the mode of treating subjects of so “ solemn a description ; and therefore that the crime
“ of blasphemy should still be left open to the ani-“ madversion of the common law :—I, and I have no “ doubt his Grace also, understanding by the term “ ‘ Blasphemy,’ of course, not that constructive and “ inferential imputation of the crime which might be “ fastened on every doctrine relative to the Divine “ Nature differing in any respect or degree from that “ of the Established Church, (an interpretation sub“ versive of the very liberty and relief intended to be “ granted,) but that which is its common, and, I “ imagine, also its legal import,—the use of language
“ and epithets in themselves reproachful, reviling
“ and abusive, levelled immediately at the majesty
“ and character of the Supreme Being. On this “ footing, I most readily agreed to place the ques“ tion ;—persuaded that, however plausible an argu“ ment may be raised for the abstract right of using,
“ in any controversy, such terms as disputants may “ think most applicable to the subject, yet that such “ latitude is not here necessary, or even advantageous “ to the legitimate object of all controversy, the suc“ cessful investigation of truth : and therefore that “ respect to the national worship, tenderness to the “ opinions, or even prejudices of serious and sincere “ religionists, and, above all, the venerable nature of “ the subjects in question, completely justify, if “ they do not absolutely demand, the prohibition

“ of such language, as useless, indecent, and mis“ chievous.

“ I next informed his Majesty’s Ministers of my “ design, and the progress I had made; and learned “ from them, with great satisfaction, that they were “ equally inclined to acquiesce in the measure: and “ only desired that, in the progress of the Bill, I “ would not, by unnecessary discussion, incur the “ risk of exciting a spirit of alarm and opposition
“ which then appeared to lie dormant, but pursue “ my object as quietly as circumstances should per“ mit. In this reasonable proposition I also cheer“ fully acquiesced; and soon after, had an interview “ with the Archbishop and the Chancellor of the “ Exchequer, when the Bill was moulded into that “ shape in which it passed, unopposed, through the “ House of Commons.

“ In the Lords however an objection was taken by “ the Ch. and the Lord C. J. not to the principle,
“ but merely to the mode—the two Noble Lords dis“ approving the sweeping repeal of all the statutes
“ by which the penalties, &c. were imposed, and pre“ ferring that they should be described and repealed, “ nominatim; dwelling so much on this, as to insist “ on the rejection of the Bill as it then stood; by “ which, as the session was drawing to a close, I was “ somewhat embarrassed:—but they both had the “ goodness to assure me that they would consent to “ pass, with all expedition, a new Bill drawn on the “ plan they suggested. The first was accordingly “ negatived, and the new one, so drawn and settled, “ immediately introduced into the Commons, carried “ through every stage, and passed without delay:—

“ from whence it went up to the Lords, where, to “ my infinite content, it was equally successful.

“ One only material difference in the operation of “ the two Bills has since appeared:—that, whereas
“ the former, from the generality of its terms, ex“ tended to Ireland,—the latter does not; from the “ inadvertent omission to repeal specifically the Irish “ penal statute.

“ At the moment of the rejection of the first Bill in “ the House of Lords, the Archbishop took the occa“ sion to say to me, that, having originally given his “ assent to the measure, he certainly should not “ think of retracting it, merely because it was “ thought expedient to effect the purpose by means “ somewhat different from those which he himself
“ had agreed to; and that I might rely on his sup“ port of the new Bill—a pledge which, it is needless “ to say, was strictly observed.

“ You have now, Sir, as accurate an account as “ my memory will furnish, of a transaction on which “ I have ever reflected with unmixed satisfaction; “ regarding it as affording an irrefragable proof of the “ increasing justness and liberality of the sentiments
“ of the age, on principles of the highest importance,
“ and strong ground of hope, that the last lingering “ remains of intolerance will, ere long, be swept “ clean away. Happy, too, in having been the active

“ and fortunate, though humble instrument, through “ whose agency the occasion was presented of effec“ tuating so considerable an advantage.

“ As for the Reverend Metropolitan, whose part
 “ in this business must have been so influential, I “ shall not easily be convinced that, in other affairs,
 “ he can have been induced to adopt courses incon“ sistent with the principles which appeared to me to “ guide his conduct in this. But even could I sup“ pose such a conviction effected, I should think it “ certainly not the less incumbent on me fully to “ represent, in its just colours, that portion of his Ec“ clesiastical Administration which, having had the op“ portunity of closely observing it, I thought strongly “ marked with every quality by which the true in“ terests, not merely of the National Establishment,
 “ but of Christianity itself, can best be promoted.

“ I am, my dear Sir,

“ Very faithfully your's,

“ WILLIAM SMITH.”

“ P.S. I must also record on this subject that for “ which I have sufficient authority to induce my own “ entire belief; that, at a Meeting of the Right Re“ verend Bench, convened to determine on the “ conduct proper to be pursued with respect to the “ Bill, the Bishop of Norwich alone professed his “ approbation of it, and his determination to support
 “ it: but this I should never have learned or suspected “ from any the slightest change in the conduct or “ language of the Archbishop of Canterbury.”

LETTER II.

MR. BENTHAM to MR. SMITH.

Queen Square Place, Westminster, Feb. 1818.

“ DEAR SIR,

“ I HAVE to acknowledge the favour of your very “ obliging Letter. So far as concerns the Archbishop,
“ it is truly gratifying to me to see the account I had “ received from unimmediate, so fully confirmed by “ such respectable, as well as immediate, evidence.
“ At the same time, in regard to the general result,
“ I wish it were in my power to indulge in any such “ comfortable view, as that which, it seems to me,
“ you have taken of it. Concurring with everything
“ you say with regard to the Archbishop,—still, in “ the state of things, as reported by you, I am “ unable to see any such security, as you (it seems “ to me) not only have seen, but continue to see
“ in it.

“ What you count upon (so it seems to me) is in “ the first place, absolute security as against statute “ law ; in the next place, like security as against “ common law.

“ Neither against the one nor against the other “ scourge, is it my good fortune to be able to see any “ such security for you : and the liberty I take of “ mentioning the matter here, is accompanied with

“ the less hesitation, because, though, perhaps, not “ exactly relevant to the purpose of my first Letter “ to you, it is completely so to the purpose of the “ present work.

“ 1. First, as to statute law. As to bills, upon a “ careful search among the House of Commons’ “ papers, I find two, and no more than two, both of “ the year 1813: one, the original bill, date, June “ 15; the other, the amended bill, date June 23.
“ One you speak of, of course the latter, as re“ jected;—of course in the Lords: rejected, in the “ manner you describe. This rejection—what then “ is the peccant matter by which it was produced?
“ A comparison of the amended bill with the act will “ shew it. In the bill it is the clause, by which, to “ the repeal of the particular act, which pro tanto, is
“ by that clause accordingly repealed, is added a “ sweeping clause, repealing ‘so much of the said “ act of the ninth and tenth of King William, and of “ all or any other act or acts of the English, Scotch,
“ British, Irish, or United Parliaments, as imposes “ penalties on those who,’ &c.—(except, &c.) Having “ this sweeping clause in it, the bill was rejected,
“ The act which afterwards passed, and which we “ have, has no such sweeping clause.

“ Nor yet was the clause got rid of in the ordinary “ way, by amendment; instead of this, the whole “ bill, as it stood, was thrown out: an intimation “ having, however, been previously given—and that,
“ as it should seem a secret one—that, provided this “ obnoxious clause were omitted, another bill might “ be less unfortunate.

“ Now, Sir, on the subject of this manœuvre, I “ will venture to submit to you an observation or “ two.

“ In the first place, that sweeping and completely “ tranquillizing clause, for what cause was it not “ permitted to stand? For this cause, or for none :
“ because in the pre-eminently learned eyes in ques“ tion, even as against statute law, it would have “ rendered if not security too secure, at any rate “ tranquillity too tranquil.

“ To leave you still in a state of insecurity, anxiety,
“ and dependance—either this was the object of the “ veto, or it had none. In the statute book is there “ any other statute, by which punishment, in any “ shape, is attached to the sort of act in question?
“ If, yes, here then the persecuting intention stands “ confessed. Is there no such statute? Then is the “ omission useless and indefensible.

“ So much for the design. Now as to the mode.

“ This clause being then, by the persons in ques“ tion, let us suppose, regarded,—at any rate pro“ fessed to be regarded, as improper, or at least as “ needless,—then why not get rid of it in the ordi“ nary way? For what cause decline getting rid of “ it by an amendment? Sir, I will assign a cause :
“ let any other supposable cause be found, I will “ acknowledge my mistake. Sir, it was the “ fear—the well-grounded fear—of that senti“ ment, which would be the necessary result of their “ being seen to do that, which in fact, they were “ doing.

“ To neither of the pre-eminently learned persons
“ in question, would it have been agreeable to see “ his name upon the journals, in quality of mover of “ such an amendment: an amendment by which the “ mind of the mover would thus far have stood de“ picted upon record, in its real colours. No: they “ insisted on your doing against yourselves, what “ they were ashamed to do: they insisted on your “ employing your own hands in cutting the ground
“ from under your own feet.

“ Speaking of the persons in question, on occasion
“ of the penalties in question,—after saying, ‘disap“ proving the sweeping repeal of all the statutes, by “ which the penalties, &c.’ were imposed, preferring
“ (you add) that they should be described and re“ pealed nominatim.

“ Pardon me, if in this word preferring, I see the “ source of a misconception, which it seems to me “ necessary to obviate. An intimation, which by “ implication, this word presents to me, as likely to “ convey, is—that, between the courses thus put in “ opposition to one another, there existed—at any “ rate in the learned eyes in question—some natural “ incompatibility: that of these same two courses
“ one, and that alone, was regarded as legally “ proper, the other legally improper: and that the “ two being, as above, naturally incompatible, that “ which was regarded as the proper one—that, and “ that alone—was accordingly consented to, the “ other rejected.

“ Such being the conception presented, how stands
“ the fact? Incompatibility, manifestly there was “ none. In the preference, carried as it was into “ effect, two things were contained: rejection put “ upon one mode, admission given to the other. What “ was the mode rejected? the only one that could “ be completely effectual to the professed purpose.
“ What was the mode—the only mode—which the “ goodness you speak of, would admit? It was a “ mode, in the first place, insufficient to its declared “ purpose; in the next place, pregnant with colla“ teral inconveniences.

“ First then the mode thus rejected would, I say,
“ have been completely effectual to the professed “ purpose. What was that mode? It was what “ you so properly denominate the sweeping mode:
“ the repeal of all the obnoxious statutes by one “ sweeping clause.

“ This mode (so you say, and truly) was rejected.
“ The proof is, that a clause to this effect may be “ seen in the amended bill, (the bill of 25th June, “ 1813) as it came from the Commons, and that no “ such clause is to be seen in the act, (53d George “ III, c. 160.)—‘So much’ (says this same clause)
“ ‘So much of the said act of the 9th and 10th of “ King William, and of all or any other act or acts of “ the English, Scotch, British, Irish, or United Par“ liaments, as imposes penalties, &c. are hereby “ repealed.’

“ This mode was, I say, the only mode which to “ that same purpose could be completely effectual.
“ For, the repeal of anything less than the whole “ number of the penal provisions, bearing upon the “ point in question, how could it be effectual? Re“ pealing them all, one by one, (this I call the parti- “ cularising mode) would, indeed, supposing it known “ by everybody that they were all repealed, have “ been equally effectual. But to whom could this “ be known? To nobody. Not even to the pre-“ eminently learned persons, who refused to admit
“ of any other mode.

“ How should it be known? On the contrary, is “ it not known, that in the existing legislative chaos, “ we possess a sort of terra incognita, in which, as “ within the Arctic and Antarctic circles, discoveries
“ may from time to time be made? Have we not “ a very notorious evidence of this, in the statute, “ 13th Charles II, cap. 5, by the discovery of which
“ the number of signatures to a petition for reform
“ has so recently—(and—I beg Sir Samuel Romilly’s “ pardon,—see Commons’ debate, Morning Chronicle, “ 4th March 1818,—for saying so prudentially)—been “ reduced to twenty?

“ In the particular case in question, one reason “ why, even to these pre-eminently learned persons “ themselves, the sufficiency of the only mode they “ would admit of, could not be known, is—that it “ had no existence. For proof, I give you back the “ case of Ireland, the case to which your own letter “ alludes.

“ While the ink is yet wet, comes from the book“ seller my copy of the statutes of last session, and “ in it the statute of the 7th July 1817, 57th George “ III, cap. 70, which then, for the first time, extends “ to that island the relief which, such as it is, had “ four years before been vouchsafed to ours.

“ Now, as to the collateral inconveniences. One of “ these likewise, this letter of yours, Sir, supplies “ me with: delay and vexation are their names.
“ When the only completely effectual mode was re“ jected, you were (you say) ‘somewhat embarrassed.’
“ Well might you so be: and this, notwithstanding “ the ‘goodness,’ with which they ‘assured you “ (these pre-eminently learned persons) that they “ could consent to pass with all expedition a new “ bill drawn on the plan they suggested:’ viz. that “ plan, the insufficiency of which has just been de“ monstrated. Insufficient as it was,—by the passing “ of this bill, this embarrassment of yours, if not “ removed, was, at any rate, to a certain degree “ relieved. So far as it regarded yourself, and your “ brethren in this island, it continued not more than “ about a couple of months: for, the 21st of July is “ the date of the act, by which so much as could be “ removed by it was removed. But your brethren
“ in Ireland, what to them has been the effect of all “ this learned goodness? In hot water were they “ kept by it full four years. In hot water? Yes, Sir,
“ and, moreover, in jeopardy. For, in the mean time,
“ who could say what might not happen? As Provi“ dence would have it, your sheet anchor, the arch“ bishop, continued serviceable. But all men are “ mortal, and the holiest men (ask Saint Peter else)

“ not unchangeable. What, if in the course of these “ four years, his Grace had died? Sir, your post“ script gives the answer. For successor he would “ have had one of those bishops, who are against the “ measure. Behold then the effect, and not impro“ bably the object—or what else was the object? of “ the learned goodness, before which you had to bow.

“ First collateral inconvenience. Delay and vex“ ation combined.

“ 2. Another collateral inconvenience. It is com“ posed of the expence, public and private together, “ which cannot but have been attendant on the “ interval of delay, and the two additional processes, “ which all this goodness and learning filled it with :
“ viz. the preparing and bringing in to the Commons
“ that fresh Bill, which became the Act; and more“ over the whole manufacture of the fresh Bill which “ was made necessary for Ireland.

“ In my account, this expence, Sir, is an inconve“ nience : how many hundred pounds it may have “ amounted to, I cannot pretend to say : a mere drop “ in the ocean ; in the ocean of industriously begot“ ten and (except in so far as, for example, the voice
“ of a petitioning people may be smothered by eco“ nomy,) anxiously nursed, unnecessary expence.
“ In my account I say it is an inconvenience. In the “ account of the pre-eminently learned persons in “ question, can it have been placed on that same “ side?—Alas, no : on no other than the opposite “ side. To all those who fatten upon fees—official “ men, judges, professional lawyers of all sorts—to “ all these belongs a common cause—an habitual,

“ and, from habit, almost an instinctive sympathy.
“ When I see either of the two pre-eminently learned “ persons ready and willing, to see exchanged for “ salary, all fees, from which, either in pocket or in “ patronage, he derives a profit,—then will I acknow“ ledge, that the burthen, with which in that shape, “ they, on this occasion, concurred, according to “ you, in forcing upon the public, as well as indivi“ duals, formed no part of the inducement to the “ conduct by which that burthen was imposed.

“ Second collateral inconvenience—result of the “ delay, expence.

“ Sir!! Sir! (I think I hear you cry) Sir, what is “ this about?—Bad motives?—are you not imputing “ bad motives?

“ Good Sir, no: not I, indeed; I impute no bad “ motives. Love of money, and money's worth—a branch “ of self-regarding interest—this, and this alone, is
“ the motive I impute. Sir, I love money myself:
“ and not the less for my having so little of it—Sir,
“ do you think I would impute to myself bad motives?

“ No, Sir; if you want to see a man who has no “ love for money, go to my Lord Chancellor, go to “ my Lord Chief Justice, they perhaps may be able “ to direct you to one.

“ A motive, the general predominance of which “ over every other, is necessary to the very existence
“ of the species, can this, with anything like pro“ priety, be termed a bad motive? Were it not for “ this predominance, think, Sir, what would become “ of the whole species in a month’s time. Bad motive?

“ No, Sir; there is no such thing as a bad motive.
“ This—so delusive in the current language—this “ may, perhaps, appear to you a mystery. But the “ present is not a time, or place, for clearing it up :
“ in a small tract of mine, intituled, Table of the “ Springs of Action, you may see it cleared up, when“ ever you please :—Dear Sir—why, if I were to “ impute bad motives to anybody—to anybody that “ ever lived—to Scroggs for example, or Jefferies—“ Sir, I might be put in jail for it, and perhaps in “ irons. No, Sir, nobody shall ever catch me impu“ ting to anybody a bad motive.
“ Sir, I will do no injustice. Insufficient as it “ is, I will not say that the only mode which all this “ learning would endure—the mode which they “ ‘dwelt on so much as to insist on the rejection’ of
“ the only sufficient one—I mean the particularising “ mode—was, in its nature, to every purpose useless.
“ One purpose there is, with reference to which it is “ in some degree useful,—useful as being to this “ same purpose more conducive than the sweeping “ mode :—I mean the clearing the text of the statute-“ book of the dead bodies of the statutes undertaken “ to be killed. But this which, besides being a minor
“ one, is completely foreign to the only purpose ever “ mentioned, was it ever in the view of those pre-“ eminently learned persons, or either of them?
“ Sure I cannot be, but my belief is in the negative.

“ One reason is—that, whereas, for want of all divi“ sions into numbered parts, it depends, in the in“ stance of each statute professed to be repealed, “ upon chance Editors,—in the first place, whether “ any such disburthenment shall be attempted,—in “ the next place, whether that which, if anything, is “ done to that end shall be correctly done, it follows
“ not that, in regard to the statutes in question, now “ that they are as you observe ‘ described and repealed “ nominatim,’ the text of the statute-book will ever “ be disburthened of them after all. Now, Sir, under “ these circumstances, on the occasion in question, “ on the part of the pre-eminently learned persons in “ question, did any such desire or view exist, as that “ of procuring to the public, in relation to so much
“ as this one short statute, this collateral and minor “ benefit? Of any such wish I must confess myself “ unable to descry any the least symptom. Why?
“ Because if there had been any such wish, nothing “ could have been easier than for one of them, with“ out giving any trouble to the other, at the expence “ of a few words interchanged with the Speaker of “ the House of Commons, to procure a regulation, by “ which, giving authority to the numbered divisions “ inserted by all editors, this principle of simplifica“ tion might, in the only authentic and sufficient “ manner possible, be applied to all statutes what“ soever, existing as well as future.

“ Another reason is—that, during the conjunct,
“ and alas! how tediously protracted reign of these “ two prodigiously learned persons,—in compensa“ tion for the multitude of good measures which they “ have either killed outright, or in the manner of “ this of yours, wounded,—my memory will not “ serve me for recollecting (much as the law needs “ amendment) so much as any one measure for the “ amendment of the law introduced or served by “ either of them—no, not one; unless that be reck“ oned an amendment, by which in the true Draco “ style, a bounty is given upon murder, by setting “ attempt and perpetration at the same price.

“ Described, you say, and repealed nominatim.
“ Forgive me another remark—it is not for want of “ respect where so much is due—it is not for the “ sake of cavil, it is for the sake of public instruction, “ that I make it. Described, yes; repealed nomi- “ natim, no. Repealing a statute, or portion of “ statute, nominatim, is repealing it by name. Sir,
“ no portion of a statute ever has a name. If it had “ but a number, a name it would thereby have, and “ that a sufficient one. In the legislation of every “ civilised country but this—Sir, I say it with full “ assurance—portions of statutes are authoritatively “ distinguished—names of this sort are employed. In “ this proud country alone, not. And why not? Sir,
“ I have given the reason so often, and with so little “ fruit, I am quite tired of giving it. Nothing in this “ way is ever done, but under the direction of those “ whose interest it is that it should be as badly done
“ as possible. Uncognoscibility being the end, in“ distinctness, voluminousness, confusion, uncer“ tainty, are so many means. Designate a clause

“ by a number, you designate it at the expence of a “ few figures; and, errors of the press excepted, “ without possibility of mistake. Designate it by “ ‘description,’ it is sure to be verbose: it is not sure
“ to be either clear or adequate; nor, be it ever so “ clear and adequate, to escape being miscon“ ceived.

“ And now, Sir, in so far as concerns statute-law,
“ you see, perhaps, a little more distinctly than “ before, the effect—and,—if it had any object other “ than that of displaying power, creating dependence, “ and exciting unmerited gratitude,—the object or “ objects of all this ‘goodness.’

“ So much for statute-law. Now, Sir, as to com- “ mon-law. If that tranquillity, in which you seem “ to have so comfortably wrapt yourself, had security
“ for its accompaniment, no one could be further “ than I should be from seeking to disturb it. Alas, “ would that were really the case! This comfort of “ yours, what is the basis on which it rests? On a “ definition of the word blasphemy. On a defini“ tion?—very good, if from competent authority,—
“ so good, that no other can compare with it. But,
“ this same definition by which you seem thus tran-“ quillized,—who have you to own it? One person
“ you are sure of, yourself: another person you
“ moreover regard yourself sure of, viz. the Arch“ bishop. I could give you another, if so insigni“ ficant an one could be of any use to you. But—“ make the most of it, of what is this the definition?
“ Of what the law is?—Alas! no: only of what the “ law, as we say, ought to be. But, Sir, what is it “ that this supposed security of yours depends upon?

“ On what the law ought to be? No, Sir: but on “ what it is: the law, meaning now the common law.
“ And what, Sir, is common law? Sir, I will tell you
“ what it is. It is on this, as on all other occasions, “ the expression of the will and pleasure of one or “ more of a set of men, whose interest is, on this “ ground, in a state of diametrical opposition to the “ universal interest; who, on every occasion, to that “ same will and pleasure,—without any other con“ troul than that nominal one which, not being real,
“ is so much worse than none,—give the effect of “ law: that effect which,—without the aid of those “ pre-eminently learned persons,—that body in “ which the plenitude of power is supposed to reside, “ never finds itself able to give.

“ On this very occasion, whose would the will and “ pleasure be? Whose but that of these same pre-“ eminently learned persons, whose wisdom, or “ whose sincerity, refused to suffer you to grasp so “ much as the shadow of a security, unless to the “ adequate relief you had prepared for yourselves,
“ you would yourselves be the instruments of sub“ stituting an inadequate one? Now, Sir, forgive
“ the liberty I take in asking you,—have you any “ assurance—any tolerably-grounded assurance—“ that this definition of yours—even suppose it not “ only approved, but signed by the Archbishop, “ would be adopted by common law?—would, in “ addition to law as it ought to be, be made law as it

“ is? Alas, Sir, proof of the contrary is staring you “ in the face. Sir, have you not heard of Mr Hone
“ and his blasphemy? Sir, have you not heard of “ Mr Wright of Liverpool, and his blasphemy? Mr “ Wright—a divine, whose blasphemy is, if I mistake “ not, pretty exactly of the same stamp with your “ own piety and that of Dr Belsham?

“ Know you not that by the piety of common “ law, every scribbler,—with or without a name, “ with a true name; or with a false one,—whose “ scribble it has pleased, or shall please, King, Lords,
“ and Commons, to put into a book, called the Li- “ turgy, is to the purpose in question, put upon a “ level with God? his scribble with the work of “ God,—and, as in the course of this present work “ of mine you may see demonstrated, employed as an “ improved substitute to that same holy word?—
“ Know you not how, within these few months, being “ duly put in motion, by fees supplied by a pious “ Cabinet, the piety of common law did actually “ speak to this effect by the mouth of a pre-emi“ nently learned person, whose learning was so lately
“ and effectually covered with shame by the igno“ rance of Mr Hone?

“ Know you not that the piety of common law has “ a maxim of its own, by force and virtue of which,
“ under the name of blasphemers, or any other name,
“ it can at any time grind to powder all such chris“ tians as yourself, as well as all other persons, who “ have or profess to have a religion of their own in “ any shape? Know you not that, according to the “ tenor of this maxim, ‘ Christianity is part and “ parcel of the law of England?’ that anything and “ everything, which it shall please the piety of this “ or that bench to call christianity will thereby be “ so? that everything that it shall please that same “ piety to call an offence against the said christianity “ will thereby be so, and the offender liable to be “ visited, as the phrase is, with any or all such instru“ ments of destruction as the hand of precedent has “ now presented to the piety of that same pre-emi“ nently learned bench?

“ Know you not, Sir, that,—besides all purposes “ such as the one in question,—the piety and wisdom
“ of common law,—not to speak of other branches,—
“ has, in its penal branch, an assortment of phrases “ applicable to all imaginable purposes? phrases co“ vering, when taken together, the field of law in its “ whole extent? (Contra bonos mores—Conspiracy, “ Libel, &c.—I have somewhere got a list or the “ commencement of a list of them).—Know you not,
“ Sir, in a word, that wheresoever common law reigns,
“ security—whether it be for life, liberty, property,
“ or anything else—is an empty name? Shew me,
“ Sir, if you can find one, that proposition in Euclid “ which is more uncontrovertibly demonstrated than “ is this one, melancholy as it is, in my letter to the “ people of the American United States, published “ in my late work, intituled Papers on Codification, “ &c.—I wish it were in my power to give you any “ better authority: I mean in black and white.
“ But, now and then it may happen to you, in the “ House, to find yourself within a whisper of Sir “ Samuel Romilly. On any such opportunity, ask “ him whether, in the picture above drawn of the “ goddess of so many idolatries, there be any con“ siderable overcharge: and, if for answer you “ should receive nothing but a sigh or something “ equivalent, you will not be at much loss to know “ what to conclude.

“ I am, my dear Sir,

“ Yours very thankfully,

“ J. B.”

“ P. S. On the subject of blasphemy,—in the “ overgrown volume, to which in thus writing to “ you I am writing a last preface,—in this vo“ lume, pages from 225 to 230, you may see how “ perfect the agreement is between your notions
“ and mine. Judge from hence of the pride and “ pleasure which that part of your letter afforded “ to me.

“ You will not see this my second letter till after
“ it is made public. You shall not have been party
“ or privy to any of my enormities.”

THE following Table of Errata, the number of which cannot but be matter of regret, has been occasioned by a weakness in the author's eyes, coupled with his distance from the press: occasion has been taken to intersperse a few amendments.

PREFACE; INCLUDING PLAN OF THE WORK.

Page xxvi, l. 11, for injustice put injection.
xli, add reference to Appendix, pp. 169 to 172.
* * Note in p. lii, being the last of the Preface, of no more than those Nos. of the Appendix, is any mention made.

INTRODUCTION.

Page 3, l. 2, for would put could.
11, l. 12, dele the ?
11, l. 11, after would insert be.
16, l. 9, for ment put meat.
31, l. the last, add inverted commas."
32, l. 19, for these put those.
37, l. 16, for same put whole.
61, l. 14, after civilized insert a comma.
94, l. 13, for tract put track.
94, l. 19, for preservation put preservative.
99, l. 20, for announced put renounced.
107, l. 4, for on put in.
111, l. 19, after meetings insert 2.
119, l. 2, after Of insert not.
123, l. 6, for same put one.
128, l. 5, before come put Resolutions.
132, l. 10, for 59 put 89.
135, l. 10, dele one.
135, l. 11, after half insert a.
152, l. 22, for these put those.
154, l. 20, after not insert but.
162, l. 3, for tokens put indications.
167, l. 19, for principle put principles.
170, l. 15, for Proteus read Randolph.
201, l. 7, for places read place.
210, l. last, after in insert the.
515, l. 14, for all put at.
215, l. 29, after wanting put :
after and put ,
215, l. 30, after 1812 dele : and.
215, l. 31, dele for this purpose.
130, l. 21, for sure put since.

BODY OF THE WORK.

Page 2, l. 15, for name put reason.
8, l. last but one, for his put its.
15, l. 8, before to put compel him.
16, l. 3, from bottom, before if put 2.
22, l. 21, for Our put One.
25, l. 19, after saints? put to.
26, l. 19, for Howell put Howley.
26, l. 22, after St. dele W.
27, l. 11, dele do.
28, l. 3 from the bottom, dele on.
41, l. 17, for some put none.
56, l. 4, for least put last.
61, l. 4, after performed: a put corporeal.
70, l. 21, for source put sense.
81, l. 24, after spirit dele and.
87, l. last but one, dele for.
88, l. 19, after England put as.
89, l. 1, dele rather.
92, l. 29, for to put against.
92, l. 30, for son put sons.
92, l. 30, after charge put be made.
95, l. 29, after this, for as put or.
98, l. 3, before the put in.
98, l. 5, for mere put not.
98, l. 10, dele is.
107, l. 4, for so far as concerns put bereft.
107, l. 19, after Catechism dele the full point.
108, l. 12, for "the follower of put the storehouse of."
108, l. 18, for those put these.
115, l. 17, for this put the.
120, l. 23, for inobnoxious put unobnoxious.
126, l. 8, dele then.
132, l. 6, before Of put 2.
132, l. 10, dele made.
132, l. 13, after rulers insert --are.
132, l. 20, after continue insert them.
132, l. 3, from the bottom, for these put those.
134, l. 25, for composition put printed letter.

Page 136, l. 14, after inflicted, begin a fresh paragraph, and before that insert But.

138, l. 2 from the bottom, after but dele as.

140, l. 15, after Edifices? dele It is, and after as insert she, now—and after it insert a comma.

147, l. 16, after which insert these, and in line 17, dele own.

153, l. 13, dele it.

153, l. 16, after pen,—insert it.

157, l. 27, after abstained insert as he did.

161, l. 26, after riches dele opulence.

166, l. 2, for on put no.

171, l. 18, dele alone.

171, l. 30, after by insert these.

174, l. 10, for which put whose.

196, l. 6, for these put those.

213, l. 11, for that put this.

230 in the number of the page, for 30 put 230.

241, l. 3, for prudence put providence.

241, l. 29, for the semicolon put a comma.

247, l. 7, for notion put notice.

248, l. 13, for of put if.

249, l. 6, for Procetors put Proceutors.

250, l. 3 from bottom for hath put have.

250, l. 3 from bottom for dcisisted put desisted.

256, l. 20, for its put their.

259, l. 2, for eye put eyes.

260, l. 23, dele money.

Page 267, l. 16, for bear put bears.

270, l. 14, for leave put have.

280, l. 7, for high-rated put high-seated.

280, l. 27, after reward put a full stop.

280, l. last, and p. 281, l. 1, for destructive put obstructive.

282, l. 3, before not insert but.

287, l. 5, after rendered insert ; and.

296, l. 11, after hand insert to hand.

296, l. 16, for stout put strict.

302, l. 19, for hand put head.

303, l. 6, for body put duty.

303, l. 26, dele be.

307, l. 17, for 10,000*l.* put 1,000*l.*

310, l. 31, for large put largest.

339, l. 19, for became put because.

363, l. 22, dele to.

385, l. 4, for twenty-five put twenty-six.

381, l. 22, for profits out of put profits, from.

392, l. 2 from the bottom, for or that put in that.

409, l. 3 from bottom, for came put come,

410, l. 4, for cause" in put cause; in 416, l. 25, dele himself.

423, l. 6, after would insert not.

433, l. 8, before taxes insert the.

433, l. 2, after general insert : imposed.

433, l. 27, after year, dele the line — and insert it after time.

438, l. 15, after pretended benefit insert to.

iv

P R E F A C E.

ON the formulary, which forms the subject of the ensuing tract, the judgment here pronounced, it will immediately be seen, is far indeed from favourable.

Of the whole system, doctrine and discipline together, of which that formulary forms a part, the opinion entertained, it may still earlier be seen, is correspondently unfavourable.

Question. An Oxford Graduate!—This from an Oxford Graduate? If such indeed he be, and not an impostor, falsely assuming so respectable a character,—by what disastrous impulse can the pupil of so excellent and so holy a school of instruction, have been precipitated into apostacy?

Answer. Be the author of the book in himself honest or dishonest,—be the inducements by which he was engaged in it praise-worthy or blame-worthy,—the formulary, which is the subject of it, is in either case exactly what it is, neither better nor worse: the observations, to which in the present instance it has given rise, neither worse nor better grounded.

So manifestly as well as correctly true is the matter of these answers, that the person, who will be either able or disposed to controvert them in any point, seems not very likely to be found.

Yet, by any answers of this sort,—pertinent as they are, though not less trivial than pertinent,—scarce in any instance, perhaps, will the sort of curiosity, of which the above questions are the expression, be likely to be extinguished, or so much as damped.

That the causes in question are of a complexion discreditable to the author, and to the sort of persuasion in favour of which the work tends to operate, is in a manner included in any such questions as the above: in the character or situation of the author, what (say they) is there, that affords a hope of its being found capable of serving, in the place of argument, to throw discredit on the work? for it is only by a view of that sort,—and therefore only from that quarter of the religion-professing world,—that any considerable curiosity seems, in the present instance, very likely to be excited. In the eyes of any person, should the observations of which the work is composed wear the air of truth, by the truth will his attention not only be preferably engaged, but probably nearly if not altogether engrossed.

When, on an occasion of this sort, a question of this sort is thrown out, the author is commonly among the very last persons to whom it is addressed. Ground for condemnation is what is wanted: and, from the party on whom it is to be passed, no such ground, in the way of voluntary contribution, can naturally be expected.

Under these circumstances, curiosity—the sort of curiosity here in question—must content itself, as well as it can, with the not only scanty but partial supply, which, under such circumstances, human nature can find motives for affording.

By any notoriety given to the individual, no effect, in any point of view beneficial, could be produced.

This being the case, to what use (it may be asked) profess to offer to the appetite of curiosity any the smallest part of the aliment of which it is in quest?

An Apostate is every thing that is bad. By your own confession, you are no better than an apostate. You are an enemy—an enemy to the Church, under which you were bred and fostered—of that established Church, of which the “excellence” has so truly been declared, and so nobly proclaimed, by the Right Reverend persons, by whom in one sense it is governed, and of whom in another sense it is composed. Being an enemy to this holy Church, nothing that you say of any thing—nothing that you say of any body—but most of all, and in particular, nothing that you say of yourself, can be entitled to any sort of credence, unless it be to that sort, which, in so far as it makes against himself, may be given to the assertion of any other malefactor, whom, through the veil of mendacious discourse, which he spreads over his deportment, the condemnatory truth may here and there be descried.

The answer is—though, if his wishes and endeavours prevail, his name will not transpire during his life-time, yet at his death his motives for concealment will be at an end. He will then be known: and in proportion as he is known, he will be known for one, to whom that part of probity which concerns veracity, never could have been an object of indifference.

Unfortunately, in a case of this sort, even during the author's life-time, wishes of this sort, how anxious soever, are not unfrequently frustrated.

This, then, is a mischance, which, from the nature of what is disclosed, it will plainly be seen he could not but have in view: and against which he accordingly could not fail of being provided.

But why then say any thing at all of yourself? Why—to what good end—give any the most imperfect outline, of that personal individuality, which, by your own acknowledgement, is nothing to the purpose?

The answer is—no such apparently irrelevant matter would have found admittance,—no such personal hazard been encountered,—but for the instruction—the useful instruction—which, in this shape, it seemed, might perhaps be afforded: and for the sake of that object, he must, under these circumstances, as to what concerns credence, content himself with trusting to that superiority, which, in its contest for credence, truth possesses over falsehood,—and to that complexion of sincerity, which, upon a view taken of the whole work, the wishes and desires that gave birth to it, will, it is hoped, be found to have given, to the language in which it is expressed.

Be the opinions and assertions what they may, the cause of their being published is one thing:—the cause of their having been framed and entertained, another,—and in respect of time, frequently a very different one.

As to the opinions and assertions here brought to view, the cause of their being thus made public,—the principal at least, if not the only cause, or at any rate, the occasion, is—the observation made of that system of exclusion, of which the formulary in question has been and continues to be the instrument: the exclusion, by which the benefit of the capital and new-invented instrument of virtue and happiness is denied to all those children whose parents choose not to see it perverted, as it seems to them, to the production of the opposite ill effects. But of this, more in its more appropriate place.

In the formation of these opinions and these affections, no prepossessions adverse to the system thus censured can have had any the smallest share. In the instance here in question, all prepossessions were, in an eminent degree, favourable to it.—But it is time to substitute the first person to the third.

Of my four great-grandfathers, two were Clergymen of the Established Church: both beneficed: both of them men of more than ordinary estimation in their calling: men whose love and reverence for that establishment, to the reputation of which their own deportment gave increase, stood abundantly expressed in the deportment and language of their respective daughters. In the lap of one of these daughters, I learnt for my first lesson, the matter, in so far as it was learnable—of this formulary. Of their devotions,—and those, not weekly only but daily—and in every part accordant to the rites of the established Church,—was I, at all times when the suspension of school-instruction renewed the domestic intercourse, in the instance of both of them, an affectionate, reverential, and continual witness: and by these passionately beloved, eminently virtuous, as well as pious authors of my being, were the same affections and opinions transmitted to both my immediate parents,—to the son of the one, and the daughter of the other.

At my birth, and till he quitted the neighbourhood, which was not till I had been some years at the university, my father belonged to a club, in which he was the only member that was not a clergyman—a clergyman of the Church of England.

Walking one day with him in London, upon our passing near a building, which had something public in its appearance, he motioned to go in. To a question of mine, what it was, the answer was—a Dissenting Meeting House.—"Sir," said I, "would it be altogether right for us to enter into such a place?"—His answer was a smile:—but the departure was immediate.

A recollection,—but though considerably less remote, much less distinct,—is that of the period at which, on the occasion of a ceremony called a Confirmation, my head received the sanctifying touch of a Right Reverend hand. On the occasion, and for the purpose of its receiving this mysterious touch, the supposition is, that the contents of the Catechism have all of them received a permanent, and, by divine grace, an everlasting habitation in every head thus sanctified. For my own part, I remembered as well as I could—I understood as much as I could—I believed as hard as I could—and if any thing was wanting to belief, it was made up by trembling.

In the Church itself—in its discipline and its doctrine—and, in particular, in a particular exercise, which, in the last stage and highest seat of my education, I saw given to that discipline,—in those things which, in relation to those objects, my own individual observation, not only uninfluenced, but unaccompanied by the application of any exterior influence, presented to my reflection,—did the unfavourable impressions,—the unfavourable opinions, and thence, and thence only, the unfavourable affections, in which this work originated, take their rise.

No: incredible as it may appear—incredible as it may so naturally be pronounced, by those whose orthodoxy is made sure, by the hope of preferment, combined with the fear of ruin,—to no motive, to which any such epithet as sinister is wont to be affixed,—no, not to prospect of profit in any shape—not to resentment, envy, or any affection of the dissocial stamp, can either the affections or the opinions, have, in the smallest degree, been indebted for their existence.

In the seat of instruction, in which these opinions and these affections (adverse as they unwillingly were and are) were formed, no cause of personal enmity, or so much as ill humour,—no disappointment—unless it were the finding bad instruction where I had expected good, and next to no instruction where I had expected much,—did I ever experience. Of no one member of the governing body did I ever so much as imagine myself to have, on any personal account, any reason to complain. On the contrary, from that quarter more offers did it happen to me to receive, and those of a very friendly and substantial nature, than I thought it advisable to accept. Even to this hour I continue, and without any intervening interval of an opposite description, on terms of friendship with some—on terms other than those of friendship, with none.

The first cause was this. Of the University of Oxford I had not been long a member, when, by a decree of the Vice-Chancellor in his court, five students were, under the name of Methodists, expelled from it. Heresy and frequentation of conventicles were the only offences charged upon them. Taking the word conventicle for the place of meeting—these conventicles were so many private rooms, the small apartments of the several poor students, for poor they were. The congregation consisted of these same poor and too pious students, with the occasional addition of one and the same ancient female. The offence consisted in neither more nor less than the reading and talking over the Bible. The heresy consisted in this—viz. that, upon being, by persons sent to examine them, questioned on the subject of the thirty-nine Church of England Articles, the sense which they put upon these articles were found to be in some instances different from the sense put upon those same articles by those their interrogators.

The mode of inquiry employed was thus the very mode which, in foreign parts, under the Catholic so—called Inquisition, was employed for clearing the country of persons guilty of thinking differently from what was professed to be thought by the Church of Rome: the very mode which, here in England, by Elizabeth and James, was under the Church of England not—so—called Inquisition, employed for clearing the country of persons guilty of thinking differently from what was professed to be thought by the Church of England.* The judges made the crime; those same judges punished it. Bishop Taylor, had it happened to him, being then in being, to have exercised, in company with these poor students, that liberty, in defence of which he wrote—† Bishop Taylor, would, if like them he had been undignified and unprotected, have shared their fate.

This cause, what was it?—Exactly that and no other, the multiplication of which is the sole and professed object of all our Bible Societies. No, not any the slightest difference: unless while the study of that source of salvation is, when pursued by one's self a merit, the study of it, with the assistance, or in the company of a friend or two, is a crime: in which case it might not be amiss, that by due warning given, all persons should, as effectually as possible, be preserved from the commission of this crime; and, in particular that to that end, the stereotype edition should be corrected, by the erasure of that text, in which Jesus is stated as promising to be in the midst of any two or three persons gathered together in his name.*

* See Neale's History of the Puritans.

† "On the Liberty of Prophesying."

At this time, most strictly and literally true as it is, this statement will, upon the face of it, be apt to appear incredible.—But these young men, (it was asked), were they not really Methodists?—To this question no answer could, with truth, be given otherwise than in the affirmative. For what was then, what is even now, a Methodist? What but a zealous and consistent Church of Englandist? Even now, let any one be generally recognized as being zealous as well as assiduous in the practice of the rites of the Church of England, holding up to view, at the same time, on all occasions, in the language of the Bible, the ideas of salvation and damnation, will he not be as generally styled a Methodist? Any known peculiarity of doctrine—any thing else whatever—is it necessary to his being considered as justly designated by that name?

* Matt. xviii. 20. For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them.

And the place of meeting, was it not a Conventicle? Yes: for a Conventicle is any place, in which persons in any number are gathered together. Nay, and among the University statutes—those statutes, of which these youths had been made to swear to the observance, and which by no man who ever was or is made to swear to them, were or are ever observed,* is there not one by which all illicit Conventicles are prohibited in express terms? and were not these their Conventicles illicit? Yes: for in them used to be done, that which, had he known of it, the Vice-Chancellor would rather should not have been done, viz. the reading of, and conversing on the subject of the Bible.

* See Knox's Essays; viz. in the 17th of those editions, in all which, for these thirty or forty years, a practice, which in these their own statutes is styled perjury, has been charged upon these rulers, and the truth of the charge acknowledged by their silence.

Be this as it may, by the sentence, by which those readers of the Bible were thus expelled from the University, that affection which at its entrance had glowed with so sincere a fervor,—my reverence for the Church of England—her doctrine, her discipline, her Universities, her ordinances,—was expelled from my youthful breast. I read the controversy: I studied it: and, with whatsoever reluctance, I could not but acknowledge the case to stand exactly as above.

Not long after—(for at my entrance, that immaturity of age, which had excused me from the obligation of signature, had excused me from the necessity of perjury)—not long after came the time for the attaching my signature to the thirty-nine Articles. Understanding that of such signature the effect and sole object was—the declaring, after reflection, with solemnity and upon record, that the propositions therein contained were, in my opinion, every one of them true, what seemed to me a matter of duty was—to examine them in that view, in order to see whether that were really the case. The examination was unfortunate. In some of them no meaning at all could I find: in others, no meaning but one which, in my eyes, was but too plainly irreconcilable either to reason or to Scripture. Communicating my distress to some of my fellow collegiates, I found them sharers in it. Upon inquiry it was found, that among the Fellows of the College there was one, to whose office it belonged, among other things, to remove all such scruples. We repaired to him with fear and trembling. His answer was cold: and the substance of it was—that it was not for uninformed youths such as we, to presume to set up our private judgments against a public one, formed by some of the holiest, as well as best and wisest men that ever lived.

When, out of the multitude of his attendants, Jesus chose twelve for his Apostles, by the men in office he was declared to be possessed by a Devil: by his own friends, at the same time, he was set down for mad.* The

* Mark iii. 14 to 22. And he ordained twelve (14.) and they went into a house (19.) And the multitude cometh together again, so that they could not eat bread. And when his friends heard of it, they went out to lay hold on him: for they said, he is beside himself. And the Scribes which came down from Jerusalem said, he hath Beelzebub.... (20, 21, 22.)

like fate, were my conscience to have shewed itself more scrupulous than that of the official casuist, was before my eyes. Before the eyes of Jesus stood a comforter—his Father—an Almighty one. Before my weak eyes stood no comforter. In my father, in whom in other cases I might have looked for a comforter, I saw nothing but a tormenter: by my ill-timed scruples, and the consequent public disgrace that would have been the consequence, his fondest hopes would have been blasted, the expenses he had bestowed on my education bestowed in vain. To him, I durst not so much as confess those scruples. I signed:—but, by the view I found myself forced to take of the whole business, such an impression was made, as will never depart from me but with life.

Mendacity and insincerity—in these I found, and it will be seen how far I experienced,—the effects—the sure and only sure effects—of an English University education: of a Church of England education of the first quality: these, sooner or later, I could not but see in the number, not only of its effects, but of its objects: of mendacity, a forced act or two:

and the object of it the securing of an habit of insincerity throughout life.

Another thing, which I moreover beheld most certainly among the effects, and but too probably among the objects, of Church of England doctrine, enforced by Church of England discipline, was,—that “humble docility” as towards its rulers and their subordinates—that “prostration of the understanding and will,” which, in so many words, with an intrepidity that cannot sufficiently be admired, the Bishop of London, on a late Charge, some passages of which will here be more particularly brought to view, has published as the avowed object of their endeavours: their National Society's Schools, and this their Catechism, being employed as instruments to this purpose.

The more closely I looked into the controversial doctrine thus forced into my hands, the more fully I saw reason to be substantially confirmed, in that general conception of them, which had from the first presented itself to me:—some of them not true—others, whether true or false, not susceptible of application to any particularly useful purpose:

many of them to much bad purpose: those, which were at the same time true and useful, so plainly true and so plainly useful, that no fear could be entertained of their commanding instantaneous assent, but for that suspicion, which is the natural concomitant of bribery and intimidation—of reward—of punishment—or of a compound of both—when seen to be employed to operate upon conscience.

In mendacity and habitual insincerity is there any thing of vice? He who has entered into that fold cannot have entered into it without having sold himself to the practice and service of vice. This done, to drag down into the same abyss as many others as possible, is a policy, the urgency of which cannot reasonably be expected ever to be resisted. In any one who follows the same course, instead of that accuser or condemning judge which he would have beheld otherwise, each man beholds an accomplice: an accomplice, the surest and most zealous of all advocates and defenders.

Trained up in insincerity—attached to it by principle—by practice—and above all, were it only because before all, by interest—that sinister interest, to which the vicious principle owed its birth,—the more acute his sense is of the absurdity, and groundlessness, and mischievousness, of the doctrines to which his outward assent has been compelled, the more determinately—taking the weakness of St. Peter for the model of his strength,—yes—the more determinately, will he insist on the reasonableness of them—on their necessity to salvation—and on the impossibility, that either of those qualities can really experience a denial, from any cause, but either a degree of profligacy deserving of punishment under the name of punishment,—or insanity, calling for the like punishment under the name of necessary care.*

* In regard to these Articles and these Subscriptions, a few words, having for their object the mitigation of the evil, may perhaps be not altogether without their use. In and by the act of subscription, what is the fact asserted? It is—for what else can it be?—It is—that at the moment at which the last stroke of the pen is given to the signature, the persuasion, of the person whose signature is attached to it, is—that the propositions, to which it is thus attached are, all of them, true:—At that same moment?—Yes?—At any subsequent one? No:—for to no subsequent one is it possible that the assertion thus expressed can have any application. The very next moment,—or if this be as yet too near for sincerity, the next

Be this as it may, as in the exclusion put upon all children whose parents will not moment after that which closed the consultation with the pillow—that very moment, without mendacity, or any the least approach to it, supposing any one or every one of these articles to have become in his eyes a subject of disbelief, he is no less free to declare it—such his disbelief—than if he had never set his hand to any thing. That because at one moment he was a liar, a man should continue to be a liar—that he should so much as continue to be a dissembler—all his life—a doctrine to any such effect is surely as far from belonging to the case, as it is from being true: howsoever it may be of the number of those notions which, to preserve the Church from its dangers, have been invented and propagated by its defenders, and slipt into the ceremony, in such a manner as to make people look upon them as necessarily contained in it. That because, by whatsoever means thou hast been led to defile thyself with this lie, thinkest thou, Young Man, that thou art bound in conscience to persevere in it?—An assertion is one thing: a promise is another. An assertion is confined to what is past or present: a promise, to what is future.—But, in addition to the lie in this manner once told, suppose even a promise given—an express promise—to persevere in it;—a promise to any such effect, would it be binding?—Yes; if because, with a pistol to your throat, you had sworn to murder your father, you would be bound in conscience to improve upon Jephtha, and perform your vow.—Yes: if, because if in one unguarded moment she had yielded to the solicitation of unhallowed appetite, a woman would be bound in conscience to engage in a habit of prostitution, and persevere in it during life.

Accordingly, in my own instance, the sin of my boyhood—force lies into their mouths, (for though the things themselves were ever so true, the assertion made by the child, that he understands them, and believes them so, would not the less be a lie),—as, in the observation made of this exclusionary system, the publicity given to the opinions and assertions manifested in the ensuing tract, has found its proximate cause,—so, in the witnessed expulsion of the Methodists, and the experience had of the forced injustice of the matter of the thirty-nine Articles, did this same publicity, as well as those opinions and affections themselves, find its remoter and original cause.

For the momentary mendacity, into which puerile weakness had been betrayed and which every hour that it forces itself upon recollection, brings shame with it, it is true, but a shame which is almost lost in the accompanying indignation kindled by the thought of the so much more heinous sin—the sin of my corrupters—the hoary authors of that venial one,—this transgression, does it consist in the declaration I am thus making, that in more parts of it than one the matter of this formulary is the subject of my disbelief, and tainted as it is with that sin, the whole together the object of my abhorrence?—A confession of this sort a sin?—so far from being a sin, it is an expiation; an atonement for that early sin,—and the only atonement, which, in a case like this, it can be in a man's power to make.

forced, abjuration was, as it seemed, the only reparation—nor that an useless one—that could be made. By a consequent, and persevering, and unbroken habit of insincerity, continued during life,—the vice of the moment might have remained hidden from the eyes of men: but there would have been eyes—there are eyes—from which it could not have been concealed. When perseverance is wickedness, apostacy is a duty: and, unless followed by reparation, as far as reparation can be made, repentance cannot be stated as sincere.

Never was defection more completely unbought:—assuredly no worldly fruits have either been received or sought from it. Not so much as thanks can be received for it by the author, so long as his personality continues under the shade, in which it is his anxious care to bury it: far different from thanks would be the retribution, were the secret ever to transpire.

Even of the minute profit,—which, if any, is all which, in the present state of the press, can be expected to flow from such a publication,—no part will ever find its way into the hand by which this pen is guided. It will be divided by the bookseller between Schools and Missions.

The ensuing Introduction was not, any more than this Preface, written till after the completion of the short work, which it is employed to introduce. Under these circumstances, it was scarce possible, in writing the Introduction, altogether to avoid proceeding upon what is done in the work, as upon a ground already laid, and thereby exposing it, more or less, to the imputation of affirming that, which remained as yet unproved. Hence the danger, lest all these conceptions, which have in fact been the result of the coolest reflection, as well as the closest attention, should present themselves to the reader in the character of a tissue of loose declamation, the offspring of unreflecting passion:—present themselves thus at the first, and thence—such is the effects of first impressions—to the last.

To obviate this inconvenience, what follows is the reprint of a paragraph, which, being written after the comment on the Catechism, is there given in the character of a “Recapitulation:” viz. a Recapitulation of the charges brought against that formulary; ac-accompanied with references to the several observations or sets of observations, which at that stage of the inquiry had presented themselves as proofs, demonstrative of the justice of those several charges. In that place the character in which it presents itself is that of a list of charges already proved: in this place this same document may be considered as a list of charges undertaken to be proved; and of which, as the inquiry advances, it is expected by the writer, that in the eyes of a candid and discerning reader, they will severally, when the time comes, appear to have been proved.

RECAPITULATION.

On recurring to the Observations contained in the preceding pages, the following are the vices which will, it is believed, be found to have been proved upon this formulary, the peccant matter of which is, with a diligence unhappily so successful, injected, by the hand of power, into the breasts of the great majority of the instructed part of the population, at the very first dawn of the reasoning faculty—

I. BAD GRAMMAR. For a passage teaching bad grammar by example, see p. 55.

II. BAD LOGIC; viz.

1. By inculcation of matter plainly useless.

See p. 19 to 25.

2. By inculcation of manifest surplusage.

See p. 67. 8.

3. By inculcation of matter plainly unintelligible. See p. 6 to 13. 17 to 27. 31.

32.

4. By inculcation of propositions inconsistent with one another. See p. 11. 12.

13.

5. By inculcation of instruction, which is either erroneous, or at best useless. See

p. 41. 42. 43.

6. By exemplification and consequent inculcation of the art and habit of gratuitous or unfounded assertion, and groundless inference. See p. 28. 29. 30. 38. 39.

40.

7. By inculcation of matter, repugnant to those thirty-nine Articles, to which the whole body of the Clergy—Bishops and Archbishops included—together with all other ruling and otherwise influential persons,—who become partakers of that course of education which is in highest repute, will, upon entrance into that course, after being thus impregnated with the repugnant matter of this formulary, be forced to declare their assent and approbation on record. See p. 29.

30.

8. By inculcation of matter savouring of Popery. See p. 66 to 70.

III. Matter, the tendency of which is—to operate, in various other ways, to the depravation of the INTELLECTUAL part of man's frame, viz.

1. Matter, by which the principle of vicious obligation is inculcated: i. e. by which children are commanded to believe, that it is in the power of two or three self-appointed persons, by agreeing together, to oblige a young child, in conscience, to pursue to the end of his life, any course of conduct, which, at that time, it may please them to prescribe.

See p. 4. 5. 6.

2. Matter, by which the young child is himself forced to utter a rash promise, binding him, during life, to pursue the course of conduct therein and thereby prescribed. See p. 13. 14.

3. Matter, by which the child is initiated in the art and habit of lax interpretation: i. e. of declaring, in relation to the discourse in question, whatever it may be, his persuasion, that such or such was the meaning, intended by the author to be conveyed by it: viz. whatever meaning it may at any time happen to suit the personal purpose of the interpreter so to convey, how wide soever of the import really so intended to be conveyed. See p. 45. 47 to 78.

4. Matter, by which the intellectual part of the child's frame is destined to be debilitated and depraved by groundless and useless terrors. See p. 8 to 11. 53.

IV. Matter, the tendency of which is to operate, in various other ways, to the DEPRAVATION of the MORAL part of man's frame: viz.

1. Matter, in the texture of which Hypocrisy is plainly discernible. See p. 12. 13.
2. Matter, by which lying is inculcated as a duty :—a duty, which the child is forced to declare himself bound to persevere in the performance of. See p. 2. 3. 15. 18. 19. 31. 45. 46. 52.

3. Matter, by which Imposture may be seen to be promoted. See p. 47 to 78.

4. Matter, by which Forgery may be seen to be knowingly uttered. See p. 79. 80.

5. Matter, by which encouragement is given to sin and wickedness in every shape. See p. 75 to 78.

V. Matter, the tendency of which is to operate, in an immediate way, to the injury of the SENSITIVE part of man's frame.

Matter, by which groundless and useless terrors are infused, as above.

duty:—a duty, which the child is forced to declare himself bound to persevere in the performance of. See p. 2. 3. 15. 18.
 19. 31. 45. 46. 52.
 3. Matter, by which imposture may be seen to be promoted. See p. 47 to 58.
 4. Matter, by which forgery may be seen to be knowingly uttered. See p. 59. 80.
 5. Matter, by which encouragement is given to sin and wickedness in every shape. See p. 55 to 58.
 6. Matter, the tendency of which is to operate, in an immediate way, to the injury of the sensitive part of man's frame.
 Matter, by which groundless and useless efforts are infused, as above.

PLAN OF THE WORK.

II. PLAN of the Work.

To the end that, from the first, not only the design of this work, but the connexion between the several parts of it, may be plainly understood. a brief sketch, explanatory of the plan pursued in the course of it, may be not without its use.

I. As to the Introduction:—It is divided into five parts.

I. Part I. In this part will be maintained that, as applied to the purpose of instruction, the Church of England Catechism, in so far as it is substituted to the Bible, is a bad substitute: and that, in the National Society's Schools, in effect it actually is substituted to it:—substituted, not simply added. What will thereupon be shewn is—that Church of Englandism is a religion different from the religion of Jesus, and that in these Schools, principally by means of that Catechism, this spurious religion actually is substituted to the religion of Jesus. Short title—The Catechism—a bad substitute to the Bible—is substituted to it.

II. Part II. In this part will be shewn that, by express provision anxiously made, by the persons, whoever they are, by whom, in the name of the Society, self-styled The National Society,—as if in the whole nation there were no other Society,—the system of instruction carried on in these Schools is directed,—the children of all members of the nation who are not Church-of-Englandists stand excluded from the benefits of it. For the designation of the system by which the accomplishment of this object is aimed at, the appellation of The Exclusionary System, will, in the course of this work, be all along applied. Antecedently to the proofs afforded of the establishment of this exclusionary system, the true nature and tendency of this system will be developed and held up to view.

Short title—The Exclusionary System—its bad effects—its establishment.

III. Part III. If, in the majority of the English nation, the spirit of antichristian hostility thus manifested towards 1,500,000 of their fellow subjects, were universal, the spectacle so exhibited would be still more melancholy than it is believed to be. Evidence has been noted, by which the contrary hope has been produced. To bring to view the grounds on which this hope rests, is exclusively the

Of these two remedies, for form sake, the first mentioned is indeed held up to view: but, of course, with scarce a ray of hope to gild it with.

The other will be seen presented for adoption: presented in the character of a lawful, safe, effectual,—and, when well considered, an unobjectionable one.

Short title. Remedies to the mischiefs of the Exclusionary System as applied to Instruction.

X. Appendix, No. IV. Throughout the whole field of morals, dissocial and social affection afford a test,—by which, in so far as circumstances admit of the application of it, they may be distinguished from each other. Dissocial, finds in the exposure of abuses and other imperfections, its ultimate gratification: social affection, whether operating upon a private or a public scale, puts, and keeps itself upon the look out for a remedy: and, howsoever remote and uncertain, it is only by the cheering prospect of a remedy in the back ground, that it can bring itself to face and dwell upon the afflicting spectacle, of the stream of sufferings so generally flowing from the abuse.

It is thus that,—where the mischief produced by the injection of the matter of this Catechism has been brought to view,—a remedy—and that such as it is, one which it is in the power of all fathers and guardians to administer—has been sought for, found, and just now referred to.—It is thus that,

—where the mischief, produced by subscription to articles of faith, was, though but incidentally, brought to view,—a remedy to that mischief was, with like care, pointed out.* But, of every abuse and every imperfection, which has place in the field of religion,—not to speak of the field of government,—the main root—not to say the only root—has all along been seen to lie in that remnant of Popery, the Excellent Church, as viewed in its present state. For the application of a radical remedy to this radical evil, the times, even by the confession, or rather proclamation, of those by whom it is most cherished, seem ripening apace.

On this subject, and on this state of things, remediation,—the object thus all along looked to as a first principle of direction—requires that something should be said: were it only in the view of giving some intimation, how slight so ever, of the course necessary to be pursued, for reducing to its minimum the mass of evil inseparable from so great a change.

At the same time, consideration being had of the scattered state, in which the grounds of the demand for this change, such as in the course of this work will have presented themselves, will have been brought to view,—a task, which could not wholly be put by, has been—the giving a sort of compressed recapitulation of those grounds; together with a few additions, to give roundness to the whole.

* See Preface, p. xxiv.

Short title—Remedy to all religious, and much political mischief—Euthanasia of the Church.

XI. Appendix, No. V. Conscious—if not of the primeval, at any rate of the present, rottenness of the whole fabric—alarmed by the symptoms of dissolution which have been continually pressing themselves upon observation,—men in power have, of late years, betaken themselves to several expedients for warding off the impending catastrophe. Of these expedients, the adoption thus given to the new system of instruction, with the exclusionary system grafted upon it, may be stated as being by far the one best adapted to the purpose. Of the others, a short view will form the fifth and last article of this Appendix.

Short title—Measures recently instituted or proposed for meliorating the state of the Church—efficient to bad, inefficient to good purposes.

END OF THE PLAN OF THE WORK.

wholly be put by, has been—the giving a sort of compressed recapitulation of those grounds; together with a few additions, to give roundness to the whole.
Short title—Remedy to all religions, and much political mischief—Kubankaria of the Church.
XI. Appendix, No. V. Conscience—if not of the primeval, at any rate of the present, rottenness of the whole fabric—alarmed by the symptoms of dissolution which have been continually pressing themselves upon observation,—men in power have,
of late years, betaken themselves to several expedients for warding off the impending catastrophe.
Of these expedients, the adoption thus given to the new system of instruction, with the exclusionary system grafted upon it, may be stated as being by far the one best adapted to the purpose. Of the others, a short view will form the fifth and last article of this Appendix.
Short title—Measures recently instituted or proposed for meliorating the state of the Church—efficient to bad, inefficient to good purposes.

INTRODUCTION.

PART I.

THE CATECHISM—A BAD SUBSTITUTE TO THE BIBLE—IS SUBSTITUTED FOR IT.

§ I. Church of England Catechism—this perhaps the first Censorial Commentary ever applied to it.

THE Catechism forms part of that authoritative system of religious discourse, which, by the style and title of "The Book of Common Prayer, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies of the Church, according to the use of the Church of England," has now, for about two centuries and a half, possessed the exclusive privilege of supplying the matter of devotion to the members of that established church: and this in particular is the part, and the only part, the imprinting of which, or rather the words of it, on their memories, has generally been the object of the first literary task, which, at the commencement of the career of intellectual, or at any rate of literary, instruction,—has given exercise to the faculties and patience of children of both sexes.

Under the pretence of exposition, i. e. explanation, yet not the less in the style and tone of eulogy, it has received comments in abundance, in all which those merits have been ascribed to it, with the existence of which, supposing them to exist, the existence of any utility, whether on the part of the exposition in question, or on the part of any thing else that could have been exhibited in the name or character of an exposition, would have been incompatible.

The thing thus undertaken to be expounded is, in so far as it has any claim to regard, an extract—and that, so far as it goes, a correct one—from the sacred original. *Correctness—clearness—*does it fail in either of these points? It fails of answering any good purpose to which it can have been directed. Instead of being expounded, it should be discarded. Were it the original, yes: in so far as, by change in language or manners, obscure allusions to past events or states of things, exposition is found to be requisite. But, an exposition?—expound an exposition?—No: absurdity is involved in the very idea of it.—Expound the inadequate exposition?—No: but, instead of it, give an adequate one, and send the inadequate one to the trunk-makers.

The Scottish Church has its Catechism. It has even two of them, the longer and the shorter—the shorter, had it been still shorter, longer than would have been wished. The longer a text, the greater the quantity of matter, for commentators and expositors to crawl over and cover with their slime. Yet, who ever heard of comments or expositions to either of these formularies?

To the Scottish Church this, however, is but the beginning of triumphs. As we advance, many are the points of difference that will present themselves: and, on each point, will an addition be seen made to the number of her merits.

As to this formulary, whether, amidst the multitude of comments and expositions, with which, under different names, it has been covered, it has ever seen so much as one,—other than of that sort which commences with a secret vow, to keep the door of the mind inexorably shut against every idea, the effect of which might be to beget any the least suspicion, of imperfection in any shape, in the consecrated text,—is more than has happened to find its way to the cognizance of the author of these pages.

Upon the whole, the abundance of comments of the laudatory cast, coupled with the paucity, or utter non-existence, of any of an accusative, or so much as a critical complexion,—these two naturally connected phenomena present themselves as the altogether natural result of two very obvious causes. Vast must have been the number of professional men, each of whom beheld advantage to himself in many a shape, from the merit of covering it with his praise:* small indeed, if any, of those, to whose eyes advantage can have presented itself in any shape, as capable of being derived by them from the exposure of any imperfection that might be to be found in it.

Of what benefit, either to the critic himself in any ordinary shape, or so much as to the public at large, in any measurable compass of time, could any such criticism afford a prospect of being productive? That, supposing the formulary ever so full of imperfections, and those imperfections ever so completely demonstrated, the removal of any so much as the minutest, particle of them by authority would ever be the consequence;—at what time could any such result present, to any intelligent mind, any, the faintest colour of probability? And, as to the audacious individual, by whom any

* At school—well do I remember—the only danger I ever felt myself in of punishment, was from my inability to beat into my memory the words—for as to sense, it was out of the question—of a Comment, or Exposition of this formulary, by some Archbishop: his name began with a W, which is all I now recollect about this night-mare, by which my sleep was so long disturbed. should expect to find it either Wake or Williams.

such imperfections should have been held up to view, from what quarter could he expect any return more acceptable, than neglect? To Church of Englandists he and his criticism would be objects of blind aversion,—to all but Church of Englandists, (but for some such awakening conjuncture as the present,) objects of indifference.

§ II. On Religion—in a Christian Free-School—the Bible the only fit Lesson-Book.

In the sort of school in question, the arts to be taught are—besides Arithmetic, those of Reading and Writing. For furnishing lessons for this purpose, a book—one book at least—is necessary. If one book alone, what shall this book be?—If more books than one, to which of them shall the preference—in the first place—be given?

To both these questions one and the same answer may serve—the Bible.

On this occasion, as on every other, for proof of the position, which is advanced, the broader the ground is that is laid, the better: the broader the ground—in other words, the greater the number of the persons, at whose hands, by means of the proof, the position may reasonably be expected to obtain acceptance.

The Bible then—the Bible, were it only in consideration of its being that book which, in this country, has, beyond comparison, more readers, as well as more hearers, than any other, might, even from this circumstance alone, be naturally regarded as presenting an indisputable claim to preference and precedence.

To the preference thus proposed, from any person by whom the religion of Jesus is believed in, could any such objection come? No, surely:—unless perhaps it were on account of the immature state of the intellectual faculties, at the time of life, at which, on a subject so fraught with mystery, instruction will, on the supposition in question, be endeavoured to be administered.

But assuredly, so long as, in the matter, of which the book in question is composed, a sufficient quantity can be found, of that which, with reference to the mind in question, is sufficiently clear; so long, from the obscurity of any part not employed, no valid objection can be derived against the employment of any part of it, which, being clear, is employed accordingly.

Nor,—supposing the clouds, which hang over the import, whatever they may be, sooner or later dispelled,—will the existence of it,—howsoever, at the commencement of the course of instruction, and even for a considerable time thereafter unquestionable,—be, upon due reflection, found to constitute any sufficient objection to the employing of it to this purpose. For some time indeed, by the supposition, it is without being ac-accompanied by the ideas which they are meant to designate, that the signs present themselves to the conception, and lodge themselves in the memory. Be it so. But, at any rate, the signs are there: and, for the purpose of grammatical instruction,—which, in the order of time, is the first purpose,—they serve as well as any others: thereupon, as the faculties of the mind acquire maturity, and the storehouse of the mind receives its stock, little by little, the desirable and desired ideas drop in and attach themselves to the signs.

In a place of instruction, designed, as are the schools in question, for children, to whom, in so large a proportion, but for the means thus afforded, instruction on religion would not in any shape whatever be afforded,—the reason for taking, for the source of instruction in reading and writing, that same book, which is the source of instruction in religion, operates with a degree of force far beyond any with which it can apply in another situation:—in any situation, in which, whether the means here in question were or were not employed, instruction in religion might reasonably be expected to flow in from other sources.

Thus much as to believers. And even the few in whose eyes either religion in general, or the religion of Jesus in particular, is not conducive, but prejudicial, to real happiness and useful morality, and by whom religious instruction is accordingly regarded as worse than useless,—even these, so long as no school, from whence all religious instruction is excluded, were to be found, might still find it not inconsistent with their views to send their children to a school in which the book containing the religion of Jesus is taught: inasmuch as the same instrument, viz. the art of reading, which, in the first instance, will thus have been employed in the implanting of the supposed mischievous instruction, might, at a succeeding period, be equally made to serve in the eradicating of it:—might, —and, in their view of the matter, naturally would,—and with more than equal promise of success.

Thus much then being considered as settled, viz. that the book containing the religion of Jesus is the most proper book, from which the first lessons in the arts of reading and writing can be extracted, the next question is—in that same whole, of what description are the parts, from which they may with most propriety be extracted.

Neither in this does there seem much difficulty. The religion of Jesus—and not the religion of any other person—is the religion to be taught. But the religion of Jesus—in whose words shall it be sought for, but in the words of Jesus?

Here then we have two bodies of doctrine, to which, by an altogether indisputable title, the precedence and preference seems to be due: viz.

the “Discourses”* at large, (headed by the “SERMON on the Mount”);* these “Discourses” and the “Parables.”*

Next to these, in the conjunct order of authenticity and importance, and thence in the order of preference, come those, in which is contained the description of the acts of Jesus, as delivered by the same biographical historians to whom we are indebted for his Discourses: and among these acts, a prominent place is naturally occupied by the miraculous ones—in one word, the “Miracles.”*

Thus, in a direct way, the determination, on the question, which of those parts are most proper, being made, if so it be, that, for the purpose in question, in the place of instruction in question, at the time of life in question, this portion of the religion of Jesus, to which no believer in the religion of Jesus does or can object, is sufficient—and it seems difficult to say, why, in that same place, and at that same time of life, it should not be sufficient—every such invidious task as that of inquiring, whether,—in the consecrated miscellany, in the composition of which, in an age of darkness, the hand of the bookbinder, under the rod of the to us unknown ruling power, took so large a part, this or that article be not more or less unfit to be placed upon a level with the undisputed words of the discourses, and the undisputed narratives of the acts of Jesus,—will thus be rendered needless.

* Under these same names, these are the lists of books, recommended and said to be employed in their central School, by the National Society. See Part II. in which that part of the Report, made by that Society, is animadverted upon.

On the other hand, a consequence, which cannot be thought of without regret, is—that, by this means, an exclusion, and that an insuperable one—seems to be put upon the whole race of the Jews: more particularly when it is considered, in how large a proportion in this fraternity are to be found those members, who, but for this means, are likely to remain altogether destitute of so many invaluable benefits: destitute not only of instruction in reading and writing, but even, with the exception of a few burthensome and worse than useless rites and ceremonies, (in a considerable proportion of modern date) from instruction in all religion—from instruction in the very religion, of which their parents are nominally professors.

On the part of the bulk of the population—on the part of the Christian subscribers to these schools,—at least without some assistance and co-operation on the part of those dissidents themselves—it appears not how this cause of exclusion can admit of any remedy.

On the part of the Jewish parents themselves—that is to say, on the part of such of them, if any, as have strength of mind sufficient for the application of it—a remedy, by which the force of the exclusionary principle might, without a departure from the line of probity, be eluded, might be applied.—Fables—under the name of fables—other fables under the name of histories—such are the discourses, which, in every school, in which instruction is given in the learned languages, are employed as sources and vehicles of instruction: among these, if you are true children of our Father Abraham, will you rank whatsoever they put into your hands to read or hear, concerning that Jesus, whom with such good reason our forefathers hanged upon a tree?—To some such effect as this is, would the caution, which, on sending his child to any such place of Christian instruction, might, for keeping the imagined tares from mixing themselves with the undisputed wheat, be given to him by a conscientious and consistent father.

True it is, that, on the part of the rulers of the Christian Church of England, for leaving the door completely open to the use of any such expedient, a departure in some sort from the present practice would be necessary. At present—such is the form of words in which the instruction is administered—on this subject, whatsoever is delivered to a child as true, he is all the while, not only taught, but compelled to declare, that he believes it to be true. Though (what in this or that part may be the case) in his eyes it may be false—though (what in a great part cannot but be the case) in his eyes it may be inconceivable—still what he is always forced to do is—over and over again, and in relation to every part without exception, to declare, that, in his eyes, it is true. But this is neither more nor less than to take the child in hand, and force him to tell lies: and not only, as in the case of subscription to Articles,—at some one moment, to utter in the lump one enormously extensive lie, but to contract the habit of lying: yea, and in that most mischievous of habits, to persevere, till all regard for truth has been expelled, and the poison of mendacity has worked itself into the very marrow of the bones.

If these observations be correct, then, to make the only advance, requisite to the opening the door of any such school, to the child of a conscientious and consistent Jew, all that is necessary on the part of the rulers of the Church of England is—to cease acting in the character of suborners of juvenile mendacity. But, on this subject, occasion will present itself for speaking more largely in the sequel of this work. This is no greater nor other concession, than that which would be necessary to the removing of the bar, by which an exclusion is endeavoured to be put, even upon all Christian children, whose lot it has not been, to have had for their parents members of the Church of England.

§ III. No substitute to the Bible should be there taught—the Catechism is made a substitute to it.

The sacred text ought not to have a substitute. The reason is simple enough: and as conclusive as it is simple. In so far as it is different from the genuine and sacred original, by this difference, and by the whole amount of this difference, the substitute stands condemned: in so far as it is not different, there is no use in it.

Whether as a postulate, or as a thing proved, in a Protestant Country, may not then this position be stated as uncontrovertible?—In a Christian and Protestant Free School, the book in which is contained the whole religion of Jesus, ought not to have a substitute.

In the Central Free School, conducted in the name of the National Society, the Bible has a substitute. The Catechism—that formulary, the poisonous nature of which it is the business of this tract to lay open to view, is made to operate as this substitute.

By the proof that follows, the truth of this position will be seen manifested: manifested—to a degree beyond any, which, by a person who had not scrutinized into the documents, and with this particular view, could easily have been imagined. With the single exception of the very short prayer, called the Lord's Prayer, which it was impossible to put aside,—of the sacred text, not a syllable is administered,—if indeed it be administered,—but for show and to save appearances. The only matter of a religious cast which is really intended to be administered with effect—the only matter of that description, which is so much as professed to be administered, in a manner calculated to produce the effect—is the matter composed of the words of Holy Mother Church: and this, in the instance of this Catechism, in such a manner as to throw all the rest, even of that pretious matter, into the back ground.

“ Our Saviour’s Sermon on the Mount—Discourses of ditto—Miracles of ditto—Parables of our Blessed Saviour”—these collections have already been stated as really proper for the purpose.* It was even from the list of Books recommended in the Report, styled the National Society’s 2d Report, that these titles have been transcribed. Had this been all, in no other character than that of an object of approbation and applause, would this part of the management have here been mentioned.

But these discourses and acts of this “ Blessed Saviour,” are they so much as read? Perhaps so: though scarcely even of this is any altogether unequivocal assurance to be found.†

* See p. 190, 193.

† In the National Society’s Second Report—in that article of

But, the genuine matter of the original—suppose it read, what would it avail? what could the

the Appendix which is intituled, “No. VIII. The present “state* of the CENTRAL SCHOOL, BALDWIN’S GARDENS,” the passage stands as follows:—Page 196. “The Religious exercises “learnt by heart are—the Lord’s Prayer—Grace before and “after meat—2d and 3d Collects of the Morning and Evening “Service—Prayer on entering and leaving Church—the Cate“chism entire—and the same broken into short questions.”

“The Books in reading, for which the Children are prepared “by previous instruction on the sand-trays, are—National So“ciety, Central School, No. 1. on cards (taught card by card, “first by previous spelling, then by words)—National Society, “Central School, No. 2.—National Society, Central School, No.
“3.—the Sermon on the Mount—the Parables—the Discourses
“—and the Miracles of our Blessed Saviour—Ostervald’s Abridg“ment of the Old Testament—and Mrs. Trimmer’s Abridg“ment of the New—all taught in the usual way, except that
“the spelling columns, No. 3. are first read syllabically and then “by words: then follow the Bible and Prayer Book, to be put “into the hands of such as by means of this initiatory course “have attained to good reading.”

These then—all these without discrimination—are the Books, for the reading of which the Children are “prepared.” But in so long a list of Books—and some of them so voluminous—for example the Bible and the Prayer Book—that all should be read throughout is not possible. The consequence is—that by those which are, those which are not the favourites, will, in a greater or less degree be pushed out: and these favourites which are

* “The present State of the Central School”—Present?—at what time?
Ask those who are in the secret. Look for it in this same No. VIII—
Look for it in any other part of this same Report—you may look long enough.
But, this and so many other such reserves, have their sufficient reason; concerning which, see Part IV.

children be the better for it, when it is the substituted matter—the spurious matter—when it is this alone that is got by heart: and not merely in the common way got by heart, but, by all the power of the new engine of instruction—by question and answer and by challenging—alias, competition and place-taking—injected: injected, as hath been observed into the very marrow of their bones. “1. Grace before and after ment. 2. Second and Third Col-lects of the Morning and Evening Service. 3. Prayers on entering and leaving Church”^{*}—all these put together, whether considered in respect of quantity or quality, are of little moment.

For now comes the one thing needful—the Catechism.† This is injected no less than three times over. For these are the words, in and by which it is spoken of as learnt by heart.—“The Catechism entire—and the same broken into short questions.”—Upon the face of this statement, what might naturally be supposed, is—that it was but twice. But, turn to the Book, intituled “The Catechism broken into short questions,” and you will find that in that book the whole matter of this same Catechism is administered twice over, viz. in the first they?—that the portion of the Bible, in which are contained the accounts of the discourses and acts of Jesus are not of the number,—is already but too manifest. One of them, however, we shall soon see, and in CAPITALS.

* P. 196.

† Ibid.

plan in larger portions, and then the same matter in smaller portions, into which, by the interposition of questions, each larger portion is broken down. Thus then we have the same matter administered three times over, viz. 1. unbroken; 2. broken into larger fragments; 3. broken into smaller ones.

In this most impressive manner, though it had been administered no more than once, it would have been quite sufficient to throw out into the back ground—every thing that came from Jesus: but in this same most impressive manner it is administered (we see) no less than thrice.

Even this was not thought sufficient. To provide the more effectually for the exclusion of every thing that belonged to Jesus,—under the name of “A CATECHETICAL INSTRUCTION, being an ACCOUNT of the CHIEF TRUTHS of the CHRISTIAN RELIGION, explained to the MEANEST CAPACITY, by way of Question and Answer”—or (to call it by the shorter title given to it) CHIEF TRUTHS,—to make certainty more sure, provision is made of another body of divinity, and that a new one,—to co-operate with the Catechism, and act under it, in the character of a sub-substitute to every thing that came from Jesus. Suppose the manner in which this sub-substitute is taught—suppose it even not more impressive than the manner in which, as above, the Discourses and Acts of Jesus are taught, how effectually the genuine matter might be elbowed out by this spurious matter, may easily be imagined. But it is in that same peculiarly impressive form, that this new portion of spurious matter—this sub-substitute to every thing that ever came from Jesus (the one short and unexcludible prayer excepted) is also fitted to be administered.*

As to these self-styled CHIEF TRUTHS—as to this new Supplement to the Old Catechism—

* In the abovementioned Report, of which so much more will come to be said, it is in two places recommended to all the Schools carried on in subordination to that National Society, and, to enforce the recommendation, therein mentioned as being sold to them by the Society at reduced prices: viz. in Appendix, No. VI. p. 190. under the name of Chief Truths of the Christian Religion; and again in No. VII. p. 193, under the shorter name of Chief Truths. In No. VI. it stands next but one to “Catechism broken into short questions.” This was in August, 1812. At this time nothing of Our Saviour was included in the list but the “Sermon on the Mount.” In No. VII. p. 193. come “Parables of our Blessed Saviour; Miracles of ditto; and Discourses of ditto :” over all these discourses and acts of the Blessed Saviour” precedence is given to this National Society’s Chief Truths. In the list of the abovementioned Books, mentioned in this same Report, No. VIII. p. 196, as being employed in the instruction administered in the Central School, situated in the Metropolis, it is not visible.—Is it then employed there, or is it not? If yes, why suppress the mention of it? If not, why refuse to the children of this one School the benefit of a source of instruction recommended to every other? In p. 192. “to preserve uniformity of proceeding,” stands at the head of the list of those which the Society is there made to declare to be “its only objects.”

who the author of it is, my Lords the Bishops have not vouchsafed to inform us. Who the author is, and what the contents are—these are among the truths, as well as who the author is, among the secrets—which for the present purpose are not worth knowing. What, to the present purpose, it is quite sufficient to know, is—that in conjunction with, and subordination to, the Old Catechism, this new body of divinity, begotten by we know not who, but at any rate adopted by My Lords the Bishops,—is employed in the character of a substitute to the only authentic and genuine accounts of the discourses and acts of Jesus—or, to speak more shortly and not less truly, to the religion of Jesus.

What, on this occasion, is moreover curious enough is—to see how, as if by the shuffling of a pack of cards, the works of the “Blessed Saviour” are, without any the smallest distinction, huddled together in a promiscuous bundle along with those of the Rev. Mr. Ostervald, and the anonymous author of the CHIEF TRUTHS.

Not so those of MRS. TRIMMER. Her more holy name is distinguished and illustrated by capitals. What the Blessed Virgin is to the Church of Rome, this Blessed Matron is to the Church of England. In the Mother the Son finds a rival, and that rival a preferred one.*

* “ With a view to furnishing initiatory Books with greater

§. IV. Badness of this substitute in every respect: I. as to faithfulness. No tests of it.

That which a formulary, employed in the way in which this Catechism is employed, ought to be,—that which it of course professes to be, is—a true picture of the religion of Jesus: a miniature picture indeed; but, as far as it goes, a true one.

Of the religion, of which they thus undertook to give a picture, to give a true picture did not suit the personal interests, nor therefore the pur-

“ convenience, and at reduced prices, the Committee” (says the Report, p. 192) “ have ordered to be deposited at Messrs. Rivington’s, St. Paul’s Church-Yard, Books of that description, in sets of 50 each, for 100 Children, of which a list is subjoined.

In p. 193, after other matter, without any further title, comes what follows—

	£.	s.	d.
“ 50 dozen Cards or Leaves, or National “ Society Central School Book, No. 1.	0	4	3 “ 50 National Society Central School Book,
“ No. 2.	0	2	0
“ 50 Ditto, No. 3.	0	2	0
“ 50 Sermon on the Mount.	0	2	0
“ 50 Broken Catechism	0	3	9
“ 50 Ostervald’s Abridgment	0	2	0
“ Arithmetical Tables, per dozen	0	0	4½
“ 50 Chief Truths	0	2	0
“ 50 Parables of Our Blessed Saviour	0	2	0
“ 50 Miracles of ditto	0	2	0
“ 50 Discourses of ditto	0	2	0
And MRS. TRIMMER’S “ Teacher’s Assistant,
“ 2 vol. in double sets at	0	7	0 each set.”

poses and designs, of the authors of this formulary. From external circumstances this will, it is believed, be seen ere this Introduction is at an end ; and from the formulary itself in the body of this work.

That which did suit their purposes was—to employ it as an instrument of corruption, for corrupting altogether the intellectual part, and to a great extent the moral part, of the minds thus impregnated : the intellectual, through the medium of the sensitive part, that by weakness they might be rendered unable, because by terror they had been rendered unwilling, to discern the mischievousness of the dominion exercised at their expense : the moral part, that by their being themselves habituated to the practice of mendacity and insincerity in their own sphere, the spectacle of those vices, when practised at their expense in higher spheres, might in their eyes be rendered an object of indifference.

Not only that this object was pursued, but in particular by what precise means it was pursued, may be seen in the body of this work.

For those purposes, what was necessary was—that, in the composition of this formulary, their hands should be as free as possible from all checks, the effect of which might be to obstruct them in the pursuit of those same purposes.

For the fidelity of any picture, undertaken to be given of any mass of the matter of discourse, the nature of the case offers a sort of security, of which neither the nature nor the importance, nor, in so far as the reputation of sincerity is regarded as necessary, the necessity, either is now, or was then unknown to any one. This is—need it be mentioned?—an accompaniment, composed of references and quotations. Intimately connected as are those two securities in their nature,—frequently as they are connected in practice,—either of them is, however, not the less capable of being afforded without the other.

References without quotations present the most common case.

Quotations without references are much less common, because much less natural: much less natural, because the object is—not merely that misrepresentation may not have place, but that all suspicion of its having had place may be excluded.

On ordinary ground—in the case of an ordinary history for example—references without quotations are commonly and may reasonably be accepted, as affording a security, sufficient for the nature and importance of the case.

But, in the instance here in question, no security, short of the very best and most efficient that the nature of the case affords, could either be sufficient, or by any intelligent person be regarded as sufficient, or by any honest person—by any person who were not, for the sake of the profit of misrepresentation, content to expose himself to the just suspicion of it—be offered as sufficient.

References with quotations,—quotations, that it might be seen by every one, whether the picture were a faithful, or if unfaithful, how far an unfaithful one—references, that it might be seen that the quotations were, as far as they went, genuine, and, at the same time, untainted with partiality—with that sort of deficiency, which, whether it has design or accident for the cause, has misrepresentation for its effect,—such and such alone could be the securities, to which, in a case such the present, any such quality as that signified by the word adequate, could be ascribed.

The importance of the subject, is it not such—that, in comparison of it, all others put together shrink into insignificance?

Proportioned to this real importance, was not the sense entertained of it in the minds of all classes of the community?—proportioned to that sense, the warmth of the dissensions that prevailed?—proportioned to that warmth, were not the suspicions of misrepresentation?—of misrepresentation, intended as well as unintended?

Here for the second time, may be seen the difference between Church-of-Scotlandism and Church-of-Englandism:—between Puritanism, since that must be the name, and Impuritanism: between Presbyterianism and Episcopacy: between the management of the equal many, and the domination of the ruling few.

By no British—by no Scottish—by no Irish—but above all by no English readers, ought this contrast to be lost sight of. In no part of this work has it ever been lost sight of. It runs through the whole extent of the field of Church discipline. It will present itself again and again in the course of these pages: and all along what purity and impurity are, will be shewn—not by declamation, but by example.

The Scottish Church has, as above (§ 4.), its two Catechisms. In the one, as in the other, not a proposition without its quotation: not a quotation without its reference.

How far the pictures drawn under these checks are correct, is matter of debate. But that about which there can be no debate is—the conclusiveness of the proof thus afforded of the sincerity of those who draw them.

By the penners of the Church of England Catechism,—unless the Creed, the Ten Commandments, and the Lord's Prayer be taken for quotations,—neither quotation is given, nor so much as a reference. They made their choice. They chose rather to incur the just suspicion of misrepresentation, than to forego the benefit of it.

In the order of time, the date of the contents of the Scottish Catechisms was posterior to that of the English: the state of the public mind, maturer.—True: but, at least since printing came into use, at what period was the state of the public mind—of the lettered part of it at least—so immature as not to see, that by references and quotations, a surety against misrepresentation, and that the only one, is afforded?

To keep the Bible as much as may be out of sight, is a policy, which, as far as circumstances have admitted, has ever been pursued in common, by Church-of-Romanism and Church-of-Englandism.

By Church-of-Romanism it was originally pursued in that coarse and clumsy way, which, for so many centuries, continued to be not ill-suited to the coarseness, and ignorance, and stupidity of the times. By the Church-of-Englandism, in the instance here in question, it was pursued in that sort of way which was suited to the state of the public mind, at that less immature period of its existence.

The Established Church of Scotland is a Presbyterian Church: the Established Church of England is an Episcopalian Church.—True: but this difference between the two forms of government, what is it to the purpose?—What?—unless it be, that while to the nature of a Presbyterian Church, it is not congenial to palm upon the people a spurious substitute for a genuine abridgment, to the nature of an Episcopalian Church in general, or at least to that of the Church of England in particular, an imposition of this sort is congenial.

Oh! but,—if in this summary, not only the references to the texts; on which it is grounded, and by which it is justified, but the texts themselves, were inserted,—there would be no end to it: it would not be the thing, which is so indisputably needful, and what it professes and is designed to be: it would not be fit for—it would be by much too large for—the young and tender mouths for which it is intended.

True enough: but what is the consequence. —That no summary with the text attached to it, should on any occasion, or for any purpose, be employed? That the pretended quintessence should remain at all times, and be circulated in all places, without a syllable from the sacred original to justify it?—No surely. But that there should be two publications: one with the texts, as well as the references; the other with the references alone. The one would serve for justification, the other for instruction: the one for those whose acquirements enabled them to judge for themselves; the other for those, whose time of life and want of acquirements, rendered them unable, for the present at least, to apply the rational faculty to this most important indeed, but unhappily proportionably arduous use.

To his Lordship of London, (see Appendix, p. 145.) the Puritans may be seen presenting themselves in no other character than that of “exciters of troubles.” To some eyes it may, perhaps, be more agreeable to behold in those same Sectaries, men of principle, manifesting for years together, the qualities of sincerity, piety, zeal, patience, and perseverance. To these same persons, on this same field, it may moreover, perhaps, be not unacceptable, to behold the difference between Puritans and Impuritans. If so, let them, in the following extracts, or—what will be still better—in the original, see the account given of the matter, in Neale's History of the Puritans, Toulmin's Edition, iii. 354.

Anno 1648, September 15, of the two Scottish Catechisms, the larger was, by order of the two Houses of Parliament, printed for public use. It was at the express "desire" of the two Houses, that the "marginal references to Scripture" were inserted.* It was for this cause alone that from November the 5th, 1647, being the day on which "the shorter Catechism was presented to the House of Commons," the presentation of this larger Catechism had been deferred for upwards of four months, viz, "till the 14th of April," 1648.

"The shorter Catechism," (furnished, it may in like manner be presumed, with its quotations,)

* The quotations being at present printed, as well as those words and figures to which alone, perhaps, in strictness of speech, the term reference can with propriety be applied,—by the words "marginal references," were meant to be designated (it should seem) by Neale, the quotations, as they now stand, as well as the references.

“ the King, after many solicitations, at the treaty
 “ of the Isle of Wight, offered” (says Neale) “ to “ license with a suitable preface : but, that treaty “ proving unsuccessful, it was not accomplished.”

About fourteen years afterwards, viz. in the year 1662,—two years, or thereabouts, after the Restoration of Charles the Second,—comes the Act of Uniformity: (13 and 14th Ch. 2. c. 4.) and now it is, that that picture of the religion of Jesus, which bears upon the face of it the most perfect test of its faithfulness that the nature of the case admits of, is cast out : cast out, and in the place of it, the old daubing, on the face of which not so much as any the least pretence to the character of faithfulness is visible, is forced into use.

Thus it was that, for fourteen years, or thereabouts, viz. from 1648 to 1662, the Bible was in honour in England, as, before it came to be so in England, it had already been in Scotland. In comes the profligate King, with his Church-of-Englandism on his front, and his Church-of-Romanism in his heart,—and now the Bible is cast out, and this breviary of the Church-of-England religion once more seated in the place of it.

One thousand six hundred and sixty-two is the year, in which, under the notion of its being the more trust-worthy, this account without vouchers was substituted to that to which so ample a stock of vouchers may be seen thus carefully and anxiously annexed.

Four and thirty years had the first volume of the Institute of Human Law,—for which, such as it is, the world of law is indebted to Sir Edward Coke,—been in the knowledge, if not in the hands, of every man by whom any part was taken in this disastrous change. Quotations at length? no: room could not admit of it: importance did not require it. But, without indication given of his authorities, indication given in the usual way of reference, that lawyer, with all his confidence, would never have dared to encounter the public eye.

Not to speak of the Hales, the Hawkinses, the Burns, the Blackstones—by what one English lawyer, that, from that time ever wrote, was ever betrayed any such presumptuous and absurd conceit, as that, without reference to the original sources, from which the matter of his abridgments was respectively drawn, any work of his would either experience, or deserve to experience, any the smallest particle of regard?

No:—man's law is not to be thus dealt with:—it is only of God's law, that profligate men, when the power is in their hands, dare make what they please.*

* On a subject, on which according to all parties the difference between heaven and hell is at stake, the conscientious sincerity and carefulness, of the republicanism of those times, forms so striking a contrast with the profligate and careless despotism, of the monarchy of those same times—not to speak of other times,—and moreover so instructive a lesson to all times,—that insertion could not here be refused to the two here following anterior pages in Neal, by which the account is taken up at a somewhat anterior period. Vol. iii. c. viii. pp. 350, 351, 352. To Rushworth, Whitlocke, and other unexceptionable authorities, are the references all along made.

“The Reverend Mr. Charles Herle succeeded to the Prolocutor’s chair by order of Parliament, July 26, 1646, in the room of the late Dr. Twisse, when, the discipline of the Church being pretty well settled, it was moved to finish their confession of faith. The English Divines would have been content with revising and explaining the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, but the Scots insisting on a system of their own, a committee was appointed to prepare materials for this purpose, May 9th, 1645; their names were, Dr. Gouge, Dr. Hoyle, Mr. Herle, Gataker, Tuckney, Reynolds, and Vines, with the Scots Divines, who having first settled the titles of the several chapters, as they now stand in their confession of faith, in number thirty-two, distributed them for greater expedition, among several sub-committees, which sat two days every week, and then reported what they had finished to the committee, and so to the Assembly, where it was debated paragraph by paragraph. The disputes about discipline had occasioned so many interruptions, that it was a year and a half before this work was finished; but on Nov. 26, 1646, the prolocutor returned thanks to the several committees, in the name of the Assembly, for their great pains in perfecting the work committed to them. At the same time Dr. Burges was appointed to get it transcribed, in order to its being presented to Parliament, which was done, Dec. 11, by the whole Assembly in a body, under the title of, The Humble Advice of the Assembly of Divines and others, now, by authority of Parliament, sitting at Westminster, concerning a Confession of Faith. The House of Commons having voted the Assembly thanks, desired them to insert the proofs of the several articles in their proper places, and then to print six hundred copies, and no more, for the perusal of the houses. The Reverend Mr. Wilson, Mr. Byfield, and Mr. Gower, were appointed, Jan. 6, to be a committee, to collect the scriptures for confirmation of the several articles; all which, after examination by the Assembly, were inserted in the margin. And then the whole confession was committed once more to a review of the three committees, who made report to the Assembly of such further amendments as they thought necessary; which being agreed to by the house, it was sent to the press, May 11, 1647. Mr. Byfield, by order of the House of Commons, delivered to the members the printed copies of this confession of faith, with scripture notes, signed—

CHARLES HERLE, Prolocutor.

COR. BURGESS, }
HERBERT PALMER, } Assessors.

HENRY ROBOROUGH, }
ADONERAM BYFIELD, } Scribes.

And because no more were to be given out at present, every member subscribed his name to the receipt thereof.

The House of Commons began their examination of this confession, May 19, when they considered the whole first chapter, article by article; but the disturbances which arose between the parliament and the army interrupted their proceeding the whole summer; but when these were quieted, they resumed their work, and October 2, ordered a chapter of the confession of faith at least to be debated every Wednesday, by which means they got through the whole before the end of March following; for at a conference with the House of Lords, March 22d, 1647-8, the Commons presented them with the confession of faith, as passed by their House, with some alterations: they agreed with the Assembly in the doctrinal part of the confession, and ordered it to be published, June 20th, 1648, for the satisfaction of the foreign churches, under the title of Articles of Religion, approved and passed by both Houses of Parliament, after advice had with an Assembly of Divines, called together by them for that purpose.

times,—and moreover so instructive a lesson to all times,—that insertion could not here be refused to the two here following anterior pages in Neal, by which the account is taken up at a somewhat anterior period. Vol. iii. c. viii. pp. 350, 351, 352. To Rushworth, Whitlocke, and other unexceptionable authorities, are the references all along made.

“The Reverend Mr. Charles Herle succeeded to the Prolocutor’s chair by order of Parliament, July 26, 1646, in the room of the late Dr. Twisse, when, the discipline of the Church being pretty well settled, it was moved to finish their confession of faith. The English Divines would have been content with revising and explaining the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, but the Scots insisting on a system of their own, a committee was appointed to prepare materials for this purpose, May 9th, 1645; their names were, Dr. Gouge, Dr. Hoyle, Mr. Herle, Gataker, Tuckney, Reynolds, and Vines, with the Scots Divines, who having first settled the titles of the several chapters, as they now stand in their confession of faith, in number thirty-two, distributed them for greater expedition, among several sub-committees, which sat two days every week, and then reported what they had finished to the committee, and so to the Assembly, where it was debated paragraph by paragraph. The disputes about discipline had occasioned so many interruptions, that it was a year and a half before this work was finished; but on Nov. 26, 1646, the prolocutor returned thanks to the several committees, in the name of the Assembly, for their great pains in perfecting the work committed to them. At the same time Dr. Burges was appointed to get it transcribed, in order to its being presented to Parliament, which was done, Dec. 11, by the whole Assembly in a body, under the title of, The Humble Advice of the Assembly of Divines and others, now, by authority of Parliament, sitting at Westminster, concerning a Confession of Faith. The House of Commons having voted the Assembly thanks, desired them to insert the proofs of the several articles in their proper places, and then to print six hundred copies, and no more, for the perusal of the houses. The Reverend Mr. Wilson, Mr. Byfield, and Mr. Gower, were appointed, Jan. 6, to be a committee, to collect the scriptures for confirmation of the several articles; all which, after examination by the Assembly, were inserted in the margin. And then the whole confession was committed once more to a review of the three committees, who made report to the Assembly of such further amendments as they thought necessary; which being agreed to by the house, it was sent to the press, May 11, 1647. Mr. Byfield, by order of the House of Commons, delivered to the members the printed copies of this confession of faith, with scripture notes, signed—

CHARLES HERLE, Prolocutor,

COR. BURGESS, } Assessors.
HERBERT PALMER, }

HENRY ROBOROUGH, } Scribes.
ADONERAM BYFIELD, }

And because no more were to be given out at present, every member subscribed his name to the receipt thereof.

The House of Commons began their examination of this confession, May 19, when they considered the whole first chapter, article by article; but the disturbances which arose between the parliament and the army interrupted their proceeding the whole summer; but when these were quieted, they resumed their work, and October 2, ordered a chapter of the confession of faith at least to be debated every Wednesday, by which means they got through the whole before the end of March following; for at a conference with the House of Lords, March 22d, 1647-8, the Commons presented them with the confession of faith, as passed by their House, with some alterations: they agreed with the Assembly in the doctrinal part of the confession, and ordered it to be published, June 20th, 1648, for the satisfaction of the foreign churches, under the title of Articles of Religion, approved and passed by both Houses of Parliament, after advice had with an Assembly of Divines, called together by them for that purpose.

§ V.—II. Badness in respect of Matter.

For the proof of this, see the body of the work, which, from first to last, is directed to this office.

§ VI.—III. Badness in respect of Form.

For the proof of this, see § 8. in which the consciousness, of its unfitness in this respect, is proved—proved upon those, who persevere but the more strenuously in thus forcing into the mouths of babes, almost as soon as they cease to be sucklings, the pill, the bitterness of which is all the while endeavoured to be gilded over by a covering of praise.

§ VII. Of the Badness of this Formulary in respect of Matter, the Framers of it were conscious.

Of this consciousness the proof consists—partly in the real badness of it, as displayed in the body of the present work; partly in the fact of their avoiding, as above, to afford, for the faithfulness of their picture, these securities, which the nature of the case presented to every man's view as well as their own,—and which, by the framers of the Scottish Catechisms, and their collaborators the English Puritans, were accordingly, as hath been seen, (§ 4.) attached to their works.

§ VIII. Of the Badness of this Formulary, in respect of Faithfulness, Matter, and Form, the Imposers of it on the Schools are conscious.

I. First, of the badness of that one of its features, which consists in its being destitute of the above-mentioned necessary securities for faithfulness.

To the weight of those considerations, which, to all thinking minds, could not but have been present from the first,—and by which, as above shewn, the conduct of the Scottish Church, as applied to this very species of instrument, had, in so conspicuous a manner and degree, been governed,—let any one judge whether, at this time of day, it was possible for the rulers of any Christian church to escape being sensible.

But the proof rests not in any such universally applicable presumption. Behold it in their own practice.

Of the new system of religion, which, as above seen, under the name of Chief Truths of the Christian Religion, out of the funds raised by subscription, the Church of England Bishops pay subscribers for adopting, mention has there been made. In this “Catechetical Instruction” (for such it is, and on the title-page is said to be)—meaning a discourse in the form of question and answer,—may be seen a cluster of references—nor that a scanty one—with which each answer is garnished.

Of the intimation thus, howsoever unintendedly afforded, what is the import?—What but an acknowledgement—an acknowledgement, tacit indeed, but not the less expressive—that, in administering, in the instance of the old catechism, in lieu of the matter of the Bible, the produce of their own brains,—without a shadow of proof, either of its being in reality, or so much as of its being by them really regarded as being, a fair deduction from the text of the sacred original,—the course taken by their predecessors, and persevered in by these their successors, was altogether an unwarrantable one.

Of this so newly adopted practice what has been the object? Manifestly to do what was found convenient,—and deemed as little inconsistent as might be, with the spirit of their policy and the constant tenor of their practice,—towards providing themselves, if not with a defence, with something like a screen, behind which to hide themselves, in this one instance, from a reproach so just and obvious.

But, of this expedient what is the fruit?—Justification? No: nor any thing but greater condemnation. Except another tacit and unintended, but not the less indisputable, acknowledgement—an acknowledgement of the insufficiency and inaptitude of the old mumpsimus, on the back of which they thus clap this their new sumpsimus,—what good purpose does it answer?—None whatever. The passages to which these references are made—had these passages themselves, as in the Scottish Catechism, been subjoined in terminis,—such appendages as these would indeed have served as tests—as tests of the justness of the interpretation put all along upon the sacred original, and of the legitimacy of the inferences deduced from it: as tests of the justness of the representation all along actually so given, and thereby as securities against misrepresentation and spurious addition. In that case, to no eye would the alleged copy ever have presented itself, but to that same eye would the test of the faithfulness of that same copy have presented itself at that same time.

Such would have been the case, if, for their accompaniment and support, the passages respectively referred to had been added to these references. But these references, as they stand naked—these strings of figures, by all which put together, no idea but those of number and place is conveyed—to any such good purpose, or to any other good purpose, in what way is it that they can serve? To no eye, at the same time with the pretended picture, will the test thus pretended to be applied be present:—to no eye, at the same time with the pretended picture, will the sacred original be ever thus made visible. Of the thousands and myriads of eyes, under which these dead-letter figures are placed, by how many is there any the least probability, that, between the original and this pretended miniature, any confrontation will ever be made?

By curiosity or sectarian jealousy, suppose here and there an individual—suppose this or that professional, or any other scrutinizer, led to undertake the confrontation. By this eye suppose—what at least, for argument's sake, may be supposed—an instance of unfaithfulness discovered. What matters it?—What care the authors of it? Nothing. The answer is ready. So many men, so many minds. Of the subject in question, many parts are confessedly as obscure and “hard to be understood”—so St. Peter says of St. Paul—as they are sacred and important. Such and such are the interpretations, which to those eyes presented themselves as the true and proper ones. As for themselves, as men, they are but fallible. Be it so: but, as rulers of the Church of England, theirs is the interpretation, which, at every hazard, the other members—the subject-members of the same Church—are, as well by law as by conscience, bound to follow.

Here then are references: but here are no quotations. What was wanted was—the semblance of a test: what could not be endured was—the reality of a test. Meantime the acknowledgement remains: the acknowledgement given of the need of a test:—of the need of such a test in such a case:—the untrustworthiness of every picture, the faithfulness of which, as towards the original, bears not this sort of testimony upon the face of it. This acknowledgement stares their old catechism in the face, and testifies against it.

Another truth, these Chief truths serve to prove, and this too without the need of any very close inspection. This is—that innovation is not regarded by them as a plea in bar, where the matter of it accords with their convenience: for example, that, if it did accord with their convenience, means would not be wanting for the abolishing of this old Catechism, or for the reform of some of the acknowledged imperfections, of that Liturgy, of which it makes a part:—not to speak of any such radical reform, as that of laying that same body of solid laudanum upon the shelf.

The sort of regard, shewn by these upholders of the Church of England religion to this handiwork of their predecessors—to this substitute to the book containing the religion of Jesus—compare with it (for the contrast is not an un instructive one) the sort of regard, paid by these same persons to that sacred book itself.

In the Catechism they continue to exhibit—and by their own sole authority (this of course regards the whole corporation from the beginning, and not merely the present members) a substitute to the Bible:—to both Testaments, Old and New. The words, from beginning to end, their own: not one quoted from the original: not one so much as referred to, from beginning to end, except it be the obscure allusion to that part of the Jewish Code, in which is contained what are called the Ten Commandments: not a syllable, by which, in any mind, to which the matter was not made known from other sources, so much as a suspicion could be produced, that any such book had ever been in existence.

So much for the Bible. Its substitute was not to be so dealt with. In their lesser book, called The Broken Catechism—otherwise called The Catechism broken down into Short Sentences,—of these sentences, not so much as a single group is ever brought to view, till after the correspondent part of the original has been brought to view, in its original and unbroken state.

It is not, therefore, through ignorance or heedlessness, that, in so far as it is pursued, the plan of substitution is kept up. Where regard is to be manifested, full well do they know how to manifest it: to the object to which it suits their purpose to pay regard, the strictest regard is paid accordingly: to the object, which it suits their purpose to treat with neglect, neglect, not to say contempt, continues to be manifested: it continues to be, as all along it has been, kept in the back ground.

Even in the case of merely human laws, regulating the comparatively insignificant concerns of the present life, what abridgment-maker is ever either presumptuous enough, or careless enough, to neglect giving to his work this test, and in his opinion this proof and certificate of fidelity? If such were the marks of presumption or negligence, apparent on the face of his work, what regard would any one pay to it?

II. Of what remains to be proved of this evil consciousness, the proof will not consume much time.

The thing, viz. the Old Catechism, is bad in matter. Those by whom it is thus forced into the mouths of these innocents are conscious of its being so. The proof of evil consciousness is their forcing into the same tender and much injured mouths their newly made up bolus—the “Catechetical Instruction” above spoken of.

The Old Catechism is what it is: this cannot be denied. “Excellent” in all unassignable particulars—“excellent” as the church from which it sprung is “excellent”—still, on one point, viz. that of plainness, it was not altogether so perfect as could be wished. By this new Catechetical Instruction, all that remained to fill up the measure of excellence is supplied. In this fruit of still maturer wisdom, “the Chief truths of the Christian Religion,” (says the title-page,) “are explained to the MEANEST CAPACITY.”

The composition of the indivisible Godhead—the identity of the numbers three and one, when applied to the same object—the impregnable truth of a cluster of self-contradictory propositions—all this, and abundance more of the same stamp, made plain to the meanest capacity!—Of the assurance thus given what is the result?—That if at the time when this new Catechism is first put into his hand,—much more if, at any more advanced period of his life,—any thing like a doubt should, in the breast of any one of these hapless children, happen to arise, respecting the meaning of any one of the things thus completely and finally explained, a further assurance he thus receives is—that his “capacity” is meaner than “the meanest.” But, in relation to his own capacity, to no man is it in any degree agreeable, that any such opinion should be entertained:—entertained either by himself or others. To avoid every such unpleasant sensation, what then is the course he takes?—To save himself from being seen by himself not to understand it, he strives to smother doubts as fast as they spring up: to save himself from being seen by others to be in any such humiliating condition, whatsoever of these doubts, spite of all his efforts, happen now and then to spring up, he takes effectual care to keep them to himself. And thus the grand and avowed object of the Bishop of London’s labours—the prostration of understandings and wills—is accomplished.

In some such way it is that the Chief truths of the Church of Rome’s religion gain credence. In this same way it is, that the Chief truths of the Church of England religion—including the truths of chief importance to its rulers—gain credence.

This Catechism—this antique breviary—Of all the persons, Reverend, and Very Reverend, and Right Reverend, and Most Reverend—Honourable and Right Honourable—who, with admiration so passionate, and zeal so ardent, concur in the worship of this substitute to the Bible,—is there a single one, who, at this time of day, would be capable of giving birth to a composition in every respect so ill-penned—in every respect so ill-adapted to every useful purpose—so well adapted to so many mischievous ones? Is there so much as a single one, who, were it now brought forward for the first time, would bring himself, or could be brought, so much as to set his name to it?—The ensuing Examination read, let any one of them ask himself this question, and then answer it. In print he will not venture to answer it. No: explicitly he will not venture to answer it. But implicitly his answer to it is already given: given, by his concurrence in the slipping in of this Supplement to it.

III. Thirdly and lastly, the thing is bad in form. In its sentences it is long-winded. In virtue of this imperfection—not to speak of others—it has at all times been bad for all men, for all women, as well as for all children. But at the present time, and for the present purpose—for the children who are to be instructed according to the new system—it is more particularly bad.

Of this badness likewise, those who not the less anxiously persevere in forcing it into those tender mouths, are fully, howsoever reluctantly, conscious.

Of this branch of their evil-consciousness, as in the case of the foregoing ones, the proof is furnished by their own practice.

To this altogether indigestible and scarcely swallowable morsel, in its entire state, they have, as abovementioned (§ 4.)—they have—what?—substituted?—No: but added—the same in a mixed state. To the entire Catechism, they have added, that of which the title at length is—The Church Catechism broken into Short Questions: or—to call it by its more commodious and only usual name—the name by which also they themselves style it—The Broken Catechism.

This short name is an apt and useful one: the work itself is, in this its characteristic respect, well-adapted to its purpose.—But, whether it be in its minced or its unminced state that the mass presents itself, the parable of the broken reed will stick by it.

Note, that, before they are allured thus to feed upon the mass, in the shape of minced meat, they are forced (as hath been seen)—these tender mouths—to swallow it whole. Yes: twice to swallow it whole. Such is the relief afforded by the breakage.

That, in so far as concerns form, the alteration thus made is an improvement—and that a most capital one—is out of all dispute. Compared with the old Catechism, in so far as concerns form, this new one is therefore an eminently good thing: but this it could not be, if that original were not as eminently a bad one.

§ IX. The Religion thus taught by the Rulers of the Church of England, is not the Religion of Jesus.

In this state of things,—the religion, which in these same schools is thus taught, is it the religion of Jesus?—Not it indeed—it is a quite different thing. Of this proposition, the proof rests—not on any points of detail—not on inferences drawn, on such or such particular subjects, from such or such particular texts. It applies not to this or that opinion—to this or that word. It goes to the whole together. The ground it rests upon is the broadest of all grounds: viz. that, administered as they are, and as above they have been seen to be administered, the portions of discourse thus forced into the minds, or at least into the mouths, of these poor children, form altogether a substitute—not a mere additament, but a complete substitute—to the religion, which would be composed of the discourses of Jesus.

Not being the religion of Jesus, whose religion then is that substitute?—By invention, so far as depends upon this Catechism, it is the religion of the authors of this Catechism; so far as depends upon the Thirty-nine Articles, of those who respectively gave the force of law to that Catechism and to the Thirty-nine Articles: by adoption, it has, in each succeeding portion of time, been the religion of their successors—the rulers of that portion of time,—and is now the religion of their successors—the rulers of this present time.

That part of the religion, which is contained in the Thirty-nine Articles not being at present in question,—(for how consistently soever it might be, it appears not that any such security for orthodoxy, as that of a subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles, has yet been put about the necks of the National Society's Scholars),—what, on the present occasion, remains to be said on this subject, will have to confine itself to this Catechism.

In such a place—administered to minds so circumstanced—how repugnant soever to the original—any Exposition,—any discourse, professing to give an account of that original,—supersedes it. The child is to understand it—Yes: but this is the sense in which he is to understand it. The child is to believe it—Yes: but this is the sense in which he is to believe it.

Of any persuasion that can be entertained by the child, where is the immediate source? In any assurance given by the person whose discourse the original was? No: but in the assurances given by the person, by whom the original, if it be the original,—the exposition, if it be the exposition,—is put into the child's hands. The person who is present to his senses, in whose presence he stands, and by whose authority he is governed, he is the person—in the nature of the case he alone can be the person—in whom the trust of the child is placed. The person, whose discourse, the discourse expressed by the sacred original was, is not present to his senses. Unless by mere accident, even the person, whose discourse the exposition is, is not present to his senses. The person—the only person—constantly and necessarily present to his senses, is the Schoolmaster, by whom the exposition is put into his hands. A person incidentally present to his senses, may indeed be this or that person in still higher authority, by whom the school is now and then visited, and to whose authority the child sees the master bow. But these two—the master and the master's superior—are, to this purpose, one.

Now then, by all these powers, it is either in lieu of, or at any rate in conjunction with, the sacred original,—that into the child's hands the non-sacred exposition is thus put. If, in lieu of it, then clearly the exposition alone, and not the sacred original, is the object of his faith. In the words of the exposition, and in the discourse of those, by whom and by whose authority, it is put into his hands—in these alone, and not in any words of him whose words the words of the sacred original purport to exhibit—are to be seen or heard the sources of their faith.

But even if, at the same time with the exposition, the sacred original be put into the child's hands,—still, as above—still, in effect it is as if the exposition had, without the original, been put into his hands. Say to a child—“this paper (No. I.) is “not to be believed, but in the sense, which, in this “paper (No. II.) is put upon it”—in words, this is telling the child to believe in No. I.: but, in effect, it is just the same thing as telling him to pay no regard to it.

If the sacred original thus dealt with be the religion of Jesus, what is it then but mere mockery, to call the religion thus taught the religion of Jesus? It is the religion of the persons, under whose authority the Exposition is put into the child's hands.

The person of Jesus is not present to them: hence it is, therefore, that his person is not the object of their mockery. But the words of Jesus are present to them: and these words are not in effect less truly the objects of this their mockery, than his person was the object of the mockery of those men, by whom, while on the cross, he was hailed “King of the Jews.”

A thing conceivable indeed is—that the sense, put upon the original by the Exposition, is the sense that truly belongs to it:—in a word, that it is a faithful one: and, in so far as this is the case, so far (except it be the absurdity and presumption of putting men's word above God's word,—the oppression thus exercised upon those who are compelled to do the same,—and the evil example set in both these ways) no mischief is done.

Note, that the less advanced the age in which the Exposition was penned, the less the probability of its being a faithful one. But, be it ever so faithful, where is the advantage that a copy has over the original?

Meantime, the security for this faithfulness, where is it?—The ground made for its being a faithful one—the evidence of its faithfulness, where is it?

One such security—one such ground—one such evidence, and no other—does the nature of the case admit of, and what is it?—Nothing can be more obvious.

This security—need it any more be mentioned? is no other than the test above brought to view (§ 3 and 8) consisting of the undiscontinued assortment of quotations: of quotations, supported by a correspondent accompaniment of references. But—once more—under the full view and consciousness of its importance, this test, which the framers of the Catechism knew better than to give, hath, as hath been seen all along, been studiously avoided to be given by their successors, and more especially by the present generation of their successors.*

* So in the case of Subscriptions. To the extent of the whole of the matter contained in the Exposition, the moment any discourse, purporting to be the Exposition of an original, by which a system of religion is delivered—the moment any such paper is subscribed to, as prescribing the true and only true sense of the original, the religion delivered in the original is renounced. The object of the belief thus declared is—not the original, in any part of it, but the Exposition. Suppose—(for argument sake, at any rate, a supposition to this effect may be put)—between the original and the Exposition, suppose, in any part, a difference—insomuch that, to the extent of the difference, if the one is adhered to, the other is renounced. In such case, which is adhered to? Evidently the Exposition:—for that is the instrument subscribed to:—which is renounced? Evidently the original, for the original is not subscribed to. Be your original what it may—be your Exposition what it may—thus will the matter be. In the present case, the original is the Bible—the Exposition is the set of Church of England Articles. What follows?—Need it be repeated? To the whole extent of that formula, the religion of its unknown penners is by every such subscriber adhered to—the religion of Jesus renounced.

Thus would the matter stand, even though, in respect of the efficiency of the means respectively

It is therefore mere mockery, to call this part of the religion of Church of Englandists the religion of Jesus. It is the religion of the penners of the Thirty-nine Articles,—adopted, and down to this time received and sanctioned, by the several successive rulers, for the time being, of the Established Church of England.

So in Scotland. What is it that Church-of-Scotlandists believe in? Is it the religion of Jesus?—No: that they are precluded from believing in by their Catechisms. It is the religion of those who penned, and of those who, since them, have been subscribers to those Catechisms:—in one word it is the religion of the Kirk.

This is not the less true, be the discipline of the Church of Scotland ever so much better (and, even before these pages are employed for the inculcating them, the Bible and the Catechism were suffered to stand upon the same level. But how wide this supposition is of the truth has been seen already.

Question to my Lords the Bishops—and to the Lay-Saints, Co—or Sub—Rulers of the self-styled “Excellent Church.”—Suppose two Books, the Koran and the Bible: each of them furnished with an accompaniment, consisting of an Exposition, composed of a Catechism, injected by the new engine into the mind in its infant state, and a set of Articles, his belief of which, with the starvation pistol at his throat, each youth, at his entrance upon the road to preferment, is, by a writing under his hand, forced to declare. The Catechism and Articles attached to the Koran are—every proposition of them—so many extracts composed of the most essential parts of the four Gospels. The Catechism and Articles attached to the Bible are—so many extracts composed of the most essential parts of the Koran. In both cases, as above, the Exposition got at an end, it will be seen to be beyond all comparison better) than that of the Church of England.

Between the two churches, taken at their origin, in this lies the great difference—the great moral difference. Whatever else they were—the authors of the religion of the Church of Scotland were honest men:—men firmly believing,—as the proof given by them, as above, shews,—that every thing contained in the religion of their making was contained in the religion of Jesus: while the others were—what their works, as above, shew them to be.

by heart, and subscribed to,—the original not. For the purification of morals—for the salvation of souls—which of the two apparatus would your Graces, your Lordships, and your Honours, be pleased to recommend in preference?

Suppose your Lordships' temporalities at stake: suppose, moreover, that, for the preservation of "decency" in the Church, these instruments of the renounced "pomps and vanities" were become objects of your Lordships' care.—A law which gave them; accompanied by an interpretation, composed of a judgment, viz., in dernier resort, by a competent court of law, which took them away: or a law which took them away, accompanied with an interpretation, which, in the way just mentioned, restored them: Of the two laws,—all prospect of any others out of the question,—which would be your Lordships' choice?

A reproach, often mentioned, as having been cast, by their adversaries, upon such of the Hollanders, who, in former days, had been admitted as traders into the Japanese Empire, is—that, in the character of a token necessary to their being so admitted, they had trampled on the cross. The case is—that the Romanists, by the course which, in those days, they took for the propagation of their religion in those countries, having rendered their religion an object of alarm to the rulers of that empire,—this ceremony, supposing the story founded in fact, must have had for its object the furnishing what was regarded as conclusive evidence, of their not being votaries of a religion which had rendered itself thus formidable.

For my own part, supposing, under these circumstances, supposing it to contribute any thing towards a prospect of spreading the religion of Jesus in those as yet untried countries, I see not what prevalent objection, unless he were a Catholic, the most zealous missionary need have to the joining in such a ceremony.

In this, if taken by itself, there is nothing more than an imputed—there is not any real and effectual—renunciation of the religion of Jesus. But, by a subscription to any such pretended Exposition and real substitute, as has just been brought to view, not only a renouncement is made, but that renouncement a substantial and effectual one.

PART II.

EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM OF INSTRUCTION—ITS ESTABLISHMENT—ITS BAD TENDENCIES.

EXCLUSION, and compulsory or seductive proselytism,—exclusion of one part of the community of the poor from the benefits of education—compelling the other part to come within the pale of the church dominion,—such are the two intimately connected, though perfectly distinct, and even contrasted, objects, in the pursuit of which this formulary is made a principal instrument.

Presently will be seen the particular measures,—which, in the pursuit of these objects, have been, and continue to be, employed. But, in the mean time, a short view of the circumstances, which led to the application thus made of that instrument, may be not altogether without its use.

In that part of education, which consists in intellectual instruction, the moralist beholds the means of virtue and happiness,—the politician, the means of internal peace, tranquillity, and rational obedience,—the Christian, the means of salvation.

In the new-invented system of instruction, all join in beholding an instrument of matchless and never-before-imagined efficiency, for the communication of that blessing, the value of which is so universally acknowledged.

From the first, the inventor of it—Dr. Bell—from his station in Hindostan, saw in it all these capacities: but many and many were the years that had elapsed, before any the faintest prospect of seeing these capacities ripened into act in these northern regions could have opened to his view.

Lancaster,—the first adopter, and, in some particulars, the improver, of the intellectual mechanism,—saw in it an instrument of that reputation, that opulence, and that power, which he actually attained, and so notoriously and scandalously abused.

His supporters—his generous and public spirited supporters—saw in it those admirable capacities which it possesses, and pushed on the application of it to the utmost of their power.

The personal and perhaps the public views of Lancaster, concurred with the public views of those his supporters, in giving to it the utmost extension possible: in giving to it an extension, which, by no factitious limitation whatsoever, was, or was intended to be, narrowed.

The dew of royal favour—who could have thought it?—the dew of royal favour was seen at length to fall upon the head of this schismatic.

The Bishops—the rulers of that church, of the excellence of which the sole proof lies in the epithet so hardily and unweariedly bestowed upon it—awakened and alarmed by this self-styled Quaker, these rulers, after a sleep of so many years,—during which the invention was experiencing that treatment, of which, at such hands, merit, in proportion to its usefulness, might, from the signs of the times, have assured to itself,—saw in it, as soon as they saw any thing in it, an instrument of defensive—of defensive?—yea, and moreover, by the grace of God, offensive—prosperously offensive—warfare.

The Church was then—as it still is—and, so long as it stands, will ever be—in danger. They saw it was so: they said it was so: they keep saying it is so: nor can falsehood be imputed to them, so long as they confine themselves to the repetition of this dirge.

The Church of England is in danger now, as the Church of Rome was three centuries ago, and exactly from the same cause. The spiritual edifice is in danger, as a wooden one is in danger when the dry-rot is in all its timbers.

The Established Church is in danger, and from all the non-established ones. Why?—Because, in England, from the very nature of the two opposite sorts of Churches, it follows, that, by their respective ministers, in the one case, all their useful duties should to the utmost be fulfilled, in the other that to the utmost those same duties should be neglected. But of this elsewhere.*

In the hands of Lancaster, with or without intention, the Bible, put into action by the instrument invented by Dr. Bell, worked as a battering-ram against the Established Church.—What was to be done? The Bible suited not the purposes of the Church of Rome: they forbade the use of it. As little did it or does it suit the purposes of the present rulers of the Church of England. What then was to be done?—Forbid the use of it they could not. What, in that same view, they could and did was—to teach, in the new way, the old thing which they found already in use—the Catechism:—the Catechism, which, having so long ago been taken in substance from the Church of Rome, was now seen to be so commodiously suited to those same purposes. The Bible was taught by Lancaster: the Church of England Catechism was not taught by him. Should the system of Lancaster spread, and become universal,—the Bible might prevail over the Catechism, and the Church of England might thus be brought to an end.—Dr. Bell was taken up,—and, with the Catechism in his hand, employed to defend the Church against the Bible.

* See Appendix, No. I.

The war thus secretly carried on against the Bible, common prudence forbade to become an open one. Appearances required that some use should appear to be made of it. Selected and cooked up in the manner which was judged a proper one, the Parables, the Miracles, the Discourses of Jesus,—sooner or later, (for, in the accounts published, times are throughout kept, as will be seen, in a state of the most convenient darkness)—sooner or later, some of each, at any rate, were professed at least to be taught.—Taught—but how? Taught by being caused to be repeated? Oh, no: that was a privilege, reserved (as in Part I. § 4, as hath been seen) for compositions of superior worth and use: for the Graces, the Collects, the Prayers, the Catechism,—the Catechism “entire and broken”—of the Church of England. Under the impossibility of suppressing it altogether, the shortness of one short discourse—the Lord’s Prayer—saved it from the exclusion, so resolutely put upon every thing else that was ever said by him.*

By weight of metal, if employed in the working of this new engine—by weight of metal, could a sufficiency of it be provided—not only might the danger, the pressure, be stopped,—but, with hopes—not only of increase of dominion, but of the complete subjugation of the enemy, and the complete extirpation of schism—the war carried into his quarters.

* Second Report of the National Society, anno 1814, p. 196.

Open force could not be applied. The Lancaster Schools were indeed Meetings, and any meetings might be converted into Conventicles. But, every where but at Oxford, Conventicles were protected by the Toleration Act: protected in some sort, by that law, but still more effectually by the spirit of the times,—or, to speak more plainly, by the ever encreasing multitude and intelligence of the Dissenters.

Other methods were therefore to be resorted to. The rival manufacture—the manufacture of minds—was to be crushed by weight of capital. Capital was accordingly to be the instrument: competition, the mode of working it: competition, the mode;—and that competition such as should be an irresistible one.

The exertions were unexampled: had the object been less scandalous, the term miraculous might almost have been ventured to be given to them.

The Convocation system was revived. The Lower House was indeed untaxable. But the Upper House—the Bishops, headed by the Archbishops—taxed themselves. Taxing themselves individually, they did in this way what they could not have done by taxing themselves collectively—they taxed laymen along with them. The Alarm Bell rung: and all who either felt, or felt themselves under the obligation of appearing to feel, for an Ecclesiastical Establishment, the gigantic abuses of which form so powerful a rampart for the comparatively pigmy abuses of the Civil, flocked round the Church and laid their offerings upon its altars.

The difficulty was to get the money. The money once got, the means were obvious. All that was wanting was a set of brazen fronts, and well seared consciences. Of these there was no want; nor under such a system ever can be.

Search the Liturgy all over, and from among those of its formularies that are peculiar to the Church of England, pick out that which is the most palpably absurd and mischievous. Set up a number of Free Schools upon the new system,—and among the conditions of admittance, require, at the hands of parents, a consent that their children shall receive a thorough impregnation with the matter of this formulary.—What follows?—Evidently this: viz. that, by all who are not reconciled to the abomination by blind habit, or won over by prospects of temporal advantage, the proffered boon will be rejected.

Here then comes already into view exclusion and proselytism, the double fruit of so obvious and efficient a measure: two intimately connected advantages,—so flattering, so soothing—the one to the irascible, the other to the concupiscible appetite:—the enemies of the Church cast out into outer darkness;—the golden sceptre held out to those and those alone, whom repentance should lay prostrate, to help form her footstool. Who could say, to what a length a consummation so devoutly to be wished, might—always by the grace of God—in time extend itself?

Such were the promised effects of the plan, upon the interest of the Church:—meaning always the governing part of the Church. The effects of it upon the interest of the community at large were of a very different complexion. But these have never been worth a thought.

I. First as to the exclusion.

The persons most immediately, and therefore most obviously, suffering are the persons thus excluded. But these form but a part of the community, and that the smallest part: the persons next in sufferance form the whole of it: nor, at the same time, are the excluded part excluded from their share in this sufferance; so that their sufferance comes upon them in a double shape.

Destitute of intellectual instruction, man, even in the bosom of the most civilized country, is often found appearing in no better a character than that of a savage. Of the Hulks, and the Penal Colonies—not to speak of the home Prisons—the population is, for the most part, composed of human beings thus abandoned to ignorance, vice, and wretchedness. Such, as to the far greater part, appears to be the state of the population under the Church of England.

Under the Church of Scotland, a person altogether destitute of intellectual instruction is hardly to be found. Upon a careful examination of the Returns that have been made to Parliament,—allowance made for difference of population,—compared with that of Scotland, the number of persons in England within the same period, committed on criminal charges, was found to be as rather more than eleven to one.

II. Next as to the compulsory proselytism.

Applied to the dissenting part of the population, corresponding to the differences in respect of education, situation, and temper, which the regulation chanced to meet with on the part of different individuals, would be the effect produced by it. Some would not be able to prevail upon themselves to become purchasers of the proffered benefit, at the price thus demanded for it: in all these instances exclusion would be the result. Others, unable to withstand the temptation, would sacrifice their offspring to the inviting Moloch.

But by any profit thus reaped from the sacrifice, the magnitude of that sacrifice would not, in all eyes, be lessened. In some it would rather be increased: and of the sort of sensation thus producible in a religious and reflecting breast, memory, with little aid from imagination, has sufficed—in one instance at least—to present a picture.

The larger that part of the population, by which the benefit came in this and other ways to be purchased, the deeper the humiliation of such as should be left destitute of it: and thus, in the character of an instrument of compulsory proselytism, the benefit would continue to operate with continually increasing force. Such was and is the Machiavelism of this tyranny.

If there be a maxim of government, thoroughly rooted in the honest and thinking part of the English public mind,—one might even venture to say in by far the greater portion of that mind,—it is this:—that, at any rate in a country, the population of which is civilized in the degree in which that of the British Isles is civilized the securing the temporal well being of mankind—this, and not the salvation of souls, is the proper ground—the only proper ground—for the application of the powers of government to matters of religion.

Is it then that an eternity of infinite felicity or infinite misery, is of less importance than three or fourscore years of chequered existence?—No: but that, of the opposite doctrine,—supposing it but pursued with consistency,—instead of the object aimed at, tyranny—everlasting and universal tyranny—tyranny worse than Romish, followed by war for the purpose of universal subjection—would be the result. Instead of the object aimed at? Yes: for, even at this price, the attainment of it—so far from being promoted—would be counteracted. If for example, either in England, Scotland, or

Ireland,—Dissenters from the established Church being termed Schismatics,—Schismatics were to be treated, as the present, pursuing the maxims of the late, Bishop of London, calls upon Government to treat them—treated as men of “guilt”—treated as criminals. With sword in one hand, and purse in the other, Englishmen would be to be sent to Scotland to convert Scotchmen to Episcopacy,—Scotchmen at the same time into England to convert Englishmen to Presbyterianism,—while on the like mission both together were sent to Ireland,—there to be kept, till, reclaimed from the errors of the Church of Rome, the Irish were, to a man, made to acknowledge, in the same breath, the unrivalled excellence of the English Episcopalian and Scottish Presbyterian Churches.

The thing, in the production of which the powers of Government are on this occasion professed to be employed, is—religion: but, if insincerity, mendacity, and mischievous obsequiousness be vices, the thing, and the only thing, in the production of which they are really and effectually employed is—vice. On the field of religion, the thing, to which, on this occasion, these powers are specifically employed, is—the production of a declaration of persuasion. But, in so far as the declaration so made is true, whatever is thus bestowed—whether it be in the shape of reward or punishment—is spent without need, effect, or use:—spent in causing that to have place, which has place already. In what way then, when thus employed, are they employed with effect?—In one way, and in one way only:—in the production of such declarations in the case in which they are not true: in the production of mendacity: in the production of vice: in the production of that vice, which is the instrument of every other vice, as well as of every sort of crime.

That, which causes a persuasion to be really entertained, is that which applies to the understanding. That which applies to the understanding is argument. Employing argument for securing welfare, whether temporal or eternal,—whether through persuasions entertained, or by other means,—is a course which,—after subtraction made of all punishment and all reward, applied to the will as above,—would remain no less open to rulers than to subjects: and, on this ground these same rulers can not but act to prodigious advantage. Not to speak of punishment—in their hands, though in an indirect, though not the less efficient way, applicable to this, as to any other purpose—in the production of argument they are free, and will in any case remain free, to employ the powers of reward—and that without need of any expense on purpose—in a quantity greater than any that to the same purpose can be applied by any individual, or association of individuals;—reward, to an amount altogether unlimited:—and in this same way are they continually producing argument, true and false, believed or not believed to be true by him who utters it,—and at all times in any quantity they choose to have. For money, for power, for dignity,—for the mere hope, however distant, of any of these good things,—argument is to be sold and may be bought by them, at all times, on any subject, and for the use of any side. And thus, in their hands,—without need of their employing their powers in the production of vice,—argument, in support of virtue, religion, and happiness, may if that be their real object, be purchased and set to work, with a degree of advantage altogether matchless.

But, though the best arguments that the nature of the case will admit of, and the state of the public mind, at the time supplies, is always at their command,—yet, when the best arguments that the nature of the case admits of on their side, are good for nothing, argument will not suit their purpose: and thus it is, that in spite of the immorality, and in spite of the just reproach,—in support of their cause, whatever it is,—and with a degree of energy and constancy, rising with the degree of badness, which, even in their own view of it, belongs to it,—thus it is that, according as opportunities and means present themselves, they persist in employing the powers of reward, and even of punishment, in support of it.

Thus then is an exclusion put at once upon the children of all those parents, in whose view of the matter the absence of all such instruction, as is not to be had but through the channel in question, is better than the presence. As to what ground there may be for any such view, it is what the body of this work is designed to shew.

All this while, let it not, however, be imagined, that to the use of this or any other such comparatively indirect means, the exertions made for this double and doubly pernicious purpose have been confined.

From their own accounts of their own proceedings, take the following extracts:—

I. In p. 187, of the National Society's Second Report, dated in 1813, and 1814, of a string of Resolutions, eight in number, which, on some day of the month of February, 1812, (day not named) are, in No. IV. of the Appendix, printed under the title of PLAN of UNION,* that which stands eighth and last is in the words following:—

“ That the Society itself being instituted principally for educating the Poor in the doctrine and discipline of the Established Church, according to the excellent Liturgy and Catechism provided for that purpose, it is required that all the Children received into these Schools be instructed in this Liturgy and Catechism, and that, in conformity with the directions in that Liturgy,

* In Report I. p. 27, without Month or Year.

“ the Children of each School do constantly at“ tend Divine Service in their parish Church, or “ other place of public worship under the Esta“ blishment, wherever the same is practicable, on “ the Lord’s Day ; unless such reason for their “ non-attendance be assigned, as shall be satis“ factory to the persons having the direction of “ that School ; and that no religious tracts be ad“ mitted into any School, but such as are, or shall “ be contained in the Catalogue of the SOCIETY “ FOR PROMOTING CHRISTIAN KNOWLEDGE.”

—: “ T. T. WALMSLEY, Sec.”

II. In p. 197, of this second Report, (it is not in the first) without introduction or other explanation, comes an article, of which the following is a reprint.

NO. IX.

Form of Certificate for Masters.

NATIONAL SOCIETY CENTRAL SCHOOL.

“ This is to certify that who is desirous “ of being admitted into the NATIONAL CENTRAL “ SCHOOL, for the purpose of learning the System “ of Education there practised, is a Member of the “ UNITED CHURCH of ENGLAND and IRELAND as “ by law established, and of a sober and religious “ life and conversation.

Signed

Rector, Vicar, or } of Curate

“ * * * It is requested that no Clergyman will sign

“ the above Certificate as a matter of form, but that “ he will make the strictest enquiries into the cha“ racter of the person applying for his signature, “ and into the regularity of attendance upon the “ Service of the Church.”

A curious circumstance is—if interest-begotten bigotry were any thing less than stone-blind—if it were capable of reading any thing that accorded not with its own purposes—a curious enough circumstance is—that, in that very fabrication of their own, which with such anxious care they substitute to the Bible, they may read their own condemnation:—they may read the condemnation of that very system of exclusion, which, by means of it, they are there so diligently putting in practice.

Question in the Catechism. “ What dost thou “ chiefly learn in these Articles of thy Belief?
 “ Answer. First, I learn to believe in God the “ Father, &c. Secondly, in God the Son, who “ hath redeemed me and all mankind.”

Questions thereupon in the “ Broken Catechism.” “ Question. What did God the Son for you?
 Answer. He redeemed me. Question. Did he redeem any besides you? Answer. Yes; all mankind.”

By Jesus himself, the benefit bestowed by his coming was intended—was, according to these very formularies of theirs, intended—for all mankind. By these rulers of the Church of England is that same benefit intended for all mankind?—So far from its being so, it is not (witness these exclusionary laws) intended for any but a comparatively minute portion of those who profess the religion of Jesus. Is it intended for all mankind? No: not so much as for all Christians. For all Christians? No: not so much as for all Protestants. For whom then is it intended by them? Not for so much as a single soul, other than those who, in the character of subjects to their governance, are content to be perpetual contributors to those riches, in which they put their trust; to that power which they abuse; to those factitious dignities, with which they deck their names; to that purple, and that fine linen, in which they strut; to those pomps and vanities, which in their babe-and-suckling state they renounced, and which they are seen with so much anxiety mounting guard upon, in their Church regnant and Church militant state.

The instruction which the Gospel contains, is it, or is it not conducive, to private virtue, to private happiness, to rational obedience, to internal tranquillity, to external peace, to salvation of souls? If not, then why, at all this pains and expense, profess to teach it?—If yes, then why refuse to so much as a single soul the benefit of it?

“Perish bodies! perish souls! Yea, in any “ numbers let them perish,—rather than a feather “ should risk the being shaken from the down on “ which we repose!”—Such, ye hypocrites, are your vows. Can you deny them? Behold them in your own acts: behold them in those acts of yours, which are now staring you in the face.

PART III.

EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM—GROUNDS FOR THE HOPE THAT THE APPROBATION OF IT IS NOT GE-NERAL.

THESE grounds are composed of two articles of documentary evidence: one of them direct; the other circumstantial evidence.

The direct is furnished by an express declaration of Sir Thomas Bernard.

Of the ardency and activity of the zeal of the worthy Baronet, in favour of the new instruction system; and at the same time of his orthodoxy, in the character of a son of the Church of England,—without which latter character, his testimony, however respectable in itself, would scarcely be applicable to the present purpose,—that work of his, in which so interesting an account is given of the Schools, instituted for this purpose at Durham, by his friend the Bishop, affords ample proof: and, considering that intimacy, the marks of which are upon the face of that publication so apparent, it seems as difficult as it would be unpleasant to suppose, that in the opinions and assertions, so strenuously, as well as plainly manifested by one of the two friends, the other should be altogether without a share.

In proof of the disapprobation—not to say the abhorrence—with which the system of exclusion and compulsory proselytism is, or at least not long ago was, regarded by Sir Thomas Bernard, I have the satisfaction of finding the two altogether explicit passages, which here follow.

They are, both of them, copied from a printed paper, signed Thomas Bernard, and, in the character of a preface, to a work “On the Education of the Poor,” published by “The Society for bettering the Condition of the Poor.”*

In the first of them stands in the text the following passage.

“With such abundant sources of corruption,” (says the worthy Baronet, p. 52) “where can the patriot, who desires the happiness, or even the existence of his country,—where can he look for security,—to what can he direct his hopes, but to education, formed on the general principles of Christianity,—bestowed impartially upon all our fellow-subjects, and connected in amity

* It constitutes the first part of “a Digest of the Report of that Society,” and contains a selection of those articles which have a reference to education. The date of it is London, 1809.

“with our civil and religious establishment?” and to this passage is subjoined, in form of a note, the following one. “When I speak of a national system of education, connected in amity with our religious establishment,—and while I wish it to receive the aid, and be under the direction of that establishment, I do not mean that the system shall be subservient to its power, or instrumental of conversion to its tenets. To deal out education to the poor, only on the terms of religious conformity, is, in my opinion, a species of persecution, differing not greatly from the supplying of bread to the hungry and necessitous on similar conditions,—and being as defective in true policy as it is unjust in principle.”

In the other passage—(it is in a preceding page, p. 48 of that same Preface)—speaking of “the Charter Schools in Ireland, I have been very much misinformed,” (says he) “if the impolitic and intolerant condition, on which education in them is given to the Catholic poor, contributes so much to conversion as to violent and bitter prejudice against the Established Church.” Such are the opinions and affections expressed—and by whom?—Not merely by an individual, but by an individual writing and publishing them in the character of the organ of a numerous society—The Society for the Bettering the Condition of the Poor:—the members of it distinguished—most, if not all of them—scarcely more by this testimony of their benevolent zeal, in behalf of this most important object, than by their attachment to the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England.*

* The text was on the point of being sent to the press when, in the person of the Bishop of Norwich, the paper of the day brought to view the cheering spectacle of so illustrious an addition to the declared adversaries of the exclusionary system.

Morning Chronicle, 10th May, 1816.

[Advertisement.]

PUBLIC EDUCATION.—The Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of Norwich will preach a sermon on Sunday next, at the parish church of St. Botolph, Aldersgate, London, before his Royal Highness the Duke of Kent, the Right Honourable the Lord Mayor, and other illustrious personages who have promised to attend on behalf of the Royal Institution, for the gratuitous education, on the British system, of one thousand children of all religious denominations, within the Wards of Aldersgate, Bassishaw, Coleman-Street, Cripplegate, and the parishes of St. Luke and St. Leonard-Shoreditch, Middlesex, established in North-Street, City-Road.

JOHN WILKS, Secretary.

Finsbury-Place, May 7th, 1816.

PART IV.

NATIONAL SOCIETY—GROUNDS FOR REGARDING THE EXCLUSIONARY ACTS AS SPURIOUS, AND ITS REPORTS AS PURPOSELY DECEPTIOUS.

§ I. Cause and Ground of Suspicion as to Authenticity.

FOR the hope that the approbation bestowed upon the exclusionary system has not been general, the direct ground has just been seen. The circumstantial ground is of a very different cast. It involves in it the character of a whole society.—And what society?—A domineering, an overbearing society—self-designated, as if by a charter, by the imposing and exclusive name of The National Society:—a society, of which the whole bench of English Bishops form—what?—a part?—Yes, in appearance indeed but a part: but in effect, as will be seen, the whole.

The ordinances by which all children, whose parents will not suffer them to be impregnated with the matter of the Church of England Liturgy, stand excluded from schools either founded or directed by this society, have been seen.

Of the evidence now to be produced, the tendency is to shew—that of the whole business of this society the conduct has been throughout, and in particular in what concerns the above-explained exclusionary system, a tissue of imposture: of imposture, and if not of direct forgery, something extremely like it, and productive of the same effect: that, of the vast multitude of the members, of whom the society appears to be composed,—and whose minds are supposed to apply themselves, more or less to, and in general, as testified by their contributions, approve of, what is done,—commonly by no more than a minute number, perhaps, in all material instances, and in particular in all instances in which the exclusionary system is concerned, by not more than one for a constancy,—scarce ever by more than two, unless a dependent Secretary, if not a substitute to both, may be taken for a third,—what has been done has been either done or specifically approved.

Should this turn out to be the case, what follows?—That, by conniving at what is done for the purpose of the exclusion, without taking any publicly apparent part in it, the intolerant part of the Bishops and their adherents, being but too probably the major part, contrive in this way to enjoy the benefit of the wickedness, without standing exposed to the disgrace so justly due to it: while the minority,—feeling their inability to oppose the torrent with effect, and,—sensible that, of any appearance of dissension, in a body which has so little reputation to lose, a loss of more or less of that little might be but too natural a consequence, —keep their eyes and ears as fast shut as possible, and leave the whole matter to run on in its own course.

Far be it from this pen to convey any such imputation as shall stretch beyond the proof: and, therefore, it is that this first opportunity is embraced for declaring, that in what the reader will here see, is contained the whole of the ground in which the suspicions of spuriousness, as here stated, have their source. By particular inquiries to have sought for confirmation or disproof, besides danger of betraying the person of the author, would, so far as concerns confirmation, have been mere lost labour. For, what credence could have been expected for anecdotes without a name?

Under these circumstances, what in relation to this subject is here said, is said with the less reserve, because secure, if not against the reproach, at any rate against the guilt, of injustice. In the account given, in the name of the Society itself, of its own proceedings—in that document may be seen the ground, and the only ground, of those inferences, of the legitimacy of which the reader will be the judge. Out of their own mouths, and no others, will, if condemned, their condemnation come.

Not even upon the supposition, that the suspicions here stated as conceived have been altogether erroneous,—for that to every thing that has been done the minds of the majority of the Society have, as far as in so numerous a Society could reasonably have been expected, been actually applied and consenting,—not even upon this supposition, will the evidence (the display here made) be without its fruit, any more than without its ground. The fruit will be—that of the business of the Society the conduct has been,—and, if it be still in the same hands,—still is—in altogether unfit hands: in hands by which, though, by the supposition, without the guilt, they themselves have been exposed—and with them the whole Society of which they are the instruments—to the reproach—nor that, howsoever erroneous, the unjust reproach—of impostors.

§ II. Marks of Authenticity, proper and usual, in Reports of Proceedings of Public Bodies.

1. Members concurring, as evidenced by their signatures—2. Members present—3. Person or persons officiating as Secretary or Secretaries—4. Place of operation—5. Time of operation—Of the proceedings of public bodies in general, and of delegated bodies in particular—under every one of these heads it will be seen to be matter of undeniable use and advantage that entries should be made: and accordingly, under all or most of them, are entries commonly made. Spuriousness and mismanagement—in every instance, in the prevention of one or both these mischiefs will the use of the labour thus bestowed be found.

1. Members concurring, as evidenced by their signatures.—Why this head?—Answer. 1. That it may be seen, that the operations exhibited as performed, and the instruments exhibited as concurred in by the body, if a delegated body—or say a Committee—i. e. by the majority of the members present—had really for their sanction that concurrence. 2. That, by every member of the body at large—the principal body—it may be known, not only of what number of the members of the delegated body, but by what individuals of that body, whatsoever has been done was approved: that thus that responsibility, on the reality and efficiency of which depends the only security for good management, may, in both its stages, be exhibited: viz. the responsibility of the delegated body as towards the principal body; and the responsibility of the principal body itself—as towards the body of which it forms a part, and but a part—viz. the universal body of the community at large.

2. Members present—Why this head? Answer. 1. That it may be seen, that of the whole number of the members, by whom cognizance was taken of the business, the members concurring really formed the majority. 2. That, in case of dissent, it may be seen, not only how many, but who, were on the dissenting side: and thus authorities be not only counted but weighed.

3. Member, or other person officiating as Secretary. Why this head? Answer. In every political body some one person at least is required, in whose instance constant, or otherwise adequate, attendance may be looked for: looked for, viz. in respect of that continuity and uninterruptedness of attention, which is so necessary for the securing—not only the regularity and consistency of their proceedings, but the authenticity of the operations and instruments, represented as duly sanctioned, viz. by having received the necessary concurrence.

Another sort of person, whose signature may, on an occasion of this sort, naturally be looked for—and whose signature is accordingly, on such occasions very commonly attached—is the Chairman. But in this instance the necessity of such signature is not quite so constant and so urgent as in the other.—Why?—1. Because, if, at the meeting in question, of the delegated body in question, there be a person by whom the Chair is said to be taken—a person who is spoken of in the character of Chairman of the meeting,—as, for the sake of good order and authenticity there ought in every instance to be,—of this person if by the Secretary any minutes are taken, mention is naturally made in the minutes: and if, as above, so it be that to the several operations and instruments the signatures of the members concurring are attached, his signature will, of course, appear among the rest.

2. Because, unless in the case of a special regulation to the contrary, that which,—be the number of successive meetings ever so great,—may very well happen, is—that, in any proportion of that number, the person officiating in the character of Chairman may be each time a different one:—and the performance of a duty may much more certainly be depended upon, at the hands of a person certain constantly stationed for that purpose, than at the hands of every individual of an everchanging multitude.

4. Place of Meeting.—Why this head? Answer. That it may be seen that, in each instance, whether fixed or varying, the place, at which the meeting was held, was the place at which all such members, as were inclined to attend, could be apprised that it was to be held: otherwise, such as should be disposed to attend, might in any numbers be deprived of the opportunity, and, in a manner opposite to the wish and opinion of the many, the business be performed by the few, who were in the secret of the intended place.

5. Time of meeting.—Why this head? Answer.

1. For a reason, corresponding to that just mentioned under the head of place: viz. that it may be seen that every member, inclined to attend, had knowledge at what time, as well as what place to attend.

2. That no operation or instrument, to which no due sanction was really attached, may ever, by the secretary, or any other person, be stated as having actually been sanctioned.

If either of the place or of the day the mention be omitted,—much more if of both those necessarily concomitant circumstances all mention be omitted,—at the same time that all mention of any member or members, as having, on the occasion in question, been attendant, is omitted,—what is the consequence? That, by his own single act, with or without the instruction or suggestion of some irresistibly influential person behind the curtain, the secretary feels himself at liberty to manufacture what operation and instrument he pleases. That on no day, at any place where any such business, as is stated to have been done, could lawfully be done, it had ever happened to himself to be present,—thus much is what to every member cannot but be perfectly well known. But, that on some day or other, at some proper place or other, a competent number of other members may not have been present, and giving their concurrence to this same business,—this is what, unless by inquiry, and that inquiry produced by suspicion, seldom can it happen to any member to be apprized of.*

* As to place and time of meeting—if those circumstances respectively are variable, it is matter of necessity for information,—and even if they are fixed it may be matter of convenience for remembrance,—that previous notices should be given: and, by the

§ III. Positions and Plan of Proof—Ends pursued by the Institution—Means employed.

By a number of blanks observed in the dates, a suspicion was very soon produced, that all was not right: and, from a review thereupon made of the whole, the following conclusions seemed to follow: viz. 1. that, of the business represented by the Report as having been done by the persons to whom it is there ascribed, namely, the persons in whom the right of management is represented as being lodged, which persons are the two-and-fifty persons, half Bishops, half Laymen, and other Clergymen, of whom the managing body, styled The General Committee, is stated as composed,—or, for this or that particular purpose, by Sub-Committees nominated by that General Committee,—no part of the business has ever been done, but what has been mere matter of form:—for that every thing which has been in any degree material, and in particular every thing by which the exclusionary system has been established, have been the work of a single person, with or without occasional consultation with another;—of one principal person, or of a secretary, acting under his orders:

avoiding to give such notice, the same frauds may be practised, as those which, when practised, may, by avoiding to make the requisite entries, be concealed. But the subject of notices belongs not to the present purpose.

that, in a word, this most public business has been managed just in the way in which any business belonging exclusively to the person in question in his private capacity would have been conducted: viz. at one or other of his own residences, or at the residence of such his secretary as it might happen: the principal person, incidentally and accidentally talking the matter over with this or that confidential person, who is in the secret; but nothing in any way material being ever done in any such regular form, as that in which by every body it would of course be supposed to have been done.

By a plan of this sort, supposing it conceived and acted upon, a correspondent hue would necessarily be spread over the accounts given of the proceedings. In the few instances, and those insignificant, and purely formal, in which what was done was actually the work of the sort of body to which it is ascribed,—viz. either of the above-mentioned General Committee, or of any particular Committee, or of any person or persons regularly authorized by any such body,—the day and place of meeting, if it were a Committee, or the persons, if they were persons authorized by a Committee—the persons with the times of their respective acts—would be brought to view. On the other hand, in an instance in which what was done was not the work of any such body, or of any person regularly authorized as above, but the private work of a manager behind the curtain,—in any such instance no token of authentication would naturally be, because without a positive and glaring falsehood it could not be, held up to view.

On this supposition, the several instruments, which came to be brought to view, as having received the sanction of the Society, would naturally present themselves under one or other of two appearances:—1. when, for any purpose, it was deemed necessary, that the circumstance of time should be brought to view,—in this case a time would indeed be mentioned: but in expressions still indeterminate, such as those designative of the year and month, without the day of the month. But, in this case, by the supposition, no such business having, on any day of the month in question, really been done, either by the Society itself, or by any person regularly and openly appointed for that purpose—no day could safely be mentioned as the day on which that same business was done: 2. where it was not deemed necessary that the circumstance of time should in any way be brought to view,—in this case no expression designative of time, how loosely soever designative, would be hazarded.

Of these two courses, when on other accounts it seemed admissible, the latter was on one account manifestly the more commodious. On the subject of time suppose nothing said—nothing by which the attention would necessarily be drawn to the subject of time is uttered: whereas, in the only way in which on this supposition it is practicable, let the circumstance of time be mentioned, the danger is—that, by the singularity of the appearance exhibited,—which, on this supposition, consists of blanks, substituted in a case in which generally, not to say universally, figures are employed,—the attention of this or that reader may be drawn to the subject, and suspicion raised:—suspicions such as in fact have been raised, and are here, with the grounds of them, brought to view.

Of the transactions of this Society, at this time, viz. May, 1816, three Reports, and no more than three, have been published. Report I., date on the title-page, 1812: date of the earliest transactions recorded in it, 16th Oct. 1811; latest date discoverable in it, (p. 198) Aug. 5, 1812. Report II., date on the title-page, 1814. Report III., date on the title-page, 1815. From the matter of these three Reports, and from no other source, have been drawn the inferences of which the following terms contain the expression, and of the justness of which the sincere reader will have to judge.

1. By the person or persons acting in the name of The National Society, the establishment of the Exclusionary System, as above explained, has from the first been designed to be carried into effect, and been carried into effect accordingly. For the quotations and observations, from which this inference has been deduced, short title—Proofs of the System of Exclusion.

II. In the accounts all along published of their proceedings, a system of imposition has all along been carried on: of imposition, by which, when exposed, it will appear—that,—whereas, all that is material in the business has been carried on by a single person,—with or without occasional concert, but, at any rate, without any regular and regularly recorded co-operation with any other person or persons,—with the assistance of a secretary acting under his orders, or in his stead,—the representation, all along made, of the manner in which it has been carried on, has had for its object the inducing a general persuasion—that, in every act that has been done, a number of persons, in the character of members of one or more bodies, more or less numerous, under the names of The General Committee and its Sub-Committees, have participated. Short title—Proofs of the System of Imposition.

III. Proofs, shewing the actors—the principal actors—in the system of imposition.

Of the proofs, brought to view under the above two heads, the effect will not, (it is believed) on an unprejudiced mind, be purely and simply the persuasion respectively expressed in the above terms. Indeed, had this been all, so much at least as concerns the exclusionary system would have been superfluous and useless: a design to that effect being no more than what, on a variety of occasions, will be seen to have been not merely acknowledged, but studiously proclaimed. An ulterior effect will be—a conception of the extraordinary ardency of that zeal, with which, by the immoral means spoken of, under the second of the above two heads, this design appears to have been pursued.

From the ardency of this zeal,—coupled with the extraordinary nature of those same means,—and the notorious history of the whole business, in respect of the long continued neglect, with which the new system of instruction and the inventor were viewed, until the time when, without being confined to Church-of-Englandism, it had been employed in other hands with success in the joint advancement of intellectual instruction and the religion of Jesus,—from all these considerations put together have been deduced two other inferences, the truth and justice of which are here submitted to the sincere reader in the terms following.

1. Of the institution of this Society, the ultimate object has not been the advancement—either of intellectual instruction in general, or of the religion of Jesus.

2. Of this same institution the sole ultimate object has been—the preserving from reformation the abuses, with which the Church of England establishment is replete.

In relation to neither of these two inferences will any separate documents or observations be, in this part of this Introduction, brought to view in the character of proofs.

Under the system, here styled the system of imposition,—the acts being all along ascribed (it will be seen) to sets of persons by whom they were not performed,—came of course the question—by whom then have they been performed? In answer to this question, lights will be afforded from the matter of the above mentioned Reports, elucidated by such observations as have seemed requisite.

III. Short title repeated—Proofs, shewing the real actors in the system of imposition.

§ IV.—I. Proofs of the System of Exclusion.

So openly and repeatedly avowed, and even so ostentatiously displayed, is the design there indicated,—that, but for the ardency of the exclusionary zeal so expressed, and the inferences, for which, as above, that ardency forms so strong and conspicuous a ground, it might have been waste of time and space, thus to bring the evidence of it to view.

It blazes forth in the very title-page, and at the very first sentence of that page.—“First Annual Report of the National Society for promoting the Education of the Poor IN THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ESTABLISHED CHURCH.”

Thereupon, after one unnumbered page, in which nothing is contained, but the words “Account of the Proceeding for the formation of the National Society,” comes another unnumbered page, (it stands the fifth) at the head of which stand these words, viz. Education in the PRINCIPLES of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH. Thrusting itself in immediately after the simple and characteristic title just now mentioned, this uncharacteristic phrase it is, that, like a Lottery-Office puff, serves instead of a title to what follows.

Thereupon follow three paragraphs, which, all of them boiling and flaming with that same zeal, present an indubitable claim to a place under this head, and will accordingly be found, in the margin:* and, immediately after the sort of intro-

* National Society's Report I. Last date, 5th August, 1812.

That the NATIONAL RELIGION should be the foundation of NATIONAL EDUCATION, and should be the first and chief thing taught to the Poor, according to the excellent Liturgy and Catechism provided by our Church for that purpose, must be admitted by all friends to the Establishment; for if the great body of the people be educated in other principles than those of the Established Church, the natural consequence must be to alienate the minds of the people from it, or render them indifferent to it, which may, in succeeding generations, prove fatal to the Church, and to the State itself.†

It

† [State itself.] For their object, howsoever covertly aimed at, this and the two next paragraphs have (it may be seen) the justification of the Exclusionary system.

In

duction so composed, comes thereupon the above promised "Account,"—the Account, such as it is,

It must indeed be admitted in this country of civil and religious liberty, that every man has a right to pursue the plan of education, that is best adapted to the religion which he himself professes. Whatever religious tenets therefore men of other persuasions may think proper to combine with the mechanism of the new system, whether tenets peculiar to themselves, or tenets of a more general nature, they are free to use the new system so combined,

In Part II. the objection, urged against that system by Sir Thomas Bernard, in the name of the Poor-bettering Society, have been seen already. Three years, or thereabouts, had they stood full in the view of the penners and sanctioners of this Report. To these objections,—they being in their very nature unanswerable,—no answer is here, any more than elsewhere, so much as attempted. No notice is here taken of it.

Note well the principle, upon which this justification grounds itself.—It is—that if, at a time of life, at which it is not possible for the human mind to form any judgment at all on the subject of a system of religion, with the system of history it depends upon, and the system of morality which it includes,—nor consequently to entertain any real belief on such a subject,—the great body of the people have not been made to get by heart the formulary, containing the system in question of religion,—declaring at the same time, all along, that they do firmly believe it,—the Established Church, as established, will not be able to stand its ground:—in short, that it will fall:—and from thence the inference is—that the State, i. e. the Constitution of the State, will fall along with it.

Note

of the proceedings, by which the Society of invisibles will presently be seen to have been formed.—

combined, *without reproach or interruption, from the members of the Establishment. On the other hand the members

Note, moreover, that, by this same course support equally effectual might be given to the religion of the Church of Rome,—to the religion of Bramah—or to the religion of Mahomet. That by this same course—supposing it to be, with relation to the end it aims at, an effectual one,—any system of religion, or no religion whatever—one as well as any other—might with equal success be forced into the minds of the rising generation—this the authors and sanctioners of this paragraph, whoever they are, cannot deny. That, unless this same course be taken, the Church they are thus labouring to support, will not be able to stand its ground—this they here declare themselves apprehensive of.

* [Without reproach or interruption.] Without reproach, viz. from such of the Members of the Establishment as do not reproach them, true:—but not without reproach from such as do reproach them: for example the present Bishop of London: by whom, from the pulpit his Clerical subordinates, and from the press all who read English, are informed—that all tenets different from those of the Church of England are schism, and that all schism is guilt: (Charge, p. 1.) and by whom the system of instruction in question is expressly referred to, in the character of an instrument, and that a most desirable one, for the applying of these principles to practice.—See below § 9, and Appendix, No. I.

Without interruption, yes. But why? Because they chose not to offer it? No: but because they durst not. Witness the Secretary of State, Lord Viscount Sidmouth: who, with Bill in duction so composed, comes thereupon the above promised "Account,"—the Account, such as it is,

It must indeed be admitted in this country of civil and religious liberty, that every man has a right to pursue the plan of education, that is best adapted to the religion which he himself professes. Whatever religious tenets therefore men of other persuasions may think proper to combine with the mechanism of the new system, whether tenets peculiar to themselves, or tenets of a more general nature, they are free to use the new system so combined,

In Part II. the objection, urged against that system by Sir Thomas Bernard, in the name of the Poor-bettering Society, have been seen already. Three years, or thereabouts, had they stood full in the view of the penners and sanctioners of this Report. To these objections,—they being in their very nature unanswerable,—no answer is here, any more than elsewhere, so much as attempted. No notice is here taken of it.

Note well the principle, upon which this justification grounds itself.—It is—that if, at a time of life, at which it is not possible for the human mind to form any judgment at all on the subject of a system of religion, with the system of history it depends upon, and the system of morality which it includes,—nor consequently to entertain any real belief on such a subject,—the great body of the people have not been made to get by heart the formulary, containing the system in question of religion,—declaring at the same time, all along, that they do firmly believe it,—the Established Church, as established, will not be able to stand its ground:—in short, that it will fall:—and from thence the inference is—that the State, i. e. the Constitution of the State, will fall along with it.

Note

of the proceedings, by which the Society of invisibles will presently be seen to have been formed.—

combined, without reproach or interruption,* from the members of the Establishment. On the other hand the members

Note, moreover, that, by this same course support equally effectual might be given to the religion of the Church of Rome,—to the religion of Bramah—or to the religion of Mahomet. That by this same course—supposing it to be, with relation to the end it aims at, an effectual one,—any system of religion, or no religion whatever—one as well as any other—might with equal success be forced into the minds of the rising generation—this the authors and sanctioners of this paragraph, whoever they are, cannot deny. That, unless this same course be taken, the Church they are thus labouring to support, will not be able to stand its ground—this they here declare themselves apprehensive of.

* [Without reproach or interruption.] Without reproach, viz. from such of the Members of the Establishment as do not reproach them, true:—but not without reproach from such as do reproach them: for example the present Bishop of London: by whom, from the pulpit his Clerical subordinates, and from the press all who read English, are informed—that all tenets different from those of the Church of England are schism, and that all schism is guilt: (Charge, p. 1.) and by whom the system of instruction in question is expressly referred to, in the character of an instrument, and that a most desirable one, for the applying of these principles to practice.—See below § 9, and Appendix, No. I.

Without interruption, yes. But why? Because they chose not to offer it? No: but because they durst not. Witness the Secretary of State, Lord Viscount Sidmouth: who, with Bill in members of the Establishment are not only warranted, but in duty bound to preserve that system, as originally practised at Madras, in the form of a Church of England Education.*

Date thereupon assigned to the first meeting, 16th Oct. 1811.

the

hand, offering to commence his course of interruption was, by the Bench of English Bishops, treated,—such, notwithstanding the willingness of the spirit, was the weakness of the flesh,—treated as Jesus was by the Saint, of whom the Bishops of Rome are successors.

As to power, the only interruption which it was in the power of these Church-of-Englandists to give to the new system of instruction, in so far as carried on upon a principle other than exclusionary principle, they did give to it: viz. a competition set up against it, on the ground of that hostile principle. Not a finger did they stir in aid of it, till, upon the all-comprehensive principle it had been set on foot,—and with such formidable success established,—by Lancaster, and his supporters. Unless the taking of passages out of the Bible for lessons was an exclusion, the Lancasterian scheme put no exclusion upon Church-of-Englandists. These Church-of-Englandists, in this their course, have been all along not only anxious, but declaredly anxious, to put an exclusion upon all Non-Church-of-Englandists.—The contributions which otherwise would have been given for the support of a non-exclusionary system, they draw off to the support of this their exclusionary system. Thus, all the interruption, which it is possible for them to give, they do give.—And the enormous force of their influence considered, is it an inconsiderable one?

* [Bound to preserve . . . as . . . at Madras.] Destitute of all

The friends, therefore, of the Establishment throughout the kingdom are earnestly requested to associate and co-operate, for the purpose of promoting the Education of the Poor in the doctrine and discipline of the Established Church.—It is hoped that such co-operation will not be wanting, when the object in view is nothing less than the preservation† of the National Religion, by ensuring to the argument, in their endeavours to produce the effect of argument they are thus forced, or if they please “bound,” thus to steal in, as it were, in lieu of argument, insinuations thus obscure and irrelevant. They are bound (say they) amongst other things,—for this is what is meant, if any thing,—to teach this their Catechism. Why?—because it was taught at Madras.—What a reason!—But why was it taught at Madras? Why?—only because at Madras, i. e. in the eyes of the inventor of the new system, there could not have been any so much as the faintest hope of temporal reward or encouragement in any shape, on any other condition than that of teaching this same Catechism. By the very nature of their Establishment,—without saying this, because altogether without need of saying any such thing,—they had thus set the law to Dr. Bell:—and now—such, for want of argument, is their distress—such thereupon their humility—it is Dr. Bell, that by his practice has set the law to them: viz. to the Bench of Bishops. Of the stone, which, for so long a course of years,—some thirteen or fourteen years to wit,—these tardy and unworthy builders refused, thus glad are they at length to make the headstone of their corner.

† [preservation.] Thus explicitly do they declare, that, in the exclusionary, and “understanding-and-will-prostrating” system, as above and hereinafter described, they behold an indispensable instrument, for the preservation of what they call the National Religion: viz. their own worldly and anti-Christian the great body of the people an education adapted to its principles.

With a view of promoting such co-operation, and with the intent of laying the foundation of a Society, which shall power, their own factitious dignities, their own overpaid places, their own useless places, and their own sinecures.

With such an immense mass of the matter of wealth, constantly, in the shape of the matter of corruption, applying itself to the minds of all persons, who, by their condition in life, are rendered susceptible of literary education,—applying itself to them in such manner, as to invite and urge them to throw off the yoke of the law of sincerity, and, by subscription and conformity, to place themselves in the tract of preferment ;—with so enormous a mass of the matter of corruption, thus continually employing itself, not only in the fixing of adherents, but in the purchase of converts ;—to what imaginable circumstance can we look for the source of the so much apprehended danger—the danger, from which the proposed remedy is designed to operate as a preservation? To what imaginable circumstance, unless it be the real worthlessness of this perpetually self-styled Excellence?

If to any other circumstances, what can be the hypothesis, on which this notion of danger grounds itself? It must be—that a state of universal mental depravation, is the state—not only of all Non-Church-of-Englandists ;—but in short of the great majority of the whole population of the country: that the propensity towards error is so strong and general, that the millions a year, which, after being levied by forced contributions, are employed in the preservation of the doctrine and discipline of the Church from destruction, will still be unavailing, but for the additional 20,000*l.* or 30,000*l.* a year, thus raised—with the additions thus endeavoured to be raised—by voluntary contributions :—in a word, that—such is the system they are

Next to the above-mentioned matter, and in the same page, (p. 6,) comes a string of numbered Resolutions, fourteen in number, stated as having been come to at two subsequent meetings, held at two specified days, by the same imaginary persons, in the same or some other concealed place, the Bishop of London in the Chair. Of these Resolutions the two first are—"1. That the title of the Society
" now constituted, be 'THE NATIONAL SOCIETY shall extend its influence over the whole kingdom, a number of persons, friends to the Establishment, at a meeting holden 16th October, 1811,*

His Grace the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY in the Chair,——Resolved,

That such a Society be now constituted, and that measures be taken for carrying the same into effect.

That for this purpose the ARCHBISHOP of CANTERBURY, for the time being, be President; and,

That a special Committee be appointed, and requested to meet to-morrow, and on Friday, to consider of Rules and Regulations for the construction and government of the Society, and to make their Report to a general meeting, which is to be holden on Monday next.

thus striving to uphold—no man would embrace it gratis, and upon conviction,—no man would ever embrace it all, if he were not either paid for so doing, or living under the expectation of being paid for it. Thus, in the blindness of their zeal, do these men pass condemnation on themselves.

* Add—but who are afraid or ashamed to shew themselves to any body but themselves.

“FOR PROMOTING THE EDUCATION OF THE
 “POOR, IN THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ESTA-“BLISHED CHURCH, THROUGHOUT ENGLAND
 “AND WALES.” 2. That the sole object of this “Society, (p. 7,) shall be to instruct and educate
 “the Poor in suitable learning, works of industry,
 “and the Principles of the Christian Religion,
 “according to the Established Church.” Thus far the Resolution.

Now, in the matter therein manifested, what eye is there but theirs that does not behold and observe three perfectly distinct objects, whereof to some millions of eyes, two are not only opposite but irreconcilable, viz. “education of the Poor in suit- “able learning,” and ditto “in the principles of the “Established Church?”—Thus there are three objects. But in these three objects the zeal of these anonymous and self-concealed persons—such is its blindness—could see but one. The sole object—any sole object—can it be any more than one? With respect to this one then can there be any doubt what it is? Can it be any thing but the educating the Poor in the principles of the Established Church,—that ultimately declared one sole real ultimate object, in the contemplation of which the two others, even at the very time of speaking of them, are so perfectly lost sight of? In their lips and on their papers, “suitable learning,” and “works of industry:”—in their hearts, “Established Church,” and nothing else.

After this account of the Genesis of the Society, follows, (p. 13) under the title “REPORT of the “GENERAL COMMITTEE,” an account of the earliest proceedings of the managing body by which that title was assumed. From this paper five several masses of exclusionary discourse will be brought to view: and in no one of all these instances is any evidence to be found of its having received the sanction of the governing body, antecedently described under the name of The General Committee. On the contrary, in every one of these instances, in support of the opposite position, there exists the sort of evidence, above-mentioned by the name of the negative circumstantial evidence: viz. absence of the ordinary and requisite marks of authenticity, as above described.*

* Report I. p. 16.—“In one particular quarter, viz. the Deanery of Tendering, in the County of Essex, a plan has been laid down for carrying the benefit of the system into the several country Parishes, which is inserted in App. No. 5. with the approbation of the Committee annexed; so published as an useful example to others. In the above Deanery, this plan is now carrying into effect with great spirit, and the execution of it is in great forwardness.*

P. 18.

* Of these proceedings further mention will occur presently. Particular indeed is the importance attached to them. No wonder.—No where else does the exclusionary zeal blaze out more

“ FOR PROMOTING THE EDUCATION OF THE
 “ POOR, IN THE PRINCIPLES OF THE ESTA-“ BLISHED CHURCH, THROUGHOUT ENGLAND
 “ AND WALES.’ 2. That the sole object of this “ Society, (p. 7,) shall be to instruct and educate
 “ the Poor in suitable learning, works of industry,
 “ and the Principles of the Christian Religion,
 “ according to the Established Church.” Thus far the Resolution.

Now, in the matter therein manifested, what eye is there but theirs that does not behold and observe three perfectly distinct objects, whereof to some millions of eyes, two are not only opposite but irreconcilable, viz. “ education of the Poor in suitable learning,” and ditto “ in the principles of the Established Church?”—Thus there are three objects. But in these three objects the zeal of these anonymous and self-concealed persons—such is its blindness—could see but one. The sole object—any sole object—can it be any more than one? With respect to this one then can there be any doubt what it is? Can it be any thing but the educating the Poor in the principles of the Established Church,—that ultimately declared one sole real ultimate object, in the contemplation of which the two others, even at the very time of speaking of them, are so perfectly lost sight of? In their lips and on their papers, “ suitable learning,” and “ works of industry:”—in their hearts, “ Established Church,” and nothing else.

After this account of the Genesis of the Society, follows, (p. 13) under the title “REPORT of the “GENERAL COMMITTEE,” an account of the earliest proceedings of the managing body by which that title was assumed. From this paper five several masses of exclusionary discourse will be brought to view: and in no one of all these instances is any evidence to be found of its having received the sanction of the governing body, antecedently described under the name of The General Committee. On the contrary, in every one of these instances, in support of the opposite position, there exists the sort of evidence, above-mentioned by the name of the negative circumstantial evidence: viz. absence of the ordinary and requisite marks of authenticity, as above described.*

* Report I. p. 16.—“In one particular quarter, viz. the Deanery of Tendering, in the County of Essex, a plan has been laid down for carrying the benefit of the system into the several country Parishes, which is inserted in App. No. 5. with the approbation of the Committee annexed; so published as an useful example to others. In the above Deanery, this plan is now carrying into effect with great spirit, and the execution of it is in great forwardness.*

P. 18.

* Of these proceedings further mention will occur presently. Particular indeed is the importance attached to them. No wonder.—No where else does the exclusionary zeal blaze out more

P. 18.—“ 2. They look forwards for farther support from those who are attached to the Constitution of Church and State; the sole object in view being to communicate to the Poor, generally, by means of a summary mode of education, lately brought into practice, such knowledge and habits as are sufficient to guide them through life, in their proper stations, especially to teach the doctrines of religion, according to the principles of the Established Church, and to train them to the performance of their Religious duties by early discipline.

3. It is unnecessary* for this Committee to enlarge upon the fiercely. They had for their conductor—not indeed the present Bishop of London, but his immediate predecessor—the Church of England hero with whose eloquence his charge (anno 1814) (p. 1) opens:—the Bishop, in whose eyes “schism” was “guilt,” whose “endeavour” was to replace ecclesiastical discipline on its “antient footing”—that discipline of which the “benefit” is “lost” if “the discretion of the ruling power” be “fettered.” This, however, is but a small part of what in that one paragraph may be seen breathing the same spirit. A more finished picture of a persecuting despot, held out in that very character, as an object of admiration and instruction, could scarce have been drawn by a French Court Catholic of the day, under the orders of the Duke and Duchess of Angoulême.

* [Unnecessary.] Yes: and fruitless likewise. So long as they had their choice (what can be more notorious?) what they chose was—that the body of the people should have no instruction. So long as they had their choice, Dr. Bell and his system were, in their eyes, objects of scorn or indifference. When the system of no-instruction was seen to be no longer tenable, then came this system of bad instruction, the badness of which is thus varnished by the word good, as that of its Church is by the necessity of good instruction, and of the benefit which would accrue to Society, in proportion as its members are governed the word excellent, and that of Church "pomps and vanities" by the word decency.

"Necessity of good instruction!"—They enlarge upon the necessity of it?—they, whose most strenuous endeavours have so openly been employed, in excluding from the benefit of it all children, whose parents will not purchase it on the terms of forcing them to put from them what they think good, and embrace what they think evil? In one and the same breath, the necessity of granting it and the necessity of refusing it—this is what they preach:—to hundreds of thousands they accordingly do refuse it:—this is what they practise.

Note, that in any such character as that of the ultimate object of the system of instruction, throughout the whole course of these effusions, scarcely is morality, scarcely is even Christianity, so much as professed to be held up to view: scarcely any thing whatever but the support so much needed by the Church of England. With the exception of that decency, which is composed of the so solemnly announced "pomps and vanities," to such a degree has worldly anxiety got the ascendant even over DECENCY—scarcely in any other character is Christianity so much as professed to be regarded, than that of a state engine:—an engine, employed in the manufactory of the matter of corruption, for a cement to the Warburton Alliance between Church and State: a cement for the wall of defence, built up for the protection of the whole stock of over-paid places, needless places, mischievous places, and sinecure places, sacred and profane.

Indeed, with what face, or prospect of success, could either morality or Christianity have been mentioned,—mentioned as main and ultimate objects of the instruction,—when, in both instances, in the same breath, that same instruction is so anxiously with-governed by a sense of Religious duty, and to the members themselves in respect both of their present happiness and eternal welfare. If this obtains at all times, more especially in the present, when, on the one hand, indifference to Religion, in the neglect of the regular performance of sacred duties, is but too apparent, and, on the other, men's minds are distracted by an infinite variety of opinions,* studiously propagated by their respective advocates.

P. 19.

holden from all those who will not accept of Church-of-Englandism, in lieu of both those benefits?

Be moral men—i. e. on condition of your being, “in under-standing and will, prostrate” under us :—not otherwise.

Be Christians—i. e. on condition of your being, “in under-standing and will, prostrate before our interpretations of Christianity :” otherwise, be as un-Christian as you will—what care we?—Such are the conditions, which will be seen constantly intended, and almost as constantly expressed, when, by these holy men, either morality or Christianity are spoken of as qualities desirable on the part of the people.

* [Minds—distracted by an infinite variety of opinions.] As if, in all ages of Christianity, from the earliest down to the present, this “distracted,” as it is called, had not had place :—as if, so far from being prejudicial, this variety, except in so far as it is productive of hostility or oppression, were not even conducive—in an eminent degree conducive—to true morality and happiness. Differing one from another in respect of such their opinions, each strives to prove against his competitors the truth of his opinions by the goodness of his practice.

In England, the morality of the Established Clergy—will any one of them dare to bring it into comparison with that of the Sectarian Clergy, of any of the sects? Among the Established Clergy, is not attention to professional duties—any thing like constant

P. 19.—“ If the plan, of which they have now detailed the progress for a few months, be cordially supported and encouraged by those who are friends to the Communion and zealous attention—a rare case?—Among the Sectarian Clergy, inattention, an unexampled one?—Why? because, for respect, for affection, even for subsistence, the Sectarian Clergy—what have they to trust to but their good behaviour?—while to the Established Clergy, good behaviour is comparatively of no use. Yes:—what they have to trust to is what they do trust in:—their riches, their factitious dignities, their temporal power: to secure to them respect—respect without desert, and independently of good behaviour—such was and is the object—such, unhappily, in too great a degree, is still the effect,—of those ill-placed powers—of those factitious dignities, and of the enormous masses of the matter of wealth, added for the support of those same ill-placed dignities.

Under these circumstances, what matters it how great the variety of opinions is? Of these opinions, what are the subjects?—Matters which, for the most part, not only none of them understand, but for the understanding of which, were they capable of it, none of them would, any more than any body else, be any thing the better. The times when this variety was at its minimum, what were they? Precisely the times—say from the 8th or 9th to the 12th or 13th centuries—when Church power, and with it ignorance and immorality, were at their maximum. Such is the state of minds—such the universal “prostration of understanding and will”—such the uniformity, to the production of which this their system of instruction is thus avowedly directed.

On the field of theology is variety—variety of opinions—a spectacle so unendurable to them?—Let them go to Spain: there they will find none of it: there they may behold uniformity—perfect uniformity—with all its blessings: there they may reconmunion of the Church, they have good reason to hope, that it will accomplish a considerable improvement in the condition, and in the moral and religious habits of the poorer branches of the Community, and give a new character to Society at large.

P. 26. No. II. of Appendix. (Address to the Public.)*—Under these circumstances the Committee is persuaded, that, in calling for a more general and extended support of an institution, in which the best interests of the Established Religion and Constitution of the Country are so deeply involved, they shall not appeal in vain to the friends of both.

P. 49. (No. V. of Appendix.)—THE GENERAL COMMITTEE of the NATIONAL SOCIETY† consider that the most ready and satisfactory answer they can give to the numerous inquiries transmitted to them, from various parts of the Kingdom, as to the best and most effectual method of carrying into execution the great and important designs of the Society, will be by offering to such as seek for this information a practical illustration of the system. With this view, they have selected, from among the many Reports, communicated to them from local Societies already formed, or now forming, the proceedings of the DEANERY of TENDERING, in the County of Essex, and Diocese of London, which appear, on the whole, the best adapted for general cile themselves to that original and venerable Church, from which their own is but a schism: a schism not to be justified but on those principles—yes, on those very principles—which, when appealed to in favour of any but themselves, are the objects of their abhorrence.

* 29th January, 1812.

† No place, no time, no signature.

general imitation, and which, if extensively adopted, with the laudable exertion and judicious regard to co-operation, as hath been manifested both by the clergy and laity in that district, cannot fail, under the blessing of Divine Providence, to diffuse the inestimable benefits of moral and religious Education among the lower orders of Society throughout the kingdom, by a method at once easy in its operation and certain in its effects.

With this view the Committee are desirous to call the attention of the parochial clergy at large to these Resolutions, not only as affording an example of the valuable benefits that must result from such combined efforts in a work alike important to all, but with a further design to promote that uniformity of System, which is one of the fundamental objects of the National Society.

P. 50 continued.

NATIONAL SOCIETY.

“ His Royal Highness the Prince-Regent, Patron.

DISTRICT SOCIETY at COLCHESTER.

“ The Right Honourable and Right Reverend the Lord “ Bishop of London, Patron.

[Note well the two patrons. Thus to the Empire of Japan (it is said) there are two Emperors—a Temporal and a Spiritual one.]

Deanery of Tendering.

“ At a meeting of the CLERGY only of the said Deanery, “ held at Thorpe, on Monday, the 2d day of March, “ 1812, to consider of the best means of carrying into “ effect the objects of the above Society in the said “ Deanery, “ Present (nearly every officiating Clergyman in the “ Deanery, three of whom were members of the Special “ Committee for the said Deanery.)

“ The following Resolutions were proposed to the “ meeting, and unanimously agreed to :

“ 1st. That this meeting, convinced of the urgent neces“ sity, in these times, of some system of general education
 “ in the principles of the Established Church, have observed “ with a lively interest the formation of a National So“ ciety with that view, and approve highly of the en- “ larged and comprehensive scale on which it is formed.”

P. 52—“ In consequence of the above Resolutions, a “ general and numerous Meeting of the Clergy and also of “ the Laity of the Deanery, was subsequently held at the “ same place, March 16th, when, after the principles on “ which the National Society is founded had been stated “ fully to this meeting, its objects particularly pointed out,
 “ and the resolutions, by which it is constituted, as well
 “ as the regulations by which it is to be conducted, read,—

“ IT WAS UNANIMOUSLY RESOLVED, 1st. That such a “ Society is, from the complexion of the times and the “ circumstances of the poor, become particularly neces“ sary in these kingdoms, as calculated to propagate and “ maintain the scriptural doctrines and sound religion of our “ Reformed Church amongst the now uninstructed part of “ the community, to inculcate early habits of piety, decency, “ sobriety, and virtue, upon the rising generation, and “ thus to promote, in profession and practice, pure and “ unadulterated Christianity.”—[Pure and unadulterated Christianity!]

“ 3d. That in conformity to a Resolution of the said “ District Society, of the 8th January last, this meeting do

6. As yet, for support of the exclusionary system nothing more has been seen than a series of general and theoretical declarations. The first exclusionary act, of which, in the proceeding inserted in this first Report, any trace is to be found, is an act, the mention of which comes in towards the close, viz. in p. 17: and of this the exclusionary nature is as yet disguised, not being visible to any eyes, but such, if any, by which a search shall have been made for it in the Appendix. In the body of the Report, all you see is a donation:—a donation—made to a Benefit Society of School-

“ now proceed to the nomination of a Sub-Committee for “ this Deanery, to co-operate and communicate with the “ General Committee at Colchester, on the points stated “ in the said Resolution.

“ 4th. That such Sub-Committee shall consist of all the “ Clergy within the Deanery, and of two of the Laity,
 “ or, where necessary, a greater number, of each parish.

P. 53—9th. “ That in whatever way the said sub“ scriptions may be applied, particular care shall be taken “ that all the children reaping the benefit of this most “ charitable Institution, shall without exception, be in“ structed in the excellent Liturgy and Catechism of the “ Church of England, shall constantly attend Divine Ser“ vice in their Parish Church, or in some Chapel under
 “ the Establishment, on the Lord's Day, unless such reason “ for their non-attendance be given as shall be satisfactory
 “ to the parochial Members of the Sub-Committee.

“ (Signed by the Chairman.)”

masters, and without any condition that in this place is so much as hinted at. Turn to the article in the Appendix, (it stands in p. 66, is numbered No. XI. and forms the last number,) what you see to a certainty (for so in express terms it is declared) is—“ These Schoolmasters must belong to the Established Church:” what you see to little less than a certainty is—that it was at the suggestion and instance of the concealed doers of the great Society, that this little Society was formed,—that the prospect, of the advantage afforded to the exclusionary system, by loading the donation with this exclusionary condition, was the motive for this suggestion,—and that the donation was the purchase-money paid for that advantage.

Mark here the progress of the exclusionary system: with the intolerance, and the corruption, by which it is characterized. In the infancy of the Society, before it had learnt to feel its strength, conformity on the part of Schoolmasters being to be secured by any means, bribery was the instrument employed: and on that occasion, in the body of the Report,—being that part, which, unless with some particular view, is all of it that any body reads,—this instrument, it may have been seen as above, was kept compleatly out of sight. Free and unconditional was the liberality then and there displayed. This then was what was designed for the eyes of readers at large. But, to the Schoolmasters, at whose hands, compliance with the terms of the donation was to be obtained—it was necessary that those terms should be made visible: accordingly, after notice given to persons of this description on the Table of Contents, that in the Appendix they will find something that will interest them, in the Appendix accordingly, the benefit held out to them is displayed, but with terms fastened on it.

Further than this, in the first year of the Society's age, it was not thought advisable to go: and, at that early stage, even this was kept hidden from as many eyes as, consistently with its purpose, it could be hidden from.

But, in the interval between the penning of the first and that of the second Report, success, as will be seen in so many other instances besides this, had given birth to boldness. Accordingly, in Report II. and not before, comes out the exclusionary regulation, (above brought to view in Part II. of this Introduction) by which, payment to Conformists for coming in not being sufficient, Nonconformists are inexorably shut out.

When the principles are disseminated, the trumpet is blown in Sion,—because it is by this trumpeting that men's passions are to be exerted, and prepared, as effectually as may be, for the endurance of the acts—these immoral and anti-christian acts—without which such principles could not have been carried into effect. When of the acts themselves the necessity comes of making the disclosure, the greater the number of eyes from which they could still be kept hidden, the less copious (it was seen) would be the torrent of that reproach, which is so justly due to the system to which those acts was to give effect.

Of the measure,—the mention of which, but in its purified state, as just explained, is slid in at so early a part of the Report,—slight is the importance, in comparison of the importance of those other measures, the reference to which, obscured to such a degree, as to disclose nothing of their nature, may be seen reserved for the very last paragraph (p. 19.) of this same Report. The Rules of the Society, and terms of Union (it is there said) “are before the public “ in the papers now published, as examples of the “ mode in which they wish the plan to be carried “ into effect.”—Rules of the Society?—Good:—but what rules?—where are they to be found?—No reference. No where in the Appendix is any No. to be found, having for its title any such phrase, or for its contents any such Contents.—Terms of Union?—good: but these too where are they to be found? Again no reference. Search, however, (which without special motives adequate to the trouble you will not do)—search, however, into the Appendix, and there indeed, p. 27, No. III. you will find a paper having the words Plan of Union for its title. And here, but too truly, in the last of its eight unnumbered articles will you find, introduced as it is by an exclusionary preamble, the first of these two exclusionary acts, which in Part II. of this Introduction, it was found necessary to present to view.

By whom sanctioned? at what meeting? who concurring? who present? held at what time, or what place?—all these particulars remain buried in darkness. But the system of imposition, of which this darkness is one of the proofs, belongs not to the present, but to the next succeeding head.

With this first Report stops for some time, the torrent of exclusionary eloquence. The system, in the support of which it was employed, had passed unquestioned:—it had produced its fruits: those fruits had, as we see, been ripened into acts.

In Report II. nothing at all in this strain, or nothing worth noticing, has been found. But in Report II. that same exclusionary rule may be seen reprinted:—reprinted, with no other amendment than the addition of a fragment of a date, which, ere long, there will be occasion to bring to view: reprinted in that same Report II. in which the design of it may be seen consummated by that other act (the one regarding Masters,) which in Part II. of this Introduction follows it.

In Report III. however, three additional masses of exclusionary doctrine may be seen presenting themselves.—Results prosperous, hopes realized;—in the fulness of the heart, the mouth and the pen now speak.

The acts by which the doctrine is applied to practice are also of course persevered in. Witness those same two exclusionary acts, reprinted from Report II. word for word.

National Society's Third Annual Report for 1815, p. 19.
 " The schools now conducted under the Society's auspices,
 " and according to the doctrine and discipline of the " Established Church, which were stated in the last Re" port to be 230, now amount to 360; and the number of " Children comprised in them, which was last year com" puted at upwards of 40,000, is now 60,000."

P. 21. " Sheffield, Leicester, Halifax. . . . Scarcely any " of our large manufacturing towns can be named, in which " the objects of gratuitous education are more numerous
 " than the three above specified, or more beyond the means
 " of that part of the Inhabitants who take a lively interest " in the education of the poor, and who feel it their duty
 " to combine Religious Instruction with useful learning,
 " and to dispense the former according to the Liturgy and
 " Catechism of the Church of England."

P. 29. " Of the debt of gratitude due to Dr. Bell,
 " for devising and bringing to maturity a method of gene" ral education, which has enabled the Governors of the " Church to execute what our Reformers projected—the " giving to the whole population of the Realm, a com" petent measure of useful learning, seasoned with reli" gious instruction in the principles of our National " Faith—the Committee feel that it is quite out of date
 " for them to offer any computation."

A good fat Bishoprick ;—or,—if the elements of Church-of-England Episcopal decency, such as nobility of descent, relationship to nobility, &c. are judged deficient in Dr. Bell,—a snug Deanery ;—would be better worth than any such “ computation” or any other such barren panegyric. But, to attach to merit in any shape any such privileged rewards, would be setting a dangerous precedent, and encouraging that spirit of innovation, of which Atheism and Jacobinism are the sure ultimate results.

§ II. Proofs of the System of imposition—2. General Committee, Meetings none.

Misrepresentation—deception—purposed misrepresentation—studied misrepresentation—imposition—imposture—by whichever of all these names on this or that occasion it may happen to be called, the nature of it will not be varied—the system will be still the same.

1. Meetings of the General Committee—their existence. 2. Sub-Committees—their existence and meetings. Acts represented as acts of the General Committee, or of a Sub-Committee—their genuineness. Such are the distinguishable subjects, of the examination, from which the suspicion of imposition has received its confirmation.

I. As to the Meetings of the General Committee—their existence.—Matter of fact as represented in the Reports,—Meetings of their body held on such and such particular days, and such and such business done by it. Real matter of fact as suspected and inferred,—no such Meetings held.

II. Existence and Meetings of Sub-Committees.—Matter of fact as represented in these same Reports, these Sub-Committees severally formed, and, on such and such days,—Meetings of the Members in competent number duly held, and such and such business done by them. Real matter of fact as suspected and inferred,—no such Sub-Committees formed; or, if formed, no such Meetings held by them.

III. Sanctionment given to acts represented as being acts of the General Committee, or acts of this or that Sub-Committee, or of both.—Matter of fact, as represented in these Reports, appropriate sanctionment given to each of these sorts of acts respectively: real matter of fact as suspected and inferred,—in the instance of these several acts, with few or no exceptions, no such sanctionment ever given.

I. First then as to the existence of Meetings on the part of the General Committee.

Of the birth of this public body, in and by Report I. p. 13, and the account antecedently given (as hath been seen) of the preparatory proceedings,—October 21, 1811, is stated as the day. To the first meeting, held by the body so constituted, certain acts are (Report I. p. 14,) ascribed: but, to the meeting itself, neither will place, nor day, nor month, on that or any other occasion, be found assigned. On that same occasion, viz. in p. 13 of that same first Report, and in the very first paragraph, in speaking of the General Committee, after saying to whom the management of its (the Society's) affairs was "by the Constitution intrusted," (it has already been seen what constitution) what is said of it is in these words—"who have held weekly meetings for that purpose: the Committee consisting of"—and thereupon come the names or descriptions of the Members.

Now, of this statement what can have been the object, unless it be the producing of this conception—viz. that, in general at least, and bating special exceptions, meetings of the Members of this Committee had place from first to last once a week, and that at those weekly meetings it was that every thing, which thereafter comes to be stated as having been done, was ultimately done. Such is the conception, which, to all appearance, it was the intention to produce. Now, to judge from the Report itself, how stands the fact? Answer—No such weekly meetings were ever held. From whence this inference? Answer—From these circumstances.—To the supposed meeting thus spoken of, neither of place, nor of time, nor of members concurring, nor of members present, is any assignment to be found: whereas of such meetings mentioned in this Report as appear to have been really held, both time and place have been mentioned:—mentioned, and with that degree of particularity, which is sufficient for the purposes of indication, and which accordingly, in Reports of the proceedings of public bodies, is customarily exemplified.

On the other hand, true it is that,—immediately after the enumeration made as above, of the members of the General Committee,—in this same Report (Rep. I. p. 14,) mention may be seen made of certain acts—certain specific acts—in the character of acts performed by that same Committee.

“ The Committee (it is said) at its first meeting “ elected the Rev. T. T. Walmsley, Secretary, “ and J. Watson, Esq. Treasurer, (for the regular “ management of which, other Rules and Regu“ lations were afterwards made,) and appointed
 “ a Sub-Committee, to take measures for establish“ ing a Central School in the Metropolis :”—and at bottom the Note referred to by the * is—See App.
 No. 8.

Under these circumstances, what, as far as appears, was the truth of the case?—Answer—That, of no such body as the fifty-two persons of whom the General Committee is there stated as having been composed,—and who, in their quality of Members of it, had, each of them, at any meeting held of their body, the right of being present,—nor of any considerable number of that body, (summons given or not given,) was any such General Meeting held: but that, at the residence of some particular individual,—he being, indeed, one member of that body,—with or without the concurrence of some one other member, or some other such small numbers of Members, not sufficient to constitute a regular meeting of that body,—were those acts really passed, which, as above, are there stated as having passed.

So much as to this first meeting. And, from the fictitiousness of this first meeting, results the equally probable fictitiousness of several other meetings, the times of which are no otherwise designated, than by reference to the time of this first.

These supposed fictitious meetings are those which are represented as having been held between the time of the above dateless meeting, and June 3, 1812. Of these the one first mentioned, is one which, in Report I. p. 14, 15, may be seen mentioned by the name of “the next meeting.” Place, time, members present, none.—Divers acts or things are not the less represented as having been done at this same meeting.—These are—1. Resolution concerning the use of the intended Central School; 2. Ditto, concerning the use to be made of existing Schools for the training of Masters. 3. Renewal and instruction of a therein above mentioned Committee, afterwards designated by the name of the Committee for Building, or Building Committee. 4. Measures taken for spreading the system, by a recommendation to form trustees, &c.

From this second or “next Meeting,”—which, it should seem, was never held,—from this it is that another anonymous meeting takes its date: for it is "soon after" the abovementioned next (p. 15.) that this other performs its acts. These are, 1. Appointment of a "Committee of Correspondence." 2. Publication of "an Address to the Public," for which reference is made to App. No. 2.

To this probably imaginary meeting, which immediately succeeded that which was next to the first, succeeded another, in which, under the name of a Plan of Union, certain Resolutions were passed, for which, reference is there made to App. No. 3. It is the same string of Resolutions, as that, the eighth and last of which has, in Part II. of this Introduction, been brought to view by the name of Exclusionary act the first. Of this supposed imaginary meeting, the time, supposing it real, must have been subsequent to, and therefore distinct from, that at which, as above, the Sub-Committee, styled a Committee of Correspondence, was appointed: since it is upon the Report made by that same Sub-Committee, that the meeting in question is stated as doing what is ascribed to it.

The first meeting, to which any place is assigned, is one which is stated (Report, p. 17,) as having had place at Sion College. To this meeting is assigned not only a month, viz. June, and a day of that month, viz. the 3d. but a day of the week, viz. Wednesday. To an addition thus superfluous, mention of the year might have been a not un-useful substitute. No such mention is made. But by ratiocination it may be sufficiently ascertained, that the year meant must have been 1812. Not till October, 1811, did the Institution receive its existence. And, at this same Sion College, in the year 1813, will be seen, held in the same month, a meeting which is plainly not this but a different one. Remains therefore for the year of this meeting, the year 1812.

Such, as if the year sought had been the year of the first Olympiad, is the demand for criticism. Such is the ingenuity, with which the history of this self-closed conclave of Church-of-England Cardinals has been wrapt in clouds.

At this "annual meeting of the Society," (for such it is styled) five distinguishable acts are represented as having had place:—1. Receipt of a "Report made of the proceedings, (viz. the intermediate proceedings) " of the Committee," (the General Committee)—viz. the above, and God knows what other proceedings, in which it seems probable that no such Committee was ever suffered to take part. 2. Receipt of "a statement of the account for the year," (meaning the fraction of the year from 11th October, 1811, to this 3d June, 1812). 3. Election of four Members, in the room of four retiring Members. 4. Election of an Auditor in the room of one who had become a Member of the Committee. 5. "Determination" taken "that the vacancies happening in the course of the year should be reckoned among the resignations."

So much, for the present, as to Report I. Proceed we now to Report II.

The first day in this Report, mentioned as a day on which a meeting styled a General Meeting was held, is 2d June, 1813: on which day, as above, the place mentioned as the place of meeting is Sion College. This is in Report II. p. 17: and it is here for the first time that any specific tokens of a real meeting make their appearance. Not that any such thing as a list, purporting to be a list of Members present, is to be found in it. But three persons by name, are mentioned as making motions there: a circumstance by which it is rendered probable,—though it might be too much to say certain,—that, at that same time, there they, all of them, actually were. Of these, those whose names may, in a paper prefixed to this second Report, be seen standing upon the list, intituled “List of the “Committee and Officers of the National Society,” are—1. President, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and 2. the Earl of Shaftesbury, V. P. Of these same motion-makers, the third, and only other, is Earl Nelson, whose name is not upon that same list.

To judge from this same Report, it may even be matter of some doubt, whether on this grand and prepared occasion,—at this “general annual meeting of the Society” at large,—these three illustrious persons gave themselves the satisfaction of beholding, any one of them, any comrades besides the two others. Of so much as a single person,—over and above the number, without which that could have been done which is stated as being done,—are any tokens to be found. To seven persons, or sets of persons, by that same number of different Resolutions, thanks are ordered, on the motion of the “President.” Thus all that, in the way of thanksgiving, could be done by the President, it is by the President that it is done.—By him, by whom so many thanks were given, it had been hard if no thanks had been received. But the President could not move thanks to the President. For the execution of this important office, provision is accordingly made of The Earl of Shaftesbury.—Similar to the demand for thanks,—which had thus produced itself, and thus received its supply, in the instance of the President,—was a correspondent demand in the instance of the General Committee. In the persons of the pair of illustrious Members just named,—in these, and, for aught appears, in no others,—was embodied at this time the said General Committee. But the modesty of these two illustrious persons would not suffer either of them to move thanks for the joint use of himself and the other: for the supply of this demand for thanks, their prudence had accordingly made provision of Earl Nelson; whose name, illustrious as it is, does not display itself upon the list of the 52 Members, of whom the General Committee is stated as being at that time composed.*

Of the suspicion,—that the Meeting, stated in Report I. as being held in June 1812 at Sion College, being the first of the Meetings stated as being held at that place, was—if any such Meeting really had place—a private one,—present only the few that were in the secret,—a confirmation may, as it should seem, be afforded, by a comparison of the terms by which the Meeting of 1812 is designated, viz. in Report I.;—compared with the terms in which the Meeting of 1813 is designated, viz. in Report II. In Report II. the Meeting there mentioned as held at Sion College in June 1813, is styled the “General Annual Meeting” of the Society. Yet,—though at that same place a meeting, styled the Annual Meeting of the Society, had in Report I. been stated as held in 1812,—this of 1813 is not styled the second. On the other hand, the Meeting stated in Report I. as held in 1812—this Meeting, though there styled the “Annual Meeting” of the

* In addition to the above acts of thanksgiving, the only two acts which, on that occasion, are stated as having had place, are—One, for the “forthwith” publishing “a correct statement of the proceedings of the Society for the last year;”—the other, an appointment made of Auditors. It is at the motion of that same most Reverend President that, on both those occasions, the requisite Resolutions are stated as having been come to.

Society, is not there styled the general annual meeting, nor is the word general at all applied to it. By the name of The first of the intended General Annual Meetings of the Society at large—by this, or by some equivalent name, would not this meeting have been designated,—if it had been what the second annual meeting, held at that same place, seems to have been intended to be passed upon the public for?—That is to say, not a close meeting,—such as those of the governing body, the General Committee, avowedly are,—but an open meeting, into which all persons, being members of the Society at large, should find entrance: in other words, “all Subscribers of not less than one guinea “annually, or Benefactors to the amount of ten “guineas:” all these being persons, who, by the 10th of the fourteen Resolutions reported in Report I. p. 8, as come to at a meeting preliminary to the formation of the Society, are declared to be “qualified to attend such meeting:” viz. per “Resolution 8, a general meeting to be holden annually.”

In the account given of the meeting of 1812, not so much as the appearance, any more than the name, of a general meeting, i. e. of an open meeting, is attempted to be given to it. But, in the account given, as above, of the meeting of 1813, not only the name of a general meeting, but the appearance of an open meeting is actually given to it.

Members of the General Committee, two at the least,—viz. the Archbishop President and the Earl of Shaftesbury,—whose business it is to thank the one of them the other,—there they are:—Non-Member of that same illustrious Committee, Earl Nelson,—brought thither to thank them both,—there he is:—the noble and not the less Reverend Non-Member of the Committee—Orator and self-deputed Representative of all the other Members of this National Society of England—as, upon another occasion, Orator Cloots was of the whole human race.

From the comparison thus made, the inference is it an ill-grounded one, viz. that of the wording thus employed, at least in the instance of the meeting of 1812, the object was to cause a close meeting to be taken for an open one? For the variation,—observable as above, in the expression,—on this hypothesis an adequate cause will be found: on any other hypothesis, no such cause will (it is believed) be to be found for it.

Be this as it may, this,—as it appears to have been the first, so does it appear to have been, and moreover to be likely to remain, the last—representation of the Melo-drama, intituled, A General Annual Meeting of the National Society.—Out comes Report III., date in the title-page 1815: and in it neither as holden at Sion College, nor as holden at the National Society's Central School, nor in short as holden at any other place, has any trace of any such meeting been found.

The year 1814 is passed away,—the month of June in that year—the appointed month of annual thanksgiving—is passed away,—and no more such thanks have been given at any such place. No more Earls of Shaftesbury:—no more Earls Nelson.—Exhausted by that same grand effort, the stock of thanksgivers is gone. Happily, not yet exhausted is the stock of thanks. But, no more Earls being found to administer them to either, the most Reverend President and his Reverend Secretary,—confined to the theatre furnished by their own Report,—add now, to their severer labours, the more agreeable task of thanking one another and themselves. The thanks, so justly due to the most Reverend the President, may be seen in p. 30: the thanks not less justly due, though in his subordinate sphere, to the Reverend the Secretary, may be seen in page the twenty-eighth,

§ VI. Proofs of the system of imposition continued, II.
Sub-Committees and their meetings, none.

Thus much as to the General Committee—its meetings and proceedings.—Now as to Sub-Committees.

Not inconsiderable is the importance of the functions, and thence of the existence, of these Sub-Committees. Not indeed in the first Report, but, however, in Report II, (p. 5) the information is given—that “ of the business of the General Committee (from a time not discoverable), every branch had been prepared for them by their Sub-Committees.”

And thus it is—that, for a General Committee—which, though meeting “ in weekly meetings” throughout the whole year, meets not at any time or place,—the business is with equal regularity prepared by a set of Committees,—number unascertainable,—of which the meetings could also have been held, had it happened to them to have been held at any time or place.

Following this course is what, in the same passage (Rep. II. p. 5) is termed “ following the same course which they” (the Committee) “ had prescribed to themselves last year.”

In regard to Sub-Committees, to the truth of this state of presumable non-existence, one exception indeed, but one exception alone, is to be found. This is The Sub-Committee for Building, more briefly and familiarly The Building Committee. Under both these names, in Report I. Appendix, No. I. p. 23, mention may be seen made of it, with not only year (1812) and month (May) of its operation, but also day of the month (9th), place (London House), and Members, five in number, all of them with names—of whom, as might well be imagined, the Right Reverend occupant—not the present Lord of London, it is believed, but his immediate predecessor—was one.

In this Report, and in that same page of it, (p. 23.) mention may, moreover, be seen, not only of the existence of the Sub-Committee, of which it is the Report, on that day, but, moreover, of its existence at a former day, viz. “26th December, 1811:” its operations on that former day having been performed “in consequence of instructions received from the General Committee.”

Of these tokens of existence,—which, in this one instance out of so indeterminable a multitude, were producible,—we see the display that has been made. And why made? Even that,—from the existence of the sort of bodies in question, in this one instance in which they had existence, their existence being demonstrated by these tokens,—their existence might be inferred in all that variety and multitude of instances in which, they not having existence, no such tokens of existence in relation to them could be displayed.

Such being the motive, by what ulterior interpretation shall the mode be adumbrated? Let experiment be made. On this important day a dinner was given at London-House: and there it was that, at an altar covered with at the least a decent assemblage of those elements, of which Church-of-England decency is composed,—with or without other communicants,—members of the General Committee of the National Society, in a number which was found or deemed competent to the formation of a Sub-Committee for the purpose in question, found themselves assembled and met together. Whether it was the idea of the Sub-Committee that gave birth to the dinner, or the dinner that gave birth to the idea of the Sub-Committee, this is among the secrets to the revealing of which the hypothesis dares not aspire. Be this as it may, here was a number, which,—to judge from appearances, as above,—was greater than the greatest which were chosen, and at the same time chose, to be assembled for the meeting, afterwards mentioned as the General Annual Meeting of the Society: meaning the whole Society, composed of so many thousands, of whom the members of the General Committee, fifty-two in number, formed a part.

Of so many of which mention is made, this being the only Sub-Committee that, it should seem, was ever fortunate enough to possess the attribute of existence, no wonder it should thus have been made the most of.

But even of this one Sub-Committee, the existence could not hold out long. Metamorphosis is the work of fable. This Sub-Committee had not long been in possession of that distinguishing attribute, when, for lack of other appropriate matter, it was (Rep. II. p. 6) turned into a Finance Committee: thus was it turned, and, as it was turning, its existence vanished: for neither at any place, nor at any time, nor by any person or persons, was the metamorphosis performed.

The following are the only Sub-Committees, of which,—either in Report I. or in Report II.,—after a careful search, mention is found made, as if they had had existence:

I. In Report I.

1. P. 14.—A Sub-Committee, in that place without a name, mentioned in Appendix, No. I. p. 23, under the title of The Sub-Committee for Building; and in the body of the article, “The Building Committee.”

2. P. 15.—A Sub-Committee, styled a “Sub-Committee of Correspondence.”

3. P. 14.—A Sub-Committee in that place also without a name, but of which the Report, printed in the Appendix, No. VI. p. 54, is styled, “Report of the School-Committee.”

These are all the Sub-Committees, of which any mention has been found in Report I.

Now, as to Report II.—In this Report, mention has been found made of the two following additional Sub-Committees—or at least names of Sub-Committees.

4.—1.—P. 6.—A Finance Committee.—In the page next preceding, (p. 5) The Committee for Building had re-entered upon the stage. Now then comes in a metamorphosis, and thereupon a question of identity. In page 6, “This Committee,” (it is said) “was then turned into a Finance Committee,” for a purpose thereupon mentioned. This is as who should say—at that time. What was that time? Answer, no time: for none is to be found.

5.—2. ib. PP. 15, 16. A Committee of Ladies:—of which the institutions and functions are thereupon stated: the same having been established by acts,—that is to say, by “Resolutions of the General Committee,”—come to at one of its inscrutable meetings,—held in their usual manner,—present nobody, at no time, and in no place.*

§ VII. Proofs of the System of Imposition continued
—III. Acts spurious.

III. Thus much as to the meetings or non-meetings of the General Committee,—and the existence or non-existence—meetings or non-meetings—of Sub-Committees: now as to the existence or non-existence of certain instruments, represented as having received the sanction of these several non-existent or non-acting authorities. Of operations and instruments taken together, mention has already, and that of necessity, been made,—viz. on the occasion, and for the purpose, of shewing the non-

* Under these circumstances, we have the satisfaction of being informed (p. 16) that “The Dowager Countess of Spencer, and “other her Colleagues” (she herself being one of them her said Colleagues) “have been so kind as to undertake this charitable “work, and have executed their task much to the benefit of the “school, and to the satisfaction of the Committee.” Since that time, the Dowager Countess is gone to receive her reward in heaven: as to “other her Colleagues,” they not improbably still continue—where, not improbably, they have been from the first—in nubibus.

existence of the several authorities, from which, in these Reports, acts, coming respectively under both these names, are spoken of as having emanated.

Of operations, the nature being rather fugitive, there would be more or less of difficulty in dealing with them. Instruments, however, remain: and, so long as they do remain, an account of some sort may at any time be respectively taken of them.

Of acts of this indisputable tenor, Report I. furnishes eleven: of which four are, upon the face of them, acts of the General Committee: papers, exhibiting marks of discourse, purporting to be the discourse of the General Committee:—two, papers purporting to be, respectively, the discourses of two Sub-Committees: four others, so many papers purporting to be the discourses of so many other persons or sets of persons; and the remaining one, a list, formed (of course by the Secretary) from the communications received by him in the name of the Society, under the orders of the General Committee: viz. the paper intituled, in the “Contents of the Appendix,” “List of Diocesan, District, and other Societies, united to the National Society.”

1. The instruments, purporting respectively to be so many discourses sanctioned by and delivered as theirs by the managing body—the General Committee,—are all that belong to the present purpose. They are the following, viz.

I “Address to the Public.”—In Report I. this stands No. II. pages 25 and 26. This has for its object the compelling contributors to come in. To this instrument a time certain is indeed assigned: viz. 29th January, 1812. But, as far as appears, by no body of persons, sitting together in the character of Committee-men, was it sanctioned, nor, therefore, at any place. The signature it bears is that of the Secretary: and of his office the place is mentioned, viz. No. 13, Clifford's Inn. The time then, viz. the time mentioned as above, is the time which it seemed good to him,—taking, doubtless, the pleasure of the Most Reverend President on the subject,—to assign to it. For the purpose of getting in the money, this was the act of The General Committee. Ask the Secretary at what meeting of the General Committee this address was sanctioned,—his answer is, doubtless, ready.—No such meeting: no occasion for any. By himself,—the pleasure of the President being taken on the subject,—the instrument was penned.

In Report II. this paper is not to be found.

Nor yet in Report III.

II. "Plan of Union." In Report I. this stands, No. III. pages 27, 28. Signature to it, T. T. Walmsley, Sec. Place, none; day, none.

Of this instrument, occasion for making mention has presented itself already more than once. But the subject is not yet exhausted.

In Report II. this paper is reprinted. It there stands, No. IV. pages 186, 187.; and now presents itself—a curious enough circumstance.

At the time when this instrument was first made public, neither could the Most Reverend President, whose signature is not attached to it in this Report,—nor the Reverend Secretary, whose signature is attached to it in this Report,—tell at what time it became the act of the Society. Between one and two years elapse, and now, viz. at the time of getting up this second Report, the discovery had been made by them, that the year was 1812 and the month February: information which is accordingly immediately after the title made public: of the veil, by which the time had been concealed from them, a corner having been removed. Revealed to them are now the year—1812, and moreover the month—February. Still, however, another corner of the veil,—viz. that which covered the day of the month,—remains, and keeps it involved in mystery: nor even now does the revelation extend to the place, at which, by that important instrument, the sanction of the Society was received.

In this, however—such is its importance—is contained—let it not be forgotten—that which has already been brought to view, (Part II.) in the character of the first of the exclusionary acts. This then, in so far as concerns the Society and the General Committee, may be set down, it should seem, and without much danger of error, in the category of imposture. In the character of an act of the Most Reverend President, it might, at the same time, without much greater danger of error, be set down, it should seem, be set down as genuine.

In Report III. it is again reprinted: and, neither in regard to time nor place, is any addition there made, to the revelations, reprinted as above in Report II.

III. "Advertisement of the Society, April 8th, 1812:" so intituled and dated, in the Contents, and at the head of the paper itself.—In Report I. this stands No. VII. pages 88, 59: signature, T. T. Walmsley, Sec.; place, No. 13, Clifford's Inn.

The discourse, with which this instrument opens, and which is thus (be it observed) put in the front of it, is of a sort which, it is true, might without impropriety, come from the Secretary.—Why?—Because, for its first and principal object, what it has is—mere conveyance of information: the giving notice of a matter of fact:—of a fact which had just taken place; and of which, as soon as it had taken place, it was proper and material that the public at large should be apprized: viz. the fact of the opening of a new school.

But this discourse—a discourse, to the delivery of which, in the character of a discourse of the Secretary, no charge of incompetence could be applied—at the heels of it comes in a string of other discourses:—discourses delivered, and with the most perfect composure, in the name—not merely of the General Committee, but of the National Society itself. The National Society having appeared to the Reverend Secretary,—(but, in the first place, according to the best interpretation, to the Most Reverend President) in a dream,—and laid open to him its or their whole mind, no difficulty, on this occasion, does he find in making them say whatsoever it is found convenient for them to have said. “They are of opinion” . . . so and so—“they think” “also,” so and so . . . “they trust” so and so . . . “they are ready and willing” so and so . . . ; and finally “they earnestly exhort” so and so. Of the mind of this excellent person of their own creation, the whole stock of furniture—opinions, thought, belief, desire and readiness, exhortations—are known to these reverend and inspired persons:—from their eyes none of these secrets are hid.

On the subject of this Advertisement, as it is called,—or that of the above-mentioned Address to the Public, press the Reverend Secretary, one and the same answer may serve. According to the convenience of the moment, it is, or is not, the act of the Society : of that Society whose Advertisement it calls itself. That it is, may be proved by all but the commencement: that it is not, may be proved by the commencement.

In Report II. this paper is reprinted. It there stands No. V. pages 27, 28. Of the word new—in a Report, published a twelvemonth after its first appearance,—the import might admit of discussion: under these circumstances, it seems to be of the ambulatory cast. But the National Society is still in the same most Reverend pocket; and its mind, as expressed on the former occasion, undergoes no change. In Report III. this paper is not reprinted.

IV. Rules for the Office of Treasurer and Secretary.—Such is the title in the “Contents of the “Appendix.” In Report I. this paper stands No. VIII. pages 60, 61. The title of it is, however, there changed into “Duties of the Treasurer and Secretary.” To this is affixed the signature—T. T. Walmsley, Secretary. But, on this occasion, he appears not in any place. In Report II. this paper is not reprinted.

Nor yet in Report III.

As to the duties themselves they belong not to the present purpose.—By whom were they prescribed?—this is what belongs to the present purpose; and, by the all pervading silence, the answer is supplied.

V. In Pages 197, 198, may be seen a paper, with which this first Report concludes. A circumstance, that calls for remark, is—that, notwithstanding its importance,—or rather perhaps, as will be seen, by reason of its importance,—no title is put at the head of it. In it is contained a list of books,—which, in the Schools under the immediate direction of the General Committee, were at that time employed, or intended to be employed, as lesson-books; and of which, in that same character, a recommendation is given,—addressed to the managers of all such Schools as, in pursuance of the "Plan of Union," above-mentioned, had then placed, or shall have placed themselves, under the guidance of the Committee.

Of the nature and importance of this paper, the sincere reader will perceive how materially it concerns him to be well apprized. By this recommendation it is that the whole mass—of the literary instruction, intellectual and moral, administered to the whole multitude of Scholars of which the population of these Schools, (number amounting, one half year ago, to no less than 60,000) is or will be composed,—is determined.

In and by this recommendation is consummated, (as hath been seen in Part II.) the exclusionary system,—and that substitution of Church-of-Englandism to the religion of Jesus, in the effectuation of which as above, the exclusionary system is the main instrument employed.

Such may be stated as the end or object. Observe now the means. Nothing could be more snug, nothing could be more dextrous, than the contrivance.

These, it is stated, are the books, which for the purpose in question are "recommended" (Rep. I. p. 197,). Recommended—good: but by whom? By the governing body of the self-styled National Society, the General Committee?—Oh no: this not being true could not without a gross, and to many a manifest falsehood, have been affirmed. Affirmed accordingly it is not. It is but insinuated: and for this purpose, the form of words employed is such, that, unless by any one who shall have been put upon his guard against the system of imposture, an inference in the affirmative would be made of course. “Many applications” (p. 197.) says this paper, “having been made to “ the COMMITTEE of the NATIONAL SOCIETY for “ lists of Elementary and other Books, proper to “ be used in Schools upon the Madras system—

 “ the following are recommended as a convenient “ set for a School of 100 children at its commence“ ment,” . . . &c.

For the sanctioning an act, of this radical and all-embracing importance, have we then any Meeting of the General Committee?—that General Committee, which (says the same Report, p. 13,) “have held weekly Meetings” . . . “for the arrangement of its affairs?”—have we so much as any such thing as a Report, from the existing or non-existing School-Committee?—or from any one other of those Sub-Committees, by which (says Report II. p. 5,) “every branch of its business has “ been prepared for the Committee?” viz. “accord“ ing to the course which the Committee had pre“ scribed to itself,” at the time of the transaction, of which this Report I. gives the accounts?—Oh no: nothing have we of any of these.—What is it then, if any thing, that we have?—Oh, as usual, T. T. Walmsley, Sec. Here too, and on this same first occasion, we have—what in company with that same signature we have not always,—viz. a deter-minate day and even place. Day, August 5, 1812: Place, National Central School, Baldwin's Gardens, Gray's-Inn-Lane.

In regard to the designation of place and time of meeting, why all this variety? In relation to a pair of adjuncts so essential, why, on the part of the Reverend Secretary, all this apparent indifference?—

Answer—To this end: viz. that, by readers in general, these same adjuncts may be regarded as matters of indifference. Yes: and in a certain class of instances, so far as concerns place at least, matters of indifference—perfect indifference—they may, without difficulty, be allowed to be: viz. in all instances, in which the will of the Reverend Secretary himself, is the source, from which they may without impropriety be acknowledged to flow. But in all those instances, where the only source, from which with propriety they can have issued, is an aggregate of minds—the minds of a certain number of the members of the General Committee, acting as such,—there the importance of these adjuncts stands upon a footing somewhat different. In these instances (need it be repeated?) in the designation of place, time, and Members concurring—in the conjunct exhibition of these adjuncts—may be seen not only a security against forgery, but the only security which the nature of the case admits of.

Note here a further circumstance, which possibly may have been the result of accident, but rather more probably has been among the fruits of the ingenuity of T. T. Walmsley, Sec. This Report, Report I. closing with the above paper, this signature, with all its marks of authentication as above, is still capable of being regarded in either of two characters: viz. as applied to this commendatory paper alone, or as applied to the whole contents of the Report. The desirable thing is, of course, that it shall be generally considered as applied to both. On the other hand, suppose any such consideration to occur to any person, as the following:—“ Considered in itself, this list of books “ may be a more or less proper or improper one.

“ But, be the books ever so proper, the recommenda- “ tion thus given of them, is it not rather too much for “ T. T. Walmsley, Sec., not only out of his own “ head, but on his own authority, to give ?”—Such is the question, to which, in case of need,—whether by prudence or good fortune,—an answer may already be seen provided.—“ Oh no : of the signature “ with the place and time to it which you see, the “ only design and meaning is—to shew that the Re- “ port, such as you see it, comes out in the name of,
“ and by authority from, the excellent Society,—of the “ proceedings of which it purports to be the Report,
“ and of which the Reverend Gentleman has the “ honour to be Secretary : and as to this particular “ paper, what you see is—that a multitude of ap- “ plications had been made about these books ;—
“ such a multitude, that it became absolutely neces- “ sary to give satisfaction to so laudable a desire :—

“and this, you see, is accordingly given, in and “by the article which you see.”—Divested thus effectually of his personality, where is the shaft, to which the Reverend Secretary can now be said to afford a mark?

Note here the progress of overweening self-assurance.

In Report I, the Society being as yet but in its cradle—in this prudentially obscure form,—viz. that of a sort of Bookseller’s advertisement, to which the signature of the Society’s Secretary might or might not be considered as specially applicable,—a mere advertisement, and that without a title,—was this act of radical and all-embracing importance smuggled in.

Between the publication of Report I. and the completion of Report II. for the press,—it had, it should seem, passed either altogether unobserved; or at any rate without any objection, from any formidable quarter, made to it. Thereupon, out comes Report II,—and in it comes this same article,—now for the first time furnished, like the others, with its No.—viz. No. VI. (pp. 189, 190),—and at the head of it, now for the first time, with a title: a title, during the penning of which, all conception of the contents, seems to have been drowned in the exultation which gives birth to it. NATIONAL SOCIETY, “For the Education of the Poor in the “Principles of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH,” placarded in blazing capitals—these are the words which, on this occasion, occupy the place of a characteristic title. At the conclusion, here too we have T. T. Walmsley, Sec.—Year 1812; month, August;—day, none:—place, for this time, No. 13, Clifford's Inn; that being by this time the Reverend Secretary's Official Residence.

Thus far the form of the signature is such as it was wont to be. But,—being called for by the importance of the occasion,—now comes, on the part of the Reverend divine, an exertion of fortitude, such as had not till now been manifested by him: but which, having now been manifested, will presently be seen repeated. “By order of the Committee”—Yes: these are the very words, which in Report II. p. 190, may be seen standing immediately before the words T. T. Walmsley, Sec.

Well then good Mr. T. T. Walmsley, Sec.—forasmuch as this is a paper, for the publication of which in their name, there exists an Order of the Committee—Good Mr. T. T. Walmsley, Sec., tell us then of whom this Committee was composed; and by whom, by authority from this Committee, this Order was signed: tell us this,—or if this be too much trouble, not to speak of difficulty,—tell us when was the day, on which, as appears by the entry in your books, the Committee sat.—Alas! alas! put these questions to Mr. Sec. ever so home, no answer from him will you get. What his invention,—with or without his books,—here shews is—the year and the month: what neither his invention,—nor, without a forgery, his books,—will ever shew, is—the day of the month. Why?—Because, in a case such as that in question, the fact in question,—being a fact which in truth never happened,—cannot without manifest falsehood be asserted to have happened, on any individual day, at any individual public and particularised place.

All this, however, having, in the mean time, (it may be presumed) passed off smoothly and without adverse observation,—in Report III. we have this same paper reprinted word for word. In that Report it may be seen standing under the head of No. IV. pages 168, 169.

Such are the marks of exultation,—produced, at the time in question, by the thus already experienced success of the system of imposture, employed in the giving effect to the exclusionary system of instruction—the last defence of the rotten and tottering Church,—marks of exultation—with the assistance of the Printer and his Devils thus placarded,—the words Principles of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH offering themselves to the eye in flaring capitals,—and such is the delight with which this title continued to be contemplated,—that, in the very next article, (viz. No. VII. Rep. II. p. 191,) this same irrelevant title is made to serve instead of a relevant one.

But, proportioned to the undue exaltation, will be the due humiliation,—now that the imposture (if such it be) is brought to light, and the exclusionary system covered with the so well merited reproach.

Of these instruments Report II. furnishes three others, no one of which had been antecedently printed in Report I. All of these may seen subsequently reprinted in Report III.

I. Page 191, 192, 193, No. VII. 1. Paper, as intituled in the Table of Contents, Advertisement, August 1812. On the paper itself, title, the same as the flaming one, just mentioned as being prefixt to the last preceding No., No. VI., viz. “National Society, for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church:” Contents, miscellaneous: viz.—1. Notice—that a School is opened for general inspection:—2. that persons sent from Country Parishes for that purpose will be gratuitously trained by the General Committee, to serve in the capacity of Masters or Mistresses in the Country Schools:—3. that, for the supply of deficiencies, a stock of persons ready trained is in store:—4. here too the information given of the books recommended is repeated:—5. Information—that Report I. is printed, and where it may be had: 6. Information—that, as there declared, the General Committee are able and ready to furnish money to the Country Societies,—and that they desire none from them:—7. Declaration of general prosperity in general terms; exhortation to give encrease to it by ever increasing Contributions:—8. and lastly, reprint of the list of Lesson books recommended.

By the tide of the success, it looks as if the head of the Reverend Secretary—not to speak of the most Reverend President—had by this time been somewhat turned. For this communication,—after six months or thereabouts, employed or at least employable in consideration,—no more apposite title can he find than the exulting, and in every other respect uncharacteristic, title above mentioned. Indeed, for a farrago, such as hath been seen—(but why make up any such farrago?) no characteristic title could very easily have been found.

Here too may be seen the same imposition, and the same clue—(such is the boldness produced by success)—the same so imprudently flaring mark, by which it may be detected. This too “By order of the Committee :”—and there we have the imposture.—Year, 1813; month, February; instead of the day, a blank :—and thus we have the clue, whereby the imposture may be or rather already is—detected.

In this paper, one declaration,—which as it stands expressed, forms a sort of a parenthesis, arising as it were incidentally out of the declaration made of disinterestedness as above,—must here be brought a little more into the light before it is dismissed. In this parenthesis is given a list of the Society’s “only objects” (p. 192.) viz. “ 1. To “ preserve an uniformity of proceeding. 2. To “ adopt the most improved system of educating “ the Poor that can be devised. 3. To afford to the “ Country Societies pecuniary assistance where “ requisite. 4. To furnish them with competent “ Masters and proper Books, at a reduced ex“ pense.”

“ Competent Masters”—O yes: but in this word competent is contained, as hath been seen, (Report II. No. IX. p. 197.) the essence of the exclusionary system.—“ Proper Books.”—O yes: but in this one word proper are included—the essence of the Exclusionary System, the scheme of substitution of Church-of-Englandism throughout England, to the religion of Jesus, (see Part II.) and the furnishing a new support to the rotten and crazy edifice.

Uniformity on the one hand, and the maximum of improvement on the other—for preventing these two objects from clashing, some little consideration and adroitness is, in the nature of the case, necessary. How far, by the Reverend Secretary, or most Reverend President, these requisites were on this occasion possessed, will now be seen. By Uniformity, alas!—by Uniformity, the serpent idol of Church-of-England worship—poor Improvement will be seen swallowed up.*

* National Society Report III. p. 14. Speaking of Training Masters, it goes on and says, “ for whose guidance a recommendation has been generally given, that, in the conduct of schools “ placed under their superintendence, they in no case take upon “ themselves to originate any variations from the practices of the “ Central Schools. This precautionary regulation” (it continues)

II. Report II. No. VIII. pages 194, 195.—Title, The present State of the Central School, Baldwin's Gardens.—The present? At what time? An-

“ has been adopted to provide against a prevailing propensity in “ the Masters to the making what may be deemed improve- “ ments, from the introduction of which the beautiful and effi“ cient simplicity of the System would more probably receive “ injury than advantage. And in pressing the general desirable-“ ness of uniformity in practice, as well as in principle, where “ it can be conveniently had, the Committee have great satis“ faction in the belief that an inspection of the daily process of “ education at the Central School, will satisfy examiners, that “ deviations from the mode there practised are in general more “ likely to injure, than to improve the most effective system of “ education that has ever been devised for the Poor.”

Thus far the nameless Reporter and his invisible Committee. Four years have not elapsed since the birth of this Society—Improvement,—as the own mother of her—has not only been acknowledged but trumpeted—continually trumpeted—in that character,—and already does the unnatural offspring thus order her to be smothered. Smothered? Why? Oh! because such is the requisition made by Uniformity:—dear Uniformity, the restorer and saviour of the “ Excellent Church.”

What then? (exclaims somebody)—so admirable an instrument—would you have it spoilt by ignorant and presumptuous hands?—In uniformity—howsoever it may be, when a declaration of persuasion is the subject—in uniformity, when applied to a system of instruction, radiating over the whole country, from one central source, can there be any thing but what is salutary?—Say what you will, is not uniformity an advantage?

O yes:—but to the rule thus nakedly laid down, the nature of the case afforded an obvious appendage, having the effect of a temperament:—a temperament, which, while it secured to the swer. At no time: for, on the subject of time, not any the faintest elucidation is here to be found. This being established, every thing that might otherwise have been to be said, in relation to that same "state," may, with the less loss and cause of regret, be omitted.

At no time? Yes: but, at the same time, at all times. For, word for word, with no other exception than that of a few words of addition on the subject of holidays, is the same paper reprinted in Report III.—reprinted about a twelvemonth afterwards. No. VI. (pp. 173, 174, 175,) designates the place, in which, and under the same title, it will there be found. In this sample, behold one of the ways in which uniformity—dear Uniformity—may be preserved.

A determination having been already taken, that no such troublesome intruder as Improvement shall be suffered to come in, the picture here given rule all the good professed to be aimed at by it, would have cleared it of all mischief.

Practise nothing of your own invention, or any body's but Dr. Bell's, says the rule:—propose to us any thing of your own, or any body else's invention, that you think useful, would have said the temperament. The rule was the natural product of that mixture of pride, and jealousy, and fear, and indolence, and imperiousness, which characterizes little minds in great places:—the temperament is strange and abhorrent to such minds.

Dr. Bell—is he not only the first of all existing ingenious Schoolmasters, but the last of all possible ones?

of that "present state," which the school was in at no time, may, and with signal economy in the articles of mental and manual labour, serve for any number of successive years: in a word, so long as the Excellent Church, with its Excellent Schools, and their Excellent Managers, shall endure.

Note, that in this perpetual calendar may be seen that list of "Religious exercises," by which, as shewn in Part II. of the present Introduction, so much light has been thrown, upon the excellent plan, for substituting to the less Excellent religion of Jesus, the more Excellent religion of that Excellent Church, by which all these Excellencies are displayed.

Congenial to the tenor of the evidence itself, is, on this occasion, the mode, in which——no—not the mode in which it is authenticated——but the mode in which the task of giving to it the marks of authenticity is either forgotten or avoided. With perfect consistency, of the picture of the state of the school, as it stood at no time, the verity is certified in no place, by no person, at no time: by no person, not so much as by the person, by whose evidence so very little seems throughout to be added to any ground of credence:—no, not so much as by T. T. Walmsley, Sec.

III. Report II. page 197, No. IX.—Form of Certificate for Masters.

This is the instrument, which, in Part II. has been held up to view in its character of the second of the instruments of the exclusionary system.

Time and Place are as completely absent, as every object that comes under the denomination of person.—No:—nobody knows any thing about the matter: not even T. T. Walmsley, Sec.

Number of persons of whom God is composed—that God, whom, if St. John is to be believed, (John, i. 18—I. John, iv. 12) no one ever saw—this number is no less correctly known to the Reverend Secretary, than to the Most Reverend President. Number of the persons, over whom, on this occasion, the Most Reverend President presided—and under whom, on this same occasion, the Reverend Secretary officiated—this article remains, and for ever will remain, in the clouds.

All the while it is by this non-entity, in conjunction with so many other non-entities, that the Society with all its schools is governed.

In Report III. this paper is likewise reprinted. Reprinted, and, word for word, without omission, alteration, or addition, under the head of No. VII.

IV. Report II. pages 197, 198, No. X. Title, in the Table of Contents, Regulations for training Masters.—Title on the paper itself, Rules and Regulations for training Masters.

In this case, in the same form, or rather no form, as in the one last mentioned, the same draught may be seen drawn upon the public, by the Reverend Secretary, for the requisite competent stock of ungrounded faith. Established by nobody, on no day, at no place,—signed by nobody, not even by T. T. Walmsley, Sec.,—not so much as garnished by the words NATIONAL SOCIETY—Central School—stationed at the head of the preceding paper, instead of a date,—they stand, in other respects—these “Rules”—or these “Rules and Regulations”—upon exactly the same imaginary ground as the Form of Certificate for Masters.

In Report III. pages 176, 177, under No. X. (by inadvertence put instead of No. VIII.) this paper stands reprinted word for word.

Of these Rules, the main body is foreign to the present purpose. Not altogether so either the Introductory passage, or the first of the Rules.

“The conduct and improvement:” it begins with saying—“The conduct and improvement of “the Masters being objects to which the very particular attention of the Committee” (viz. the imaginary Committee) “is directed, it is ordered—

“That a book shall be kept, to be called The Report of the Masters, which shall be a faithful “register of their conduct, and be laid weekly before the Committee, during whose sitting every “master is required to be in waiting.”

The case being (as, long before this, must, it is believed, have been clear enough to every body)—

the case being, that no real Committee is ever sitting,—how is it that, in this way, an intercourse is thus constantly kept up between two assemblages of persons—the one visible, composed of the Schoolmasters—the other invisible, composed of the illustrious, but never-assembled masters of those same Schoolmasters.

Another look, and you will see how it is:—i. e. how it cannot but be.—Somewhere or other in the building, conceive a room, called the Committee-Room:—in that same building conceive another room, called the Waiting-Room: conceive, moreover, a third room, called the Secretary's Room. The Committee-Room is the supposed seat of the many-headed Idol.—T. T. Walmsley, Sec. is the High Priest.

When a Schoolmaster comes, he is ordered to the High Priest, by whom he is sent to the Waiting-Room, where he sits kicking his heels with his fellows. If at that time so it happens that a special order is to be given to him,—in goes the High Priest, shuts himself up with his invisible God,—takes his Godship's pleasure, and delivers to the bowing Master,—or, if his Lordship of London is understood to form one person of the godhead, the “prostrate” master,—the result of it.

Do what I preach, and not as I do, is an old adage, put into the mouths of such Reverend Gentlemen as do preach.—According to the above rule, the book kept by the Masters is to be “a faithful Register of their conduct:—of the conduct of these same Masters.”—Faithful?—In what sense and manner faithful?—In the same manner as these Reports, which are so regularly published by the Secretary, and for which, when published, he is at the motion of the Most Reverend President so regularly thanked?—Alas! no; but in the opposite manner. In the way of contrast, however,—should it ever happen to a copy of this work to meet the eyes of any one of these Masters,—in the way of contrast the conduct of the real conductors of the institution might be of use to him. To the National Society’s Schoolmasters, the peep here given behind the curtain may afford a lesson of “faithfulness,”—as the deportment of the Helots when in a certain state, was made to afford a lesson of sobriety to the children of their masters.

§ VIII. Securities against Spuriousness—Cause of the Omission of them, Necessity and Design—not Inadvertence.

So many tokens of authenticity, so many instruments of authentication, so many securities against spuriousness. Of the use or value of these securities, is it that the authors of these Reports were unapprized or insensible?—Not they indeed.

If in any case they have omitted to exhibit them, it is because,—with a few inconsiderable exceptions, which will here be brought to view,—in all cases, from first to last, in the case in question among the rest, they have found themselves unable to exhibit them : and the cause why they have found themselves unable to exhibit them is—that, without a glaring falsehood, these securities could not have been exhibited :—a falsehood, which, if uttered, would have been recognized as such :—recognized by a number of persons so considerable, that all prospect of its remaining ultimately concealed from the eye of the public at large would have been manifestly hopeless.

The falsehood in question, in what then would it have consisted ?—Answer—In this : viz. in the assertion, that, on such or such a day, such or such an act received the sanction of a certain number of members of the governing body in question, styled The General Committee of the National Society,—assembled together in one room, in one or other of two characters,—viz. that of Members of the General Committee acting as such (total number of these who had a right to meet, 52) or that of Members of one or other of the Sub-Committees, formed out of that same number, and acting under the authority of that same General Committee.

If, on any determinate day—say 1st January, 1813—the case was, that, on that same day, no meeting of the General Committee was held,—any portion of discourse, by which intimation were given, that, on that same day, an act of such or such a tenor received the sanction of the General Committee, would be a palpable, and, sooner or later, a universally notorious, falsehood,—and, unless by some accident too extraordinary to be repeated, a wilful falsehood.

—In this then may be seen the reason—the sole reason—why, with very few exceptions indeed, in every instance, in which the act in question is, on the Report represented as being the act of the General Committee,—or of a Sub-Committee, acting under the authority of that governing body,—no day is mentioned as being the day on which such act received the sanction of the one or the other of these same bodies respectively: the act being, in each such instance, the act either of some one individual, or some small number of individuals, not competent to the formation of those same bodies respectively.—Being exercised by, or by or under the orders of, some one individual, or incompetent number of individuals respectively,—it could not, without a palpable falsehood, have been stated as having, on this or that determinate day, received the sanction of either of these same bodies respectively; and, therefore, it was, that to the statement, by which it is represented, as if it had received that sanction, no determinate day was ventured to be assigned.

Follows now the proof—that the omission in question—the non-exhibition of these securities against spuriousness—of these evidences of authenticity—had not inadvertence for its cause, nor, therefore, any other cause than design—the offspring of necessity, as abovementioned.

1. By the omission of these securities, the exhibition of which is so general, not to say universal—by this omission,—if, in any one instance, much more if in a number of instances, total—extending to all the several distinguishable securities in question—a risk, more or less considerable, could not but,—in the eyes of any reflecting, though it were an ever so moderately intelligent, mind,—appear to be incurred.

2. From the omission of the principal security—of that security, without which all the others would be unavailing,—viz. the security afforded by the statement of an individual day, as the day on which the act in question received the sanction in question—a suspicion of the sort in question could not receive additional strength and confirmation.—Why?—Answer.—Because, by the omission of this major and ultimate security, while the minor and introductory securities were afforded,—this major security being one, in the giving of which, supposing the act genuine, there could not, unless by some extraordinary accident, have been any difficulty,—demonstration was afforded, that the attention of the penner of the Report had actually applied itself to the subject.

Under these circumstances, of the most perfect proficiency in the arts of imposture and deception, the resource, supposing circumstances to admit of it, would naturally be—in relation to all such incidents as it became necessary to bring to view, the putting a complete exclusion upon every expression, that could be conducive to the bringing to view, as and for the time in which any act was exercised by the body or individual in question, any portion of time so determinate as that which is comprized within the limits of a single day: and, in a word, on every occasion to keep the designation of time as indeterminate as possible.

Accordingly, in the paper, intituled “Summary of Reports from Diocesan and District Societies, and Schools in union with the National Society,” the sort of chronological intimation in question is, with very few exceptions, excluded from Report II. and, it is believed, without any exception from Report III.

But, in verbal as in material fortification, if by being left unguarded, any one spot is left defenceless, as well might the whole be left defenceless. Accordingly,—in a certain number, though, comparatively speaking, in but a small number, of instances,—this measure of precaution, whether through necessity or through inadvertence, has been left unemployed:—to the mention made of the incident in question, it being real, and as such susceptible of a deter-minate chronological date,—a determinate chronological date has accordingly been attached: and thus it is, that, by the token of authenticity thus exhibited in certain instances, the attention of one reader at least has been drawn to the non-appearance of it in so many other instances.

The cases in which this departure from the prudential practice of a general suppression of dates may be seen to have place, will, it is believed, be found referable to one or other of the heads following:—

1. Cases in which, the National Society not having as yet received a regular form, the demand for the sort of misrepresentation here in question has not yet commenced. In this state of things, the case being that, by certain persons, in relation to the subject in question, business of the sort in question was, on the days in question, actually done,—no such purpose could, by the sort of omission in question, be as yet answered. Accordingly, in the case of the assemblage of persons here in question, in a publication purporting to be an account of what they did,—in this case, as in the case of any other assemblage of persons meeting for a purpose of a public nature, the time of meeting was in this way, as of course, particularized. True it is, that thus, even at the very commencement of the business, they saw reason for concealing themselves, and accordingly did take effectual care to conceal themselves. But, this species of concealment being thus far sufficient for the purpose, imposition was not as yet resorted to.*

II. Cases in which, it having thus far been deemed necessary, at first to set up, and then to keep up, the appearance of a meeting, open to Subscribers at large,—and a meeting of some sort having been held accordingly,—stating the day on which such meeting was held, would naturally present itself as an act of necessity.†

* To this head may be referred the following instances of an adequate designation of time:—

I. Anno 1811, Oct. 16.—Preparatory meeting of some unknown persons, antecedently to the formation of the self-styled National Society. Report I. p. 6.—N. B. The meeting, in this instance, a close,—and, except as to the day, a perfectly secret one. Place not mentioned.—No one person mentioned as present.

II. Anno 1811, Oct. 21.—Meeting, on the occasion on which the Society was declared to be formed. Report I. pp. 9—13.—N. B. Between these two meetings, indication is given of two or three others, but with less clearness: being given, not in an independent form, as these two are, but by relation made to the first of them.

N. B. All these meetings close.—At the meeting of Oct. 21. Place mentioned, Bow Church. “In the Chair,” the Archbishop of Canterbury. No other person mentioned as present.

† To this class may be referred the following instances:—

III.—1. Anno 1812, June 3d.—Meeting, styled in Report I. p. 17, “Annual Meeting of the Society,” without the word General; in Report II. No. 11, p. 178, “General Annual Meeting of the Society,” also in Report III. p. 165, General Annual Meeting

III. Case, in which,—a meeting, regarded, and accordingly represented, as a regular one, viz. a meeting of a Sub-Committee, having really been held,—indication was given of the day on which it was held: viz. either because,—(the plan of carrying on the business by secret Agents, without the intervention of meetings of the General Committee or of Sub-Committees, not having yet been formed),—the designation of the day was, in conformity to general usage, given as of course,—or

“of the Society.” According to appearance, this first of all meetings, by which any such character as that of an open meeting has ever been assumed, was in fact not an open meeting, but a close one: admittance not being given to any person, who was not either himself a member, or introduced by some person who was a member, of the “General,” i. e. the governing “Committee.” Afterwards, however, viz. in the two subsequent Reports,—and, as it should seem, for the purpose of qualifying it for presenting to readers, not in the secret, the idea of an open meeting,—the word general (being the same word which, in speaking of the next year’s meeting, is employed for the purpose of representing it as an open one)—was slipped in, as above. Place mentioned, Sion College.

IV.—2. Anno 1813, June 3.—Meeting, styled in Report II. p. 17, as above,—“General Annual Meeting of the Society.” Place, Sion College. In and by the account there given of it, in relation to this meeting, the conception manifestly intended to be conveyed, is—that it was an open one: and to this purpose it seemed unavoidable, that a determinate day should be stated as the day on which it was holden. But that, in effect, it was no other than a close one, is a suspicion, the ground of which may be seen above, viz. in § 5.

because a hope was at that time entertained, that the demonstration thus given of correctness, in this one case, might operate not only as presumptive, but as conclusive, evidence of actual correctness, in other cases: in cases in which such tokens of correctness, not being capable of being afforded without a palpable falsehood, are accordingly not visible.*

IV. Cases, in which the acts in question neither were,—nor, for the deceptious purpose in question, required to be believed to be,—acts of the Society at large: being manifestly so many acts of certain officers, acting under the authority of the Society,—in a matter, to which, without contravening established usage, the proper tokens of authenticity and correctness could not be refused.†

V. Case, in which the instrument in question,—though in reality not competent to be issued by any person, otherwise than with the express sanction of the governing Committee,—yet, being, upon the face of it, in respect of the foremost and most prominent part of it, within the competence of

* V.—1. Anno 1812, May 9.—Report I. p. 23.—Report of the Committee, called the Building Committee: of which mention has already been made in § 6. and elsewhere.

† VI.—1. Anno 1812, May 19.—Auditors' allowance of the Accounts.—Report I. pp. 58, 59.

VII.—2. Anno 1813, June 1.—Ditto.—Report II. pp. 200, 201.

VIII.—3. Anno 1814, June 1.—Ditto.—Report III. pp. 182, 183.

the Secretary,—received, in conjunction with the signature of the Secretary, a determinate day of date: viz. under the assurance, that,—howsoever it might be known to the members of the said Committee in general, that, at that day, there was no meeting of the said Committee,—yet, under the notion of its being given as and for the act of the Secretary alone, without its having received, because without its having stood in need of receiving, the sanction of the Committee,—or under the notion of its having received the sanction of the Committee on some former occasion or occasions,—no such reproach as that of wilful misrepresentation would, in the eyes of any of those persons, appear imputable to it.*

* IX.—1. Anno 1812, April 8th.—Paper, intituled “Advertisement of the Society,” Report I. p. 58. No. VII.—What it opens with is,—an article of information, such as the Secretary would of himself be competent to give: viz. information of a matter of fact,—the opening of a school,—which had just then taken place. So far so good. But thereupon, as already observed, comes a quantity of matter, which,—being delivered, as speaking, upon a variety of subjects, the mind, not merely of the governing Committee, but of the whole Society,—could not with propriety have been delivered in any such character, without an act of the governing body to sanction it. The matter of fact being, however, of such a nature, as naturally to call, not only for a determinate year and month, but for a determinate day in which to place it,—the deficiency would have been apt to excite attention and remark, if, in this instance, as in so many others, the mention of the determinate day had been

VI. Cases in which the acts reported, being acts of other assemblages of persons,—viz. bodies acting, in various parts of England, in union with this Society, and under directions from the General Committee,—and these acts having, in the usual manner, received, of course, the usual marks of authentication, and, amongst others, the designation of the determinate days, on which they respectively received the sanction of the several bodies,—under these circumstances, to have truncated the form of authentication, by leaving out the designation of the day, would naturally have called forth attention and surprise, on the part of readers in general; but more particularly on the part of the persons of whom the local meetings in question had been composed. The designation of the day was accordingly, in these instances, left to stand. Standing as it does, true it is that,—by the contrast it forms with the totally unauthenticated state of some of the acts given as the acts of the General Committee, in some instances, and the mutilated state of the form of authentication in others,—it operates in some sort in confirmation of the suspicion of spuriousness, when once brought to view. But, lying as they do, dispersed in so vast a body of omitted. The risk of suspicion incurred by insertion, presenting itself as being inferior to the risk that would have been incurred by omission, mention of the particular day may accordingly be seen inserted.

matter, an assurance which under these circumstances might naturally enough be entertained, is—that under such circumstances, these tokens of spuriousness would escape notice. On the other hand, had the designation of the days been in these instances truncated,—viz. for the purpose of cutting them down, to a conformity with the pattern, exhibited in the representation given in these Reports, of the acts therein ascribed to the governing bodies of the Metropolitan Society; in this case the probability would have been—that, by the bare appearance of such truncation, in the face of each such instrument standing singly, the suspicion thus produced would have been much stronger, than would have been produced by an indication, for the furnishing of which the confrontation and comparison of two different classes of instruments would have been, and has accordingly been here, found necessary.*

* X.—1. 1812, January 29.—Proceedings at a Country Meeting, at Exeter. Report I. p. 39.

XI.—2. 1812, March 2.—Proceedings at Thorpe, in the Deanery of Tendering, in Essex. Report I. p. 50.

XII.—3. 1812, March 6.—Proceedings at Winchester. Report I. p. 49: with several antecedently mentioned dates.

XIII.—4. Anno 1812, October 14.—“Paper, circulated by “the Norfolk and Norwich Society, for the Education of the “Poor in the Principles of the Established Church.” In Report II. p. 179 to 182, under the above title, this Paper forms in this Report a separate article of itself, having for this purpose

VII. Cases in which the act reported is the act of a party, not in connexion with the Society.*

Such are the circumstances, under which the sincere reader will have to pronounce his judgment, on the subject of the omissions and truncations which have thus been brought to view :—to pronounce—in the first place, whether they had for their cause mere accident or design: and, if design, what that been detached from the paper, to which it properly belongs, viz. No. I. "Summary of Reports from Societies, &c. in Union with the National Society." In this detached paper, (p. 181.) not only is the day, as above, designated, but prefixt to the names of the three persons officiating as Secretaries, are the words, "By order of the Committee."—Thereupon in the next page (p. 182,) follow three paragraphs, to the last of which is attached another date, viz. Norwich, 28th October, 1812, but without signature, or any mention of any Committee.

XIV.—5. Anno 1812, October 19.—Proceedings at a Meeting at North Walsham, in Waxham Deanery, Norfolk. Report II. p. 183 to 185.—Concerning persons present, information is here given in these words: viz. "Present, the Honourable Colonel Wodehouse, in the chair,—Rev. Dr. Hay, and others of the "Clergy and Laity." Quere, Who is this Dr. Hay, who, after the Honourable Chairman, is every body, while all the "others," Clergy and Laity together, are nobody? It looks as if these others were such, that on account of the smallness of their number, or on some other account, prudence forbad the bringing of their names to view.

* XV.—1. Anno 1813, March 9.—Application made in the name of the East-India Company, for two Schoolmasters trained by the Society, to be sent to St. Helena. Report II. p. 16.

design was: in a word, whether it can have been any other, than the design of causing a multitude of acts to be generally regarded as acts of the Society in question, whereas in truth they were not: and in particular the acts here held up to reprobation, under the name of exclusionary acts, and under the notion of their being repugnant to morality and to the religion of Jesus.

§ IX. Authors, acting and consenting, of the combined systems of exclusion and imposition.

Of that system of ill-will towards men, by which the benefits of religious and moral instruction have been withholden from so many, and by which that security which depends upon the religion and morality of all, has been denied to all,—we have seen the authors—active authors and connivers together: viz. those in whom, under the name of members of the General Committee, is vested the sole right of conducting the affairs of the self-styled National Society: Archbishops and Bishops, 26; nominees of the said Archbishops and Bishops, 26 others. Of that system of misrepresentation and imposition, by which the main actors in that anti-christian and anti-social system have endeavoured to hide themselves in the crowd of passive connivers, and by that means to become screened from that pre-eminent share in reproach, which is so justly due,—the existence has also been proved, and the contrivance developed and brought to light.

These main actors then, who are they?—This is what remains to be shewn in the present Section. —These main actors, who are they?—Answer—1. In the first place, constantly and regularly, the President of the self-styled National Society, Dr. Manners Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury, and under him the so often mentioned and no otherwise denominable, T. T. Walmsley, Sec. In the next place, occasionally,—and though probably with not less than equal zeal, yet not with equal assiduity—equal assiduity on the part of any other agent not being deemed necessary,—Dr. William Howley, Lord Bishop of London:—self-constituted Prostrator-General—as there will be such frequent occasion to shew and to remember—Prostrator-General of understandings and wills. (See below, p. 88, &c.)

I. First in order, though neither first in dignity nor equally constant in operation, let us behold his Lordship of London. By this transposition, we shall from the first be rendered the better acquainted, not only with the zeal by which these combined systems have been produced, but with the nature and extent of the designs to the accomplishment of which they have been and are directed.

On all these accounts, what seems matter of indispensable necessity is—that in this place the reader should be presented with a specimen of the graphic art,—in which, by a sort of spiritual imitation of one of the temporal curiosities of Bullock's Museum, two portraits—viz. that of the late Bishop and that of the present—himself being the limner—are so conjoined, that by a slight shifting of position, either the one or the other may be contemplated: both of them being not only enclosed in the same frame, but, like two colours of a changeable silk, both occupying one and the same portion of space. After the examination of this double portrait—and let it be with that attention to which it presents so irresistible a claim—it will rest with the sincere reader, to form his judgment on several points, the importance of which will scarcely be dubious in his eyes:—for example,—

1. Whether it be the fault of either of these Lords of London, any more than of the Bishop of St. David's, if either London or Country still continue to be infested, with any persons who, in opinion (1)* or in practice, (2) by heresy (3) or by schism (4), are separated from the Established Church:—

2. Whether, in this view of the matter, all such persons are not men of “guilt:” (6)—

* Of this and the ensuing figures of reference, the use is—to guide the eye the more promptly to the passage in the ensuing original, from whence the words here quoted have respectively been extracted.—To some readers it may perhaps be found more convenient to peruse the original in the first instance.

3. Whether any such guilt ought to be “palliated :” (7)—

4. Whether any “desire of conciliation,” by which such palliation may be suggested, is not in their view, a “vain desire :” (8)—

5. Whether, according to the principles of the two Prelates, for the purpose of clearing the country from such guilt, (6) the growth of every “opinion” (1) or “practice, (2) which even by remote “ consequence might unsettle the faith of the inexperienced, or introduce confusion and disorder into the Church, (9) ought not to be “checked :” (10)—

6. Whether, for this purpose it has not been the desire, design, and endeavour, of these two Right Reverend persons to “replace ecclesiastical discipline upon its ancient footing :” (11)—

7. Whether that ancient footing be not to be found in the principle and practice of Archbishop Laud, and his predecessors in the days of Elizabeth, or, in respect of every thing but bodily torture, in the practice of the Spanish Inquisition :—

8. Whether among the purposes, for which, in this same Charge, it is declared that the aforesaid “discipline” ought to be,—and which, if the necessary power is to be had, of course will be,—employed, be not the “recovering the rights of the Spiritual Governor :” (12)—

9. Whether, among these rights, which, having once been possessed and exercised, have since been lost, and now remain to be thus "recovered," be not the right of governing, without the concurrence of Parliament all persons in all ecclesiastical matters: that is, in all matters to which it shall be the pleasure of the persons so in power to give that name: that same right being the right formerly possessed and exercised, under the name of Heads of the Church, (successors thereby in England to the Popes,) by Henry the Eighth and his worthy daughters and successors, Mary and Elizabeth; amongst other branches of that same right, that of burning heretics, as exercised by the aforesaid Henry, Mary, and their successor James:—

10. Whether it be not the declared opinion of both these Lords of London, that, in the prosecution of such designs, the "discretion of the ruling power," ought not to be "fettered:" (13).—11. Whether, by the present Lord, this policy be not pronounced a "wise policy;" (14)—and such a policy that, in the "pursuance" of it, "resolution" ought to be "inflexible," (15) and not to be "discouraged by resistance:" (16)—

11. Whether, by the present Lord Bishop's own avowal, it be not in the character of an instrument to be successively employed in the prosecution of these designs, that by both their Lordships, under the name of "the National System of Education," (17) the system, (including the exclusionary system, as above,) pursued by the Society self-styled the National Society, has been supported:—

12. Whether, by the same avowal, all this be any thing more than a sample, of the “advantage,” (18) which, had the late Bishop lived longer, might, with the predestinated approbation and applause of the present Bishop, have been expected from his said predecessor,—had not “the dispensations of Providence” deprived the world of it, by preventing “the complete expansion of his plans :” (19)—

13. Whether, of all the interpretations herein above put upon the words of the Bishop, there be any one, of which,—if received as they stand delivered, i. e. without limitation,—they might not, without any impropriety be regarded as susceptible :—

14. Whether, without giving up any the least of its claims or wishes, the most tyrannical and inhuman ecclesiastical despotism that ever raged, might not employ these same terms in the giving expression to such its claims or wishes :—

15. Whether it has been his Lordship’s pleasure, to vouchsafe to subjoin to these his words so much as a single word of limitation,—having, for its effect or for its object, the clearing of this his predecessor or himself, of the wish or the design to endeavour at the establishment of such a despotism :—

16. And whether it be not among the artifices, of the Lords of Misrule, on whatever Benches seated,—for the purpose of feeling their way, and judging how far they may hope to see others follow them, to express themselves in words of studied generality, to which, as occasion serves, any meaning, between the most perfectly innoxious, and the most perfectly atrocious, may, without verbal impropriety, be attached:—their partizans, according to the disposition eventually manifested by those on whom success depends, being prepared to receive, either with willing applause, or with forced cries of unwarrantableness, the interpretation, which it is their wish to see carried into effect.

After the indications thus afforded of the strokes of character discernible in the two originals, here follow, in one frame as above, the two originals themselves.

Portrait of Dr. Porteus and Dr. Howley, successively Lords of London, as drawn by the said Dr. Howley:—copied from his “Charge,” &c. Anno 1814, pp. 1, 2, 3.

“ From the period of his” (the then late Bishop of London’s) “ first entrance on the higher departments of the Church, he opposed a determined resistance to the spurious liberality, which in the vain desire (8) of conciliation increases division and multiplies heresy, (3) by palliating (7) the guilt (6) of schism, (4) or by diminishing the number and undervaluing the importance of doctrines essential to Christianity. The principal aim of all his labours was the maintenance of sound doctrine and the security of the Established Church, (5) which he justly considered as the bulwark of pure religion, the pillar of divine truth. To this conviction deeply rooted in his mind must we attribute his jealousy of innovation, however specious, his vigilance in exposing the tendency and checking (10) the growth of opinions (1) or practices, (2) which even by remote consequence might unsettle the faith of the inexperienced, or introduce confusion and disorder into the Church. (9) His endeavour to replace ecclesiastical discipline on its ancient footing, (11) to recover the rights and assert the legitimate authority of the Spiritual Governor, (12) originated in the same views. For he had been taught by the records of antiquity no less than by the deductions of reason, that the prosperity of our institutions depends on attention to the spirit of their laws, and that the vigour of discipline is relaxed, and its benefit lost, by weakening the hands and fettering the discretion of the ruling power. (13) In pursuance of this wise policy (14) he manifested an inflexibility of resolution, (15) a firmness of spirit, which could neither be daunted by clamour, nor discouraged by resistance; (16) a perseverance in labour which was never relaxed or interrupted by disgust or lassitude. In proof of the judgment which directed his views, and the zeal which animated his exertions in matters of general utility, we have only to cite his effective co-operation with other distinguished prelates in establishing the National System of Education, (17) and his paternal attention to the numerous cions of this institution, which sprang beneath his fostering care in every part of the diocese.

But I will trespass no longer on your attention, by expatiating on claims to your gratitude of which you are deeply sensible, or endeavouring to estimate the sum of advantage (18) which might have accrued from his active piety, had the dispensations of Providence allowed a longer time for the effect of his labours, and the complete expansion of his plans." (19)

Thus far his present Lordship—Nor need we

torment ourselves with any such endeavour, as that of forming an estimate, of the loss sustained by the suppression of that estimate. Never did the mantle of an Elijah fit more exactly the shoulders of an Elisha. For the Grand Lama of to-day is not more truly one with the Grand Lama of the other day, than the Lord Bishop of London of these same periods. Not more instructively could the “plans” of the departed Lord-Saint have been “expanded” by himself, than they have been, and continue to be by his Right Reverend successor. Behold what you will find written, or at least read by him, in “a Sermon preached in the Cathedral Church of “St Paul, on Thursday,” (in the same year with the year of the date, of the above Charge, but whether before or after, the Charge being without date, is among the unrevealed mysteries,) viz. on Thursday, “June 16, 1814, being the time of “the yearly meeting, of the Children educated in “the Charity Schools, in and about the Cities of “London and Westminster:” and printed in the “Annual Report of the Society,” calling itself the Society “for promoting Christian Knowledge, for “the year 1814.”—Year in the title page 1815.

After mention made of the self-styled National Society and its achievements—“On this ground” (continues his Lordship, p. 15,) “let us manfully take our stand;”—and in this stand let us not only behold but accompany him;—endeavouring, at the expense of here and there a word or two of interpretation, to render this expansion of these his plans, if not the more complete, at any rate the more clearly, and readily, and extensively intelligible.

“ On this ground,” (then says he) “ let us man-“ fully take our stand; in the fixed resolution, “ neither to swerve from the example of our fa“ thers,” [add whether Protestant or Popish], “ nor “ disregard the admonitions of scripture” [add, where they condemn that same example]. “ The “ diffusion of knowledge,” (continues he) the diffusion of knowledge “ disjoined from religious in“ struction,” [add, viz. as you will see presently, in that profession, and that alone, in which under the name of the profession of our ancestors, we Bishops and those under us administer it] — this diffusion of knowledge “ stands in the same relation to igno“ rance, as positive evil to the absence of good.
 “ It is an enormous encrease of power, without “ any adequate check or controul; injurious to “ the individual, injurious to the community, and “ thus destructive of happiness, the only reasonable “ end of all attempts at improvement.” [Add, and herein we adopt, and in and by our adoption strengthen, as well as purify, the doctrine of that successor of Mahomet, by whom the library of Alexandria was purified of its contents. Either they are the same, says he, with those of the Koran, or they are different:—if the same, they are useless, if different, worse than useless.] “ And here” (continues his Lordship) “ we should carefully guard against the “ dangerous maxims, too often recommended, by “ the specious names of liberality, charity, and love “ of peace. INDIFFERENCE TO FORMS OF “ FAITH IS INDIFFERENCE TO TRUTH

 “ OR FALSEHOOD. The Gospel we receive “ with reverential acquiescence as the word of “ God. But the doctrine which rests on erroneous interpretation,” [add, and every interpretation but our own is of course erroneous,] “ or perverse ex“ position, of the sacred text,” [add, and every ex- position but our own is perverse,] “ is the vain ima“ gination of man, usurping the authority of scrip“ ture, and extruding divine truth. From our “ ancestors,” [add, viz. from those among them who stood up in opposition to those principles of immutability, which I am inculcating,] “ we have inherited the “ profession” [add, in opposition to the practice] “ of primitive and genuine Christianity; and in “ neglecting to secure its transmission, in unabated “ purity, to after-ages, we should be guilty of the “ most unprincipled injustice to our children, the “ most criminal disregard to the interests of pos“ terity. A definite system of doctrines” [add, viz. presented by us] “ is of equal necessity, to “ maintain the integrity of revelation,” [add, re- velation being unable to maintain its own integrity,] “ and to prevent the introduction of dangerous and “ corrupt novelties. Nor can we have rational “ assurance, that any succeeding generation will be “ trained in the genuine principles of Christianity, “ but in the indissoluble connexion of National “ Education with our National Faith :” [add, viz.

of an Education which forces children to say they believe, without knowing what it is, every thing which we Bishops are paid, from 2,500l. to 25,000l. a year, for professing to believe]

Bravo, Lord of London !—“ Disjoined from re“ ligious instruction”—viz. instruction in “ the re“ ligion of our ancestors”—Protestant and Popish—not to mention Heathen—and to the exclusion of all other instruction,—knowledge is then, according to your Lordship, so much “ positive evil.”—Annihilate, oh Lord, all human learning!—This is Baker *out-Bakered. Annihilate all human learning?— and for what?—Only to save from the melting-pot a few hundreds of antichristian and vice-engendering Sinecures.—Ye Gods, annihilate but space and time, and make two lovers happy !—Compared with the inward Episcopal prayer included in the above doctrine, this amorous one was a rational one. But why speak of such a wish as if it were peculiar to lovers? The miracle which the amorous religionist only prayed for, his Lordship’s friend the

* Under some such title as Reflexions upon Human Learning, an 8vo. written by a Reverend Mr. Baker, to shew the uselessness of any other knowledge than that of things which are above knowledge, is still to be seen now and then in Catalogues.

Archbishop, we have seen—if not atchieving, at least labouring at. In his way we have been seeing both time and place—if not annihilated, suppressed. Suppressed?—and for what? Only to save from the light of day the work of his hands—the exclusionary system—the mind-extinguishing system—that sanctified and so well-elaborated production of the modern den of CACUS.

§ X. Authors, &c. continued. Dr. Manners Sutton, Archbishop of Canterbury.

II. Next, as to the Archbishop of Canterbury.

In the tract so often referred to by the title of Report I, year of date 1812,—after a page occupied by the words “Account of the Proceedings for the Formation of the National Society,” the five next succeeding pages are occupied by a paper bearing at the top of the page in the form of a title, (p. 5,) the words—Education in the Principles of the Established Church. Upon examination, what this paper is found to contain, is—an Account of so much of those same proceedings, as was antecedent to those spoken of in the Report by which by the several titles of “Report of the General Committee of the National Society,” in a preceding page,—and Report of the General Committee, at the head of the commencing page,—it is immediately followed.

For the authentication of this Account no name is visible. True it is, that at the end of it may be seen, though without day or place, the words “ H.

 “ H. Norris, Acting Secretary:” but what is thus authenticated, if by it any thing can be said to be authenticated, is—not on account of those same proceedings, but of some other proceedings subsequent to them: viz. the laying them (at no time) before the Prince Regent,* who (at no time) has been pleased to signify his entire approbation of the same, and (at the same or some other such no time,) “ has condescended to offer to become the Patron
 “ of the Society:” nor, such as it is, does the authentication,—thus given by this Mr. Norris, whoever he is, and supposing a person at that time in existence to have written that word, as and for his name,—appear to have been given at any time or place.

In the Account, given as above of the Society in its Pre-Adamitic state,—in this Account, such as it is (viz. in p. 6,) the first fact that presents itself is—that, for the purpose therein previously described, “ a number of persons, friends to the Esta- “ blishment at a meeting holden on the 16th day “ of October, 1811,” (persons and place kept concealed) “ His Grace the Archbishop of Canter“ bury, in the Chair, Resolved, That such a So“ ciety be now constituted, and that measures be “ taken for carrying the same into effect. That “ for this purpose the Archbishop of Canterbury

* Page 9.

“for the time being be President:”—all future Archbishops of Canterbury being it seems for this purpose, thus disposed of by his said Grace and the other Members of this Secret Association, whoever they were.

Thereafter, at two succeeding meetings, (page 6, 7,) neither of which was any more than the first, held at any place, divers functions are assigned to the said President, in conjunction with a set of persons therein described under the name and title of Vice-Presidents, among whom the Bishop of London, viz. the late Bishop, whose portrait has just been seen, occupies a prominent place.

In the last place comes an account of a meeting, styled a general meeting, which appears to be the fourth meeting held by these anonymous persons, who are so constantly and so justly ashamed of themselves, viz. “October 21, 1811.—At a general “meeting of the National Society,” (then follows its long winded title),—therein said to be holden at Bow Church, but if really held there, held, it is sufficiently manifest, with close doors, “His Grace “the Archbishop of Canterbury, in the Chair,”—of four unnumbered Resolutions, the second is—that “he be requested to lay the proceedings of this meeting “ing” (this meeting of anonymous and self-concealed confederates) “before . . . the Prince Regent:”—the third, that the foregoing Resolutions (numbered Resolutions, fourteen in number, declared at a former secret meeting,) “be made public as soon

“ as the Archbishop and Bishop of London shall “ direct:” and the fourth and last, “ That the “ thanks of this meeting be given to the Most Re“ verend the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, for “ the zeal and ability manifested by him in the “ formation of this Society.” And from and after this day, 21st October, 1811, the Society, it seems, is regarded as formed.

In Report II, in relation to his Grace of Canterbury, nothing material has been found.

But now comes Report III: and now the number of Schools having by this time been raised to 360, and that of Scholars to 60,000, (p. 19.),—and the blindness of the public at large to the Exclusionary system and its abominations sufficiently established,—now comes the time, when the veil is to be taken off, and the glory ascribed to him to whom it is most due. Now accordingly it is that we are informed (p. 30,) that “ at all their delibera- “ tions” (the deliberations of nobody knows who,)
 “ his Grace was constantly presiding.”—Presiding?
 —Yes—presiding: and this being Report III, and that the latest Report extant, the deliberations thus spoken of are the deliberations, by which all the several portions of time, the accounts of which are given in these three Reports are supposed to have been occupied.

“ Presiding?” Yes, presiding.—“ Deliberations?”
 —Yes, deliberations.—To any of those cursory glances, which alone were calculated upon by these Reports, all this shews clear enough. Look a little closer, lights true and false, it will be seen, have here been blended together.

Apply the discriminating prism, the false may be separated from the true.—Presiding?—Yes, in this one convenient word are conjoined two different propositions: 1. that on each occasion, what was done received the sanction of the person, whose official name was the President: 2. that it received the sanction of certain other persons, in every instance, in a number sufficient to constitute, according to the nature of the case, a Committee, or a Sub-Committee. To the first of these two propositions, credence may, with little danger of error, be attached. That with any thing like equal security it cannot be given to the others, is a proposition, the truth of which will, it is believed, by this time be found pretty well established.

“Deliberations?”—What then, and amongst whom, were these deliberations? Of non-existing public bodies, such as Committees and Sub-Committees, the deliberations will also have been non-existing. But that on a subject thus interesting, by his Grace of Canterbury no deliberations at all were ever held, this would be too much to affirm. Deliberations? Oh yes, in the course of the three or four years in question, deliberations doubtless not a few.—Deliberations, with his Lordship of London, at a dinner, or an evening party—at Court, or at the House: deliberations with his Grace's pillow, meaning the nightly pillow: deliberations with his said Grace's daily pillow,—the ever ready “T. T. Walmsley, Sec.” Of any more regular deliberations—of any deliberations of any one Committee at which his Grace presided, search the Reports—all three of them—no traces will you find.

The ———, thus carried on against the religion and morality of the people, having, under the smiles of the government been entered into and organized, with little less secrecy than if it had been a ——— against the Government, hence it is, that when the documents fail—documents all along furnished, after having been fabricated, garbled, or truncated, in such manner as was deemed most conducive to their designs—fabricated, garbled, truncated, by the ——— themselves—opinion, on the part of one who is not in the secret, should not, and therefore, on this occasion, will not, venture beyond the limits of conjecture.

But—once more—Deliberations?—Yes: by this happily chosen ambiguous word, in addition to so many other happily chosen ambiguous words, that which, if so many suppressions as have been seen, had any object, could not without manifest falsehood have been directly affirmed, is most effectually insinuated: viz. the existence,—and that the constant existence,—of Sub-Committees, and of regular and frequent meetings of such Sub-

Committees, as well as of the General Committee: Sub-Committees proposing and preparing; (Report II. p. 5.) General Committee approving and adopting: while by all that has been said, not so much as of a single Sub-Committee—(over and above the singular one so often mentioned)—not to speak of the General Committee—for any purpose of business, will the existence of any one meeting be found ventured to be affirmed.

No: never, at the commencement of any enterprise which probity would have shrunk from, never were such marks of trepidation exhibited, exhibited under so perfect an assurance of impunity. Of this meeting, as well as of two preceding meetings, the time indeed disclosed, but by the concealment of the place, the disclosure rendered useless. The place, at any rate, was one that had bars and bolts to it. What was that place? Was it Lambeth Palace? Was it London Palace, with such extraordinary and ill-assorted humility, lowered down to "London House?"—Enquire of the Angels,—winged or not winged,—inhabitants of those holy places.

Archbishop of Canterbury, President,—Archbishop of York and the other Bishops, sole original Vice-Presidents—of the all-governing Committee;—Ten temporal Peers or Privy-Counsellors, profane indeed, but sanctified by the nomination made of them by these consecrated persons;—Sixteen other members, sacred and profane together, below the rank of Vice-President, but still nominated by the same sacred persons;—Four vacancies to be made in each year;—but the filling up of these vacancies not to be trusted, even to a “General Meeting” howsoever composed, but out of “a double list” (whatsoever be meant by a double list) formed by the President and Vice-Presidents,—of the first set of sixteen the initiative appointment not having been trusted to any less sure and zealous hands, than those of his Grace of Canterbury and his Lordship of London; —penetrate who can, into the interior of the fortress thus reared and entrenched.*

* After stating what was done at the meeting of 16th Oct. 1811, being the first meeting of all, and that a secret one,—viz. the Resolution for the constituting a Society for the purposes above mentioned,—the choice of the Archbishop of Canterbury for President,—the appointment of a Special Committee to consider of a Constitution, and make report to a meeting called a General Meeting,—and that the Committee had met accordingly, and, the Bishop of London being in the Chair, had come to certain Resolutions, of which those herein above printed, p. 95, are two, (being Resolutions declarative of the title and object of the Society),—the string of Resolutions is contained (Report I. p. 6.) in the words following, viz.—

“ 3. That His Grace the Archbishop of York, and the Right “ Reverend the Bishops of both Provinces, for the time being,
 “ be Vice-Presidents, together with ten temporal Peers, or “ Privy-Counsellors, to be nominated by the President and other “ Vice-Presidents for the present, and as vacancies may happen “ in future.

“ 4. That a Committee of sixteen, besides the President and

Of all this secrecy,—secrecy in the conduct of a concern in itself of the most public nature,—of “ Vice-Presidents, who are members ex officio, be appointed to “ manage the affairs of the Society.

“ 5. That the appointment of the Sixteen, for the present “ year, be left to the President and the Bishop of London, and “ such other Bishops as shall be in town; and on all future oc“ casions to the President and Vice-Presidents, according to the “ manner hereinafter specified.

“ 6. That the Sixteen now be appointed to continue in office “ till the first General Meeting.

“ 7. That a fourth part of the said Sixteen resign their office “ at the end of the year, but be capable of immediate re-“ election.

“ That a double list be formed by the President and Vice-“ Presidents, out of which the annual general meeting shall “ elect the persons, who are to fill up the vacancies.

“ 8. That a general meeting be holden annually in the month “ of May or June, or oftener, if the Committee shall think “ it expedient.

“ 9. That at the same a report of the Society's proceedings
“ be made, a Statement of the accounts for the year be laid “ before the Meeting, and the vacancies in the Committee be “ filled up as above stated.

“ 10. That all Subscribers of not less than one guinea an“ nually, or Benefactors to the amount of ten guineas, be qua“ lified to attend such meeting.

“ 11. That a Treasurer and a Secretary be appointed by the “ Committee; the former to be ex officio a member of the Com“ mittee.

“ 12. That Sir Thomas Plumer, Solicitor-General, and J. A.
“ Park, Esq. be Auditors for the present year, and that new au“ ditors be elected at each general meeting for the ensuing year.

“ 13. That all this mystery, what was the final cause and motive.

Several may in conjunction be assigned to it :

1. Fear of the odium, so justly attached to the exclusionary system :—an odium, of which the Confederates had already had a foretaste, in the above reported passage, (see above, Part III,) in the preface to the publication of the Poor-bettering Society :—2. Unwillingness to let it be seen, by how small a portion, of those to whom the right of co-operating could not but be imparted, any such exertion as that which would be necessary to the exercise of that right would ever be made :—3. Advantage seen, in the great facility afforded by the darkness with which the face of this deep was covered :—the facility of practising upon the country that imposition, which from first to last has been seen practised upon it; viz. the imposition that consists in causing men to believe, that bodies of men—organized and elected bodies—have throughout been bearing a part—in a business, which throughout has been in truth the work of one and the same single individual, with or without the occasional and irregularly afforded encouragement and support, of this or that other at pleasure,—the drudgery

“ 13. That the Committee have power to make such Rules
“ and Regulations as may be expedient for carrying into execu“ tion the designs of the Society.”

14. Naming Banking-Houses for receipt of Benefactions.

part of the business being all along the work of a subordinate and effectually obsequious mind:—
 4. Convenience, afforded by the exclusion, applied not only to all witnesses to discussion, but even to all discussion itself;—to all discussion, under any circumstances, which should leave to it so much as the pretence of being free.—In this list behold a set of causes, abundantly adequate to the production of all these symptoms of self-conscious improbity:—and, by him who thinks he can find them, let any other less dishonourable ones be found.

On this occasion, the most Reverend the Archbishop, and his Reverend right-hand man, the Secretary, found two not very readily accordant duties, waiting to be moulded into consistency. One was—of the parcel of glory,—to which, after surrender thereof made into the hands of God in quality of Lord of the Manor, the Tenant is regularly re-admitted, with the glory of humility annexed to it,—to allot the largest portion possible to the one most deserving person: i. e. (for, under the Church of England hierarchy, these are synonymous terms) to the person whose place stands highest in the joint scale of power, dignity, and opulence:—the other was—to avoid saying any thing, that should stand in direct contradiction to the all along continued notion, so plainly (Rep. II. p. 5.) meant to be conveyed, viz. that, whatsoever has been done, it is by a Committee that it has been done: a Committee of the one sort or the other, in the composition of which, in either case, to make the least of it, members, more than one or two must on each occasion have been included.

To change the figure—it is truly edifying to observe the steersmanship displayed by the Reverend Secretary in his passage through these straits. The conclusion of the paragraph has already been seen: and, down to this conclusion, here follows the commencement —(Report III. p. 30.)—“ Here “ they” (viz. the General Committee, i. e. the Archbishop and this his well matched Secretary) would “ close their Report, if they did not deem it of im- “ portance to let it be known to the Public, that the “ conduct and management of the Institution has “ never ceased to engage the consideration of many “ of the first characters both in Church and State, “ who have been selected for that purpose by the Society “ *at large. It would be superfluous to enumerate

* “ Selected by the Society at large?” Unhappily this is a what shall we say?—a mere invention; alas! and that a studied one: it is in pursuance of the plan which gave birth to this untruth, that, to the governing body, the appellation of The General Committee—by which was to be understood The General Committee of the Society at large—has been all along applied. General Committee of the National Society at large—nominated by the Society at large—(i. e. as per Resolution 8, 9, 10, p. 184 of this, by the whole body of the Contributors)—such is the false notion endeavoured to be conveyed.—The truth is—that never has any thing been done by the Society at large. No such nomination made: no such “ selection” made, as is above stated in the text. For a complete exposure of this fraud, see below, § 12.

“ individually all those whose exertions have been “ eminently serviceable ; but it must be satisfactory “ to the Public to learn, and therefore it is their “ duty not to withhold the fact, that, notwithstanding “ ing the demands on the time of”
 &c.:—and then comes the above-mentioned passage (see p. 169 of this) about the constant presidency.

Such is the mention made of the persons, in relation to whom, the design appears to have been—that, of these same persons, by us who are not in the secret, it should be understood,—that the several Sub-Committees and meetings of the General Committee have all along been composed. To have said as much in direct terms, would have been a direct falsehood ; and that,—to several persons in the first instance, and by means of some of them to persons in general,—sooner or later, a notorious one. But, by the phraseology thus ingeniously and happily contrived, the scandal, that would have resulted from any such discovery, was avoided.

The National Society!—not merely a National Society, but the National Society!—as if in the whole nation there neither ever was, nor ever can be any other Society?—The National Society?—No : to a Society constituted for such ends—in such manner and form—and by such means—to give the style and title of the National Society,—is a libel upon the Nation.—A Society, of which the end in view is oppression, the form despotic, the first means secrecy, the ulterior means imposture?—a Society set on foot by a knot of persons, who were and are ashamed or afraid to own themselves? a Society, of which, from first to last, the business has been done, by persons who from the first to the last, have been and still are, ashamed or afraid to make known the parts they respectively had in it?—this, in England, a National Society?—and not only a National Society but the only one?—Yes:—self-assumed names, long and short—members—operations—in this Society, such as it has been already seen to be, every thing is of a piece.

The Bishops' Society—the Members of it, all of them, either themselves Bishops, or nominees of Bishops—The Bishops' Society—a job for the Bishops, set on foot by the Bishops—carried on by and for Bishops—such, it has been seen, is its nature—such and such alone is the name, by which it should be called.

§ XI. How to organize a Chaos—Forms of Disorder exemplified in these Reports.

Thus much concerning the supposed system of imposition, considered in that same character,—as also concerning its author or authors. But even supposing all sinister design out of the question,—every thing that is amiss having imbecility for its sole cause,—even on this supposition the few additional pages that may be necessary to the placing of this imbecility in its true light, will scarcely be thought to lie open to the charge of being wasted on an unworthy subject. Yes—if the Reverend T. T. Walmsley, Sec., so often mentioned, were the only person to whom the symptoms of incapacity about to be displayed were imputable. But, among the persons whose fitness for these respective offices is at stake, in the character either of penners or approvers,—are those who, taken together, form no small portion, of those members of the great community, on whose fitness for the functions respectively exercised by them, the lot of all the others,—not to speak of those persons themselves,—is in so great a degree dependent.

1. First, as to the Archbishop of Canterbury. Whether, for the general scheme of execution, as well as for the original design,—it be not to his Grace, in conjunction with the two successive Lords of London, that the acknowledgements of the public are, in the first place, if not exclusively due—is a point, which, with such grounds for decision as presented themselves, has already been submitted to the judgment of the sincere reader. But the point now in question is the penmanship: and it will now be to be seen—whether, of whatsoever glory may be derivable from this source, either the entire mass, or at least by far the principal portion, belongs not by an indisputable title to his said Grace.

In relation to the body, in which, in and by these Reports, his Grace is throughout represented as acting in the character of President,—the doubts which have presented themselves, as attaching to its title to its assumed appellative of a Committee, will presently be brought to view. But, be this as it may, Committee is the name there given, to a body to such a degree Parliamentary, that the whole body of Lords Spiritual formed but a part of it. Now then,—as in the House of Commons, so in the House of Lords,—as often as a paper, under the name of a Report, is penned, a Committee being the authority, in the name of which it appears, the hand of the Chairman of that same Committee is the hand, by which, at any rate it is always supposed to be penned,—and, unless by accident, always is penned.

In the penning of these papers, suppose even any subordinate hand—suppose, as next in course, the hand of T. T. Walmsley, Sec. to have been ever so busy—suppose accordingly that in the main they belong not to his Grace on the score of generation,—at any rate they cannot but have belonged to his said Grace on the score of adoption: which circumstance, even without any direct evidence,—if not for all purposes of admiration, at any rate for all purposes of commiseration,—suffices to render it as much his Grace's work as if it had been by his Grace's most Reverend hand that the characters had been penned, or by his Grace's most Reverend lips, that the sounds of which they are expressive had been dictated.

Not, however, to any such ground of inference, is his said Grace's claim to the title of adoptive parent of this intellectual progeny confined. In Report II. p. 18., at his Grace's motion, &c. &c. a Resolution passed, ordering that "of the proceedings of this Society a correct statement for the" [then] "last year be published forthwith:"—and, in Report III. p. 28., in the discharge of the duties of his "peculiarly laborious office," among which are particularized the having "to attend upon all its (the Society's) Committees, and to record all its proceedings:" his "merits" are stated as being such on which "it may be thought unnecessary to enlarge."

Of the work in question, be it what it may, the paternity, by a title thus indisputable, belongs then to his said Grace.

What the work consists of is—a Report,—i. e. a statement—summary statement—of the proceedings of a public body,—followed, as usual, by an Appendix, composed of a number of separate papers, or written discourses,—which, instead of being interwoven in the narrative, are, for shortness, discarded out of it,—and in each instance are, or at least ought to be, referred to in it. On the present occasion, the body of the Report is out of the question: all that belongs to the occasion is the Appendix.

Even in the Appendix, all that belongs to the present purpose is comprehended under two heads, viz. 1. giving,—in or in connexion with the body of the Report,—in relation to each article in the Appendix, that brief indication of the distinguishing nature of its contents, which is commonly denominated a title : and 2. the attaching to it, in some way or other, according to the nature of it, those tokens of authenticity, which lead to the proof that it is what it assumes to be : and in particular that it is the discourse of the person or persons whose discourse it assumes to be :—and, in so far as, with relation to the contents of the individual article in question, independently of the question of authenticity, the circumstance of time is on any other account material, at what point of time the paper received its existence, or its currency, as the case may be.

On this occasion, the difficulty that belongs to the occasion consists—not so much in the keeping to the track of propriety,—but in the conceiving how, in relation to either of the two just mentioned points, it could have happened to a man to depart from it. This track is no other than what every man, one should have thought, would have fallen into, and continued in of course. Among so many Reports, as, in every session, are given in by so many Committees of the House of Commons—not to speak of the House of great dignity and small use—among all these instruments, not so much perhaps as one would be to be found, which, how indifferently soever penned in other respects, might not in these two particulars have afforded to the penner of the Reports here in question a pattern for imitation:—a pattern, and that so plain and complete an one, that, so long as the author kept his work in a state of conformity to it, the work could not go amiss.

In this sort of parliamentary composition are included both the above points—viz. title and tokens of authenticity: but, as to what concerns the tokens of authenticity, and in them as to what concerns the date,—among the letters, which, under the direction of the master, a boy at a Boarding School writes to his parents, scarcely would any one be found, that did not present a pattern, the non-observance of which, together with the darkness of which it has been productive, has already been seen exemplified in this performance of the head of the Church-of-England Clergy. Obviating any such imputation as that of spuriousness, would not indeed be either within the school-boy's view, or congenial to the nature and purpose of such his performance: but, when applied to the case of a public body, these circumstances, mention of which would, by the school-boy, be made of course, are not the less applicable to the public purpose now before us.

It is now time to give a sort of general outline of the chaos, the particular features of which have already, most of them, been separately brought to view. The forms of disorder, which will be seen exemplified, will, it is believed, be found referable to one or other of the thirteen ensuing heads:—

1. Form of Disorder 1.—To the article in question,—though in the Appendix shot down in the midst of a set of titled articles,—in no fewer than nine instances, no title any where. None to the article itself: none in the Table of Contents: accordingly, the articles in that Table being, in the customary way, distinguished by Nos., no No. to it there or elsewhere:—consequently, no reference to it in the body of the Report.*

*I. Instances in Report I.

- I. Report I. p. 54.—Advertisement, declaring how Parishes, &c. may unite themselves to this Society, (i. e. place themselves under the direction of the governing body), viz. through the Bishop of the Diocese: and correspond with it; viz. through its Secretary.
- II. Report I. p. 64.—Advertisement, stating who the Trustees are, in whose names the government annuities belonging to the Society are invested.
- III. Report I. p. 64.—Advertisement, mentioning who the Bankers are, in whose hands such part of the Society's money, as is destined for current expenses, is lodged.
- IV. Report I. p. 197.—List of Country Schools, to which pecuniary aid has been afforded by the governing body.
- V. Report I. pp. 197, 198.—List of Books recommended as Lesson-Books for the Schools.—N. B. In Report II. pp. 189, 190, this article will be found: and in that place with a title, such as it will be seen to be; and moreover accordingly with a No. in that place, as well as in the Table of Contents. And so likewise again in Report III. pp. 168, 169. See above p. 134.

II. Instances in Report II.

None, except as underneath.

III. Instances in Report III.

VI.—1. Notices to Country Parishes, concerning the terms of Union. It consists of an Extract from Report I. (viz. from the body of the Report), p. 19, that being the last. At the conclusion are the following words in Italics—“Extract from the first Report of June 1812:” as if there had been two Reports, both issued at that same no-time. Whence this date was taken,—imperfect as, for want of the day of the month, it is,—does not appear: no such date has been found any where attached to this Report. The page in which the Extract is printed, is, as above, p. 19. But, in the reference thus made, the No. of the page is not comprized. Of this Extract, such as it is, the rationally expectable use seems not very easy to discover. Without mention made of it in the body of the Report,—without No. to lead to it in the Table of Contents, or consequently to the paper itself in the Appendix in which it is placed,—without so much as a title to attract the eye, unless a pair of words, so completely uncharacteristic as the words NATIONAL SOCIETY, be regarded as a title,—it lies thus buried in the Appendix, where the chances are, in each instance—who shall say how many?—against its being descried by the eye, for which, if for any thing, it must have been intended. Had it been inserted in the body of this third Report, as it was in that of the first Report, the probability of its answering its purpose would have been at its maximum: as it is, it is at its minimum:—in the body, the number of pages being but 30; in the Appendix, 158,—besides a long series of unnumbered ones.

VII. 2. Report I. p. 64.—“Form of leaving a legacy to the Society.”
Furnished as it is with this title upon the face of the paper itself, this article will not in strictness come exactly under the form of disorder here in question, according to the description above given of it. It does however in essentials: for, in the Table of Contents it has no place: nor consequently, in the Appendix, into which it has found its way by a chance throw, has it any No. to distinguish it. In this Report it comes next after the abovementioned Notes about the Bankers.

2. Form of Disorder 2.—In three instances, Title, —and accordingly a No. in the Table of Contents: No., but no title to the article itself.*

VIII. 3. Report II. p. 199.—In this Report, viz. in this place in the Report, this same article is reprinted in the same manner. It here stands last but one; having no articles after it but that which exhibits the allowance given to the Year's Account by the Auditors.

IX. 4. Report III. p. 181. So likewise in this third Report. Position, the same as in Report II.

* Instances in Report I.

I. Report I. p. 49. No. 5.—Proceedings of the Deanery of Tendering, in the County of Essex.

II. Report I. p. 65. No. 10.—Substance of the Applications from the Forest of Dean.

III. Report I. p. 66. No. 11.—Extract from the Statement of the Society of School-Masters.

Of this form of disorder no instance has been found, either in Report II. or in Report III.

At the time of the penning of Report II., the penman had become aware, of the incongruity of omitting to give any title to the article itself, in a case in which a title stood attached to it in the Table of Contents. But, among the things that remain still to be learnt by him are—1. the incongruity of attaching to the article itself a title which is not characteristic of its contents: and 2. the incongruity of employing, for the designation of an article in the Table of Contents, a title which is otherwise than exactly conformable to the title attached to the article itself.

3. Form of Disorder 3.—In ten instances, Title of the article more or less uncharacteristic of its contents.*

* Instances in Report I.

- I. 1. Report I. p. 25. No. 2.—“ Address to the Public. January 29th, 1812.”—Object, soliciting Contributions.
- II. 2. Report I. p. 58. No. 7.—“ Advertisement of the Society, April 8th, 1812.” Object, in the foreground—notice of the opening of a School; Object, in the back-ground—opinions, thought, belief, desire and readiness, exhortations—ascribed to the whole Society.

Instances in Report II.

- I. 3. Report II. pp. 179 to 185. No. 3.—“ Paper circulated by “ the Norfolk and Norwich Society, for the Education of the “ Poor in the Principles of the Established Church.”—Subject, Plan for the extension of the system. Proceedings at North Walsham, in Norfolk.
- II. 4. Report II. p. 188. No. 5.—“ Advertisement of the National Society, April 8th, 1812.” See above, instance 2.
- III. 5. Report II. p. 189. No. 6.—“ NATIONAL SOCIETY, “ For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church.” Object, recommendation of Lesson-Books.
- IV. 6. Report II. p. 191. No. 7.—“ NATIONAL SOCIETY, “ For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the “ Established Church.” Object, miscellaneous: School opened—Masters trained—Books recommended—Report I. printed—Money offered—Prosperity declared. See above, p. 142.

Instances in Report III.

- I. 7. Report III. p. 168. No. 4.—“ NATIONAL SOCIETY,

4. Form of Disorder 4.—In three instances, Contents of the article heterogeneous: the title applicable to no more than a part of them.*

“For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the “Established Church.” Object, recommendation of Lesson-
Books. See above, instance 5.

II. 8. Report III. p. 170. No. 5.—“NATIONAL SOCIETY,
“For the Education of the Poor in the principles of the “Established Church.” Object, miscellaneous. See above, instance 6.

III. 9. Report III. p. 178. No. 9.—“SOCIETY OF SECRE-“TARIES.”—Contents, Resolution passed in London, by a Society composed of Secretaries to Local Societies. Objects— Concentrating in London information of the state of the Country Education—Appointment of a Visitor-General.

IV. 10. Report III. p. 182. No. 10.—“NATIONAL SO-“CIETY, For the Education of the Poor in the Principles “of the Established Church.”—Contents, Auditor’s allowance of the Accounts. N. B. To the corresponding article of the first year, a characteristic title may be seen attached in Report I.

In no one of these instances, as far as appears, would the talent of the penman serve him, for conveying any the most general information, concerning the contents, object, or subject of the article. Instead of it, what he gives is—what appears to have been constantly in his thoughts—a puff, expressive of the personal and party feelings, in which, the whole design so manifestly originated. Church for ever! Excellent Church for ever! Huzza! Hallelujah!

* Instances in Report I.

I. Report I. p. 58. No. 7.—Title uncharacteristic:—viz. “Advertisement of the National Society, April 8, 1812.”—Contents,
1. One London School opened, viz. in Baldwin’s Gardens:—2.
another about to be:—no more intended.—3. Local Schools

5. Form of Disorder 5.—In twenty-one instances, Title in the Table of Contents not conformable to the title at the head of the article itself.*

recommended.—4. Union and pecuniary assistance offered to them.—5. Exhortations to all, especially Clergy, to become contributors.—To no more than the two first of these articles, does the appellation Advertisement seem applicable. See above, Form of Disorder 3: where, the purpose being different, the summary is slightly different.

Instances in Report II.

- I. 2. Report II. p. 188. No. 5. The same as the above.
- II. 3. p. 191. No. 7.—Titles uncharacteristic: viz. the standing puff, National Society, &c. as above, Form 3.—Contents—1. The Baldwin's Gardens School opened and inspectable. 2. For Masters and Mistresses, persons will be received and trained in London. 3. Lesson-Books on what terms furnished. 4. Society's object, what. 5. Contributions solicited. 6. Progress reported. 7. Pecuniary aid offered to local Schools. 8. Success declared. 9. Contributions when and where receivable.

N. B. Most of these articles seem to present matter for so many separate advertisements. But any attempt to decompose the mass and give arrangement to its contents would be lost labour here.

* Titles in the Tables of Contents.	Titles at the Head of the Papers themselves.
-------------------------------------	--

Instances in Report I.

- | | |
|---|--|
| I. (Report I. p. 25.) "No. II.—Address to the Public." | "No. II.—Address to the Public, 29th January, 1812." |
| II. (Report I. p. 29.) "No. IV.—List of Diocesan, District, and other Societies, united to the National Society." | "No. IV. Summary of Reports from Diocesan, District, and other Societies, united to the National Society." |

Titles in the Tables of Contents.

III. (Report I. p. 60.) "No. VIII.—Rules for the Office of Treasurer and Secretary."

N. B. It should have been Offices: though by the phraseology the opposite meaning is, in both places, expressed.

IV. (Report I. p. 62.) "No. IX.—Audit of the Accounts from Oct. 21, 1811, to May 18, 1812."

Titles at the Head of the Papers themselves.

"No. VIII.—Duties of the Treasurer and Secretary."

"No. IX.—National Society's Account of Receipt and Expenditure, from 21st of October, 1811, to 18th of May, 1812."

Instances in Report II.

V. (1. Report II. p. 178.) "No. II.—Grants of Money made by the National Society to Diocese and District Societies and Schools in Union with it."

"No. II.—Grants of Money made by the National Society to Diocesan and District Societies and Schools in Union with it, since the annual General Meeting, 3d of June, 1812."

VI. (2. Report II. pp. 179 to 185.) "No. III.—Paper circulated by the Norfolk and Norwich Society."

"No. III.—Paper circulated by the Norfolk and Norwich Society, for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church."

VII. (3. Report II. p. 186.) "No. IV.—Plan of Union."

"No. IV.—National Society—PLAN of UNION. February, 1812."

VIII.

Titles in the Tables of Contents.

Titles at the Head of the Papers themselves.

- | | |
|--|---|
| VIII. (4. Report II. p. 189.)
 " No. VI.—Ditto, August, 1812." IX. (5. Report II. p. 191.)
 " No. VII.—Ditto, February, 1813." X. (6. Report II. p. 194.)
 " No. VIII.—Present State of the Central School in Baldwin's Gardens." XI. (7. Report II. p. 197.)
 " No. IX.—Form of Certificate for Masters." XII. (8. Report II. p. 197.)
 " No. X.—Regulation for Training Masters." XIII. (9. Report II. p. 200.)
 " No. XI.—Audit of the Accounts from May, 1812, to June, 1813." | " No. VI.—National Society, For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church." " No. VII.—National Society, For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church." " No. VIII.—The present state of the Central School in Baldwin's Gardens." " No. IX.—Form of Certificate for Masters, National Society Central School." " No. X.—Rules and Regulations for Training Masters." " No. XI.—National Society for the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church." |
|--|---|

Instances in Report III.

- | | |
|--|--|
| XIV. (1. Report III. p. 165.)
 " No. II.—Grants of Money made by the National Society to Diocesan and District Societies and Schools in Union with it." | " No. II.—Grants of Money made by the National Society to Diocesan and District Societies in Union with it, since the annual General Meeting, 2d June, 1813." |
|--|--|

XV.

6. Form of Disorder 6.—Out of twenty-six instances, in all of which, if in any one, a demand for the form of words By order of the Committee had place, (viz. at the end of the article, and immediately before the signature,) this same form of

Titles in the Tables of Contents.	Titles at the Head of the Papers themselves.
XV. (2. Report III. p. 166.) “No. III.—Plan of Union.”	“No. III.—National Society. —Plan of Union, February, 1812.”
XVI. (3. Report III. p. 168.) “No. IV.—Advertisement of the National Society, Aug. 1812.”	“No. IV.—National Society, For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Established Church.”
XVII. (4. Report III. p. 170.) “No. V.—Ditto, February, 1813.”	“No. V.—National Society, For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Estab- lished Church.”
XVIII. (5. Report III. p. 173.) “No. VI. Present State of the Central School in Bald- win’s Gardens.”	“No. VI.—The present State of the Central School, Bald- win’s Gardens.”
XIX. 6. (Report III. p. 176.) “No. VII.—Form of Certifi- cate for Masters.”	“No. VII.—Form of Certifi- cate for Masters, National Society Central School.”
XX. (7. Report III. p. 176.) “No. VIII.—Regulations for Training Masters.”	“No. VIII.—Rules and Regu- lations for Training Masters.”
XXI. (8. Report III. p. 176.) “No. X.—Audit of the Ac- counts from May, 1813, to June, 1814.”	“No. X. National Society, For the Education of the Poor in the Principles of the Estab- lished Church.”

words attached to the article in four instances, not attached to it in the remaining twenty-two.*

* By order of the Committee,—what?—Here is an ellipsis; how is it to be supplied?—What is it that, by the body thus denominated, is meant to be represented as having been ordered to be done?

1. If the article in question be meant to be represented as being an act of that same body, is it that the effect of the order is meant to be the making entry of the article upon the books?—upon the books in which the acts of the body are registered?

2. Is it, that, on the particular occasion in question, publication—separate publication—shall be made of it?—The act being of the nature of an Advertisement, and so intitled, this is what in some instances—and in particular in the present one—must, it should seem, have been meant.

3. Is it, that in the next Report published of the proceedings of the body, insertion shall be given to it?—For this purpose, one general order, comprehending all the papers proposed to be inserted in the Report, might suffice. Even without any such express order, an order calling upon the Chairman, the Secretary, or any other person belonging to the body, to draw up the Report, will naturally, supposing no limitation attached, be understood as giving him authority for the insertion of all such papers, the insertion of which shall, in his view of the matter, be requisite.

1. One case there is, in which the first of the above three meanings cannot be the proper one. That is—where the discourse in question is not an act of the body itself, but the discourse of some person or persons not members of the body: in which case it will from him or them have been received by the body itself, or by some person or persons commissioned for that purpose: as in the case of communications made from particular local bodies, acting in union with this general body.

2. So, if the article be the discourse of this or that person, or assemblage of persons, acting in some official character under the directions of the governing body itself: as here in the instance of the Secretary, and the two Auditors of the Accounts.

3. If in any instance the declaration made in Report II. p. 5. has been true, viz. that, for this self-styled Committee, "every branch of their business has been prepared for them by their Sub-Committees;" then in so far as this is true, for every act of the Committee itself, there must have been two orders given: viz. one, for the entering of the Report made by the Sub-Committee; and another, for the adoption of the matter of that Report by the Committee.

For example, on the occasion of the article, which stands first in the first of these three Reports,—the article being a Report made by a Sub-Committee, viz. the Building Committee, certifying an opinion formed by that same Sub-Committee,—that opinion destined indeed to form a ground for some act of the principal Committee, but not being itself a discourse destined to become an act of that same Committee,—this case is not of the number of those, which admit of any such pair of corresponding orders.

But, next to that comes an "Address to the Public," 29th January, 1812, calling for contributions from persons at large: next to that again (to go no further) the "Plan of Union" according to which the Country Societies are called upon to take upon them the yoke prepared for them by these Bishops: and, in each of these instances, if the declaration made as above was true, there must have been two orders: one, according to which the paper became the act of the appropriate Sub-Committee;—the other, by which it thereupon became the act of the principal body, self-styled the Committee: and, as to publication, if, in the instance of the Address, entry and publication will be understood, as being of course comprized in one and the same order,—in the instance of the Plan this will hardly be the case: and if so, here then is a demand for one more order, viz. a third.

Instances in Report I. none.

In Report I. p. 54. may, however, be seen one article, though without a number, by the commencement of which, the conception of its having received the sanction of the governing body seems intended to be conveyed. "The General Committee of the National Society" (it is said) "wish the parochial clergy to understand—viz. how union with the Society so called may be effected, and correspondence with it carried on."

This, it is manifest, though it might have been rendered, is not as it stands, the discourse of the body thus described. It is not even given as such by the penman by whom it is thus penned. For, where it is really his intention so to do, he finds no difficulty in giving expression and effect to such intention:—witness the ensuing articles. What he wishes is—that it may notwithstanding be taken for an act which has received the sanction of the Society, he himself knowing that it is not so.

Instances in Report II.

1. Report II. p. 189, No. VI.—Title in the Table of Contents, "Ditto, August, 1812."—Title on the article itself, "National Society," &c.—Words of the authenticating clause, just before the signature, "By order of the Committee."—Signature, "T. T. Walmsley, Sec. No. 13, Clifford's Inn." N. B. This is the article for the recommendation of Lesson-Books. What the word Ditto is meant to represent is "Advertisement of the National Society:" these words forming part of the words of which the last preceding article is composed.
2. Report II. p. 191. No. VII.—Title in the Table of Contents, "Ditto, February, 1813." Title to the article itself, "National Society," &c.—Signature, "T. T. Walmsley, February, 1813." This is one of the miscellaneous articles.—N. B.—Here are three articles following, to each of which the appellation of an Advertisement of the National Society is applied ; yet only to the two last of them is the formula of authentication By order, &c. applied.—Is it then that the first of them, though not the act of the body in question, was yet meant to be given as such ?

Instances in Report III.

3. Report III. p. 168. No. IV.—A reprint of the article No. VI. in Report II. Signature, T. T. Walmsley, Sec. August, 1812.
4. Report III. p. 170. No. V.—A reprint of the article No. VII. in Report II. Signature (this time) “ T. T. Walmsley, Sec. “ February, 1813.”

Instances in which, in all three Reports taken together, the demand for this formulary, if in any, had place,—the article being an instrument which, besides the order for the publication of it, received, or should have received, its existence from the governing body :—These are—

1. Instances in which (as per Form I.) the article has not any No., or, except in three of them, any title, either in the Table of Contents or to the article itself - - - - - 6
2. Instances in which (as per Form I.) the article has not any No. in either place, nor any title in the Table of Contents, but has a title to the article itself - - - - - 3
3. Instances in which the article has a No. in both places, and a title in both or one - - - - - 17*

Total 26

Deduct instances in which, as above, that same demand is satisfied - - - - - 4

Remain instances in which it is not satisfied - - - - - 22

* Articles of this description appear to be—in Report I. Nos. 2, 3, 7, 8 :—in Report II. Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10 :—in Report III. Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8.

7. Form of Disorder 7.—Secretary's attestation—in some instances, viz. fourteen, or thereabouts, attached; in others, viz. twenty-two, or thereabouts, not.*

* Follows an account of the instances in which, in all the Reports taken together, the demand for this formulary, if in any, had places :

1. Instances in which (as per Form of Disorder I.) being, as above, unnumbered, the article appears, as above (Form 6.) to be an instrument requiring to receive its existence from the governing body—say, among the exemplifications of that form, articles 1, 5, 7, 8, 9: making together - - 5

2. Instances in which, being unnumbered, the article appears to be such, as to be capable of receiving its existence, without impropriety, from the Secretary alone;—at any rate, on the supposition of an order to that effect, from the governing body, to pen and publish an article of the description in question:—say, among the exemplifications of that form, articles 2, 3, 4, 6: making together - - - - - 4

3. Instances, in which (as per Form 6) the article having a No. attached to it, and being such as required to receive its existence from the governing body, required accordingly the signature of the Secretary: though to no other purpose than that of certifying the article to be of the number of those instruments, for the publication of which,—they being moreover such as had received their existence from the governing body,—an order from that same body had been given - - - - - 17

4. Instances in which (the article having moreover its number) the signature of the Secretary appears requisite: viz. according to the nature of the case, either for the cer-

8. Form of Disorder 8. Secretary's attestation differently expressed in different instances.†

Brought forward 26

tifying it to have been penned by himself,—under an order, or permission, of the governing body for that purpose, together with a corresponding order for publication;—or, in the case of such of them as came to the Society from other hands, for the certifying the existence of an order for the publication of it - - - - - 10*

Total number of the instances in which the demand } 36 for his attestation appears to have had place - - - - }

Deduct, instances in which his attestation is accord- } ingly attached: for the particulars of which see the Form } 14† of Disorder next ensuing - - - - - }

Remain, instances in which it is not attached - - - 22

† N. B. A preliminary question is—what is the name of the Reverend Gentleman thus designated?—Look for it who will, no where will he find it in any one of these three Reports. The

* Articles, to the penning of which the Secretary may have been competent.—Say, in Report I. Nos. 4 and 10: in Report II. Nos. 1 and 2:—in Report III. Nos. 1 and 2: together 6.

Articles, sent in to the Society from other quarters.—Say, in Report I. Nos. 5 and 11:—in Report II. No. 3:—in Report III. No. 9: together 4.—Total 10.

N. B. In this account, are not included the three articles exhibiting the allowances given to the Accounts by the Auditors, in and for the three years: viz. in Report I. No. 9:—in Report II. No. 3:—in Report III. No. 10.

† Say, in Report I. Nos. 1, 2, 3, 7, 8:—in Report II. Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7:—in Report III. Nos. 3, 0, 4, 5.—Total 13.—N.B. By the 0 is designated the article consisting of an Extract from the conclusion of Report I. to which Extract no No. is attached, nor is any notice taken of it in the Table of Contents.

A circumstance not a little remarkable is—that, of all the meetings, of the proceedings of which an

The Surname, yes: but as to the Christian name, look for it where you will, no where will you find any more of it than T. T.

In so small a total number as fourteen, as above, no fewer than five different forms or modes of signature may these three Reports, when taken together, be seen to exhibit.

1. First behold him T. T. Walmsley, Sec.; signing in no place, and at no time. Instances, six: viz. in Report I. No. 1, 3, 0:—in Report II. No. 4:—in Report III. Nos. 3, 0:—together, 6.

2. Next behold him signing at a certain place, but at no time. Instances, five:—viz. in Report I, Nos. 2 and 7—in Report, II, Nos. 5 and 6:—together, 4.—Place in all these instances, No. 13, Clifford's Inn.

3. In the third place behold him signing in no place, but however at some time, though that a most unfortunately as well as remarkably uncertain one. Instances two: viz. in Report II. No. 4: Place none; Time, as to month and year, February, 1813, but not on any day of the month:—in Report III. No. 5, article the same: Topography and Chronology the same. This ignorance or oblivion respecting the time at which he wrote his own signature, had it for its purpose any such design as that of giving accompaniment and apology to the like ignorance or oblivion, in respect of so many imaginary acts, given as acts of his imaginarily acting body, self-styled the General Committee?

4. In the fourth place,—such is the advance at this time made by him, in the kindred sciences of Geography and Chronology—behold him informed of the place, as well as (though still with the former exception as to the day) of the time in which he wrote. Of this degree of perfection we have however but one exemplification: viz. in Report III. No. 4. Place, No. 13, Clifford's Inn: Time, August, 1812:—but as to what day it was in month, this in the account is given in the Appendix to any one of these three Reports,—that which comes first—date of it, “May the 9th, 1812”—and that which comes last, viz. “May 31, 1814,” are the only ones, in the instance of which the aggregate of the tokens of authenticity is exhibited in its proper, and elsewhere customary, degree of plenitude. At the first of these two meetings, the Reverend Divine,—who, under the direction of the Most Reverend one, scale of Chronological science, is a point to which at the penning of this last of the three Reports he had not yet attained. In the Report which is next to come, one step more may give the deficiency its supply. Thus it was, it may be remembered, with the Plan of Union, when the Committee were putting the last hand to this important act, nobody knew any thing about the time: it might be one year; it might be another year. But in the course of the next year a discovery was made: a discovery not only of the year, but of the month. But this was all: the day is still in darkness, and there the matter rests. However on that occasion two steps were made: and the present occasion requires but one.

5. In the fifth place, behold him informed indeed of the year and the month: but by reason of some failure, which happily (it has been seen) was but a temporary one, unconscious of the place in which he was writing, as well as of the day of the month: and moreover at this time, though acting in the character of Secretary, and though, as upon this same occasion, he expressly assures us, it is “by Order of the Committee” that he is writing, yet either divested of that office, or unconscious of his possessing it.—Report II. p. 193. No. VII. “T. T. Walmsley, February, 1813.” Thus much and nothing more:—except the words “By order of the Committee.” appears in the character of penman to all these three Reports,—officiated as such with the title of Secretary; in this same first recorded meeting,—the number of the members, viz. five, not being regarded (it should seem) as being sufficiently great to stand in need of a Chairman,—no person is exhibited in express terms by the title of Chairman: that character being moreover understood to belong, as of congruity, and thence by implication, to a person so manifestly pre-eminent, as the Right Reverend Prelate, the Lord Bishop of London, Lord of the Palace in which at this first-recorded meeting this first of Sub-Committees sat.—On the other hand,—at the last of these same two meetings the number being so considerable, (sixteen) and the company so miscellaneous,—flocking together to this metropolitan and central spot from all corners of this National Society's world,—the occasion was deemed a proper one for a Chair, and moreover the Secretary of the center Society, a proper person to be seated in it.

But the curious, as well as to the present purpose the material, circumstance is—that, as at the first so at the last, when a real meeting,—of the persons, whom it is the endeavour of these Reports throughout, to cause the public to believe to have met,—has indubitably had place,—in these instances and in no other, have the proper and customary tokens of authenticity been inserted.

9. Form of Disorder 9.—Of the Persons present,

(viz. at the meeting in which the act, being an act of the Governing body,—or of a body acting in direct subordination to the Governing body,—received its existence,) out of four-and-twenty instances, mention made in one alone,—in every other, not.*

10. Form of Disorder 10.—Place of Meeting—out of four-and-twenty instances, in one instance mentioned; in the remaining three-and-twenty, not.†

* Instances in which the act comes under the first of the two descriptions just mentioned—viz. as per Form 1.

Articles without Nos. to them - - - - - 5

Articles with Nos. to them - - - - - 17

Instances in which the act comes under the other of these two descriptions—viz. those of the two Sub-Committees 2

Total number of the instances, in which the demand for the information in question had place - - - - - 24

Deduct the one instance on which this demand is satisfied, viz. that of the Building Committee, Report I. No. 1. 1

Remain the number of instances in which, though having place, this demand is not satisfied - - - - - 23

N. B. In the article, Report III. No. 9,—in which are exhibited certain Resolutions as come to by a Society styled "Society of Sectaries,"—the persons present, sixteen in number, are all mentioned by their names, in conjunction with the names of the Societies, for which they were respectively thus officiating.

☞ For another instance, in which mention is made of the persons present. See Form of Disorder 13.

† The instances in which, in the character of a token of authenticity, this circumstance is material, being the same as those

11. Form of Disorder 11.—Time of Meeting.—out of the above four-and-twenty instances mentioned:—in the remaining fourteen, not.*

12. Form of Disorder 12.—Designation of them—out of the above ten, in four instances, compleat: in the remaining six incompleat: the day of the month not being mentioned in any one of them.†

13. Form of Disorder 13.—The same article presenting a different appearance, in different Reports.‡

which come under the last mentioned head, viz. that of Persons present, for the particulars of these same instances see that same head.

* These instances are of course the same as those comprised under the two heads last-mentioned.

Instances in which the time is mentioned are—I. In Report I. Nos. 1, 2, 7: II. In Report II. Nos. 4, 5, 6, 7: III. In Report III. Nos. 3, 4, 5. N. B. In Report II. No. 4, which has a date, is a reprint of Report I. No. 3, which has no date: also in Report II. No. 5, is a reprint of Report I. No. 7: also in Report II. No. 6, is a reprint of an Article which in Report I. has no No.: also in Report II. No. 7, is a reprint of Report I. No. 5.

† Instances in which the mention made of the time is compleat, are—I. In Report I. No. 1, 2, 7: In Report II. No. 5.—In Report II. No. 5, is a reprint of Report I. No. 7.

‡ I. Table of Contents.—1. The Contents in question are the Contents of the Appendix; in that part of the publication are comprised all the articles thus referred to.—Accordingly in Report I., the words of the title prefixed to the list of these articles are—Contents of the Appendix. In Report II. the words are—Table of Contents: and so in Report III.

2. In the Table of Contents to Report I., no figures of reference

Nor is this all. For, as if to cut a figure with,—and, upon his first entrance upon his task, to im-are to be seen, referring to the pages, at which the papers in question respectively commence. In Report II. figures for this purpose are inserted: and so in Report III. The alteration is manifestly an improvement. But that such an improvement should remain to be made!!

II. List of Books recommended.—In speaking of Report I. p. 197, it has already been shewn how the recommendation there given, of a list of books for Lesson-books, is slid in without any distinctive mark. No No., and thence no place is given to it in the Table of Contents:—no title at the head of the article itself.—In Report II. p. 189, as already observed, enters again this same article; and all this time furnished with a No.—viz. No. 6: but neither in the Table of Contents, nor at the head of the article itself has it any other than an uncharacteristic title. In Report III. p. 168, it presents the same appearance as in Report II.: having in both places a No. viz. in Report II. No. 6; in Report III. No. 4: the title in the Table of Contents being the same in the later Report as in the earlier: so likewise the title at the head of the article itself: but in each Report the title in the two places is different; and in both of them uncharacteristic.

In Report II. p. 100, No. 6. the Secretary's signature to this article—this signature, though subscribed (it is therein said) by order of the Committee, has (it has been seen) no time of date to it: in Report III. it has however, a time of date to it. But the time is (it has been seen) an incompletely designated one; the day of the month being wanting, and for the fixation of the Month and Year, viz. Aug. 1812: and the source which Mr. Sec. has recourse to for this purpose, is no other than the title to this article, as printed in the Table of Contents of the last preceding Report, viz. Report II.: for at the time of drawing up this Table, press the mind of the reader with the idea of regularity, as being a quality inherent in the whole

Year and Month had it appears been revealed to him, though the Day of the Month continued, as it continues still, in darkness. In p. 134, &c. a cause for this disconformity has been endeavoured to be found.

III. Plan of Union.—I. In Report I. the article intituled Plan of Union, makes its appearance without any authenticating date ; in Report II. it makes its appearance for the first time, with a date, though that date is even then an imperfect one, the day of the month being wanting. In Report III. it makes its appearance with the same imperfect date. In p. 210, of this, a cause for that disconformity likewise has been endeavoured to be found.

IV. Lists of Benefactors.—In relation to this subject, the following are the diversities exhibited by the three Reports.

1. In Report I., in the Table of Contents, no mention of any such article, nor consequently any No. for the designation of any such article, is to be found. But, in p. 69, commences an article (of course without a No.), having for its title “ BENEFACTORS and ANNUAL SUBSCRIBERS,” occupying the pages from 69 to 113 : and in p. 117, commences another list (without a No.) having for its title the words Benefactors and Annual Subscribers to Societies in the Country, occupying the pages from 117 to 196.

2. In Report II. in the Table of Contents, at the end of the list of numbered articles, comes an article without a No. viz. “ A List of Benefactors and Annual Subscribers,” with a reference to p. 203. At p. 203, accordingly commences a list having for its title the words BENEFACTORS and ANNUAL SUBSCRIBERS ; occupying the pages from 205 to 253. A remarkable circumstance is—that in this Report II., no list of Benefactors and Annual Subscribers to Societies in the Country is to be found.

3. In Report III., as in Report II., in the Table of Contents, at the end of the list of numbered articles, comes an article with-

of the proceedings, and thence in the whole of the accounts given of them,—this meeting it is, of

out a number, viz. “A List of Benefactors and Annual Subscribers.” Here no reference is to be found in any page. At the end of the publication however, (the series of numbered pages closing with p. 183,) commences a list, (pages not numbered) having for its title, as in Report II., the words Benefactors and Annual Subscribers. But neither in this Third Report, any more than in Report II., is any list, of Benefactors, &c. in the Country, to be found. In Report I. this Country list is a good deal more numerous, it may be seen, than the Town list. Of this discontinuance would you know the cause?—Enquire of those who are in the secret.

V. Persons present.—In the article, Report III. No. 9, exhibiting certain Resolutions come to by a Society styled “Society of Secretaries”—(Resolutions tending to the communicating of information and to the appointment of a Visitor to the schools)—the persons present are all mentioned by their names, in conjunction respectively with the names of the Societies for which they were thus officiating. Moreover, in this instance, exhibition is made of the several other tokens of authenticity: viz. Place, “The Central School:”—Time,—and that, as in so many of the above instances, not incompletely, but completely, and even more than completely, designated;—viz. “Tuesday, the 31st of May, 1814.”—To this article is attached the following signature, viz. T. T. WALMSLEY, Chairman.—The body here in question,—though a body in a certain sort connected with, and acting under the influence of the governing body of the Society in question,—not being, in the manner of a Committee, in a state of regular sub-ordination in relation to it,—thence it was that, under the several former heads, in the character of a source of exemplification, this article could not without impropriety be brought to view.

press the mind of the reader with the idea of regularity, as being a quality inherent in the whole

Year and Month had it appears been revealed to him, though the Day of the Month continued, as it continues still, in darkness. In p. 134, &c. a cause for this disconformity has been endeavoured to be found.

III. Plan of Union.—I. In Report I. the article intituled Plan of Union, makes its appearance without any authenticating date ; in Report II. it makes its appearance for the first time, with a date, though that date is even then an imperfect one, the day of the month being wanting. In Report III. it makes its appearance with the same imperfect date. In p. 210, of this, a cause for that disconformity likewise has been endeavoured to be found.

IV. Lists of Benefactors.—In relation to this subject, the following are the diversities exhibited by the three Reports.

1. In Report I., in the Table of Contents, no mention of any such article, nor consequently any No. for the designation of any such article, is to be found. But, in p. 69, commences an article (of course without a No.), having for its title “ BENEFACTORS and ANNUAL SUBSCRIBERS,” occupying the pages from 69 to 113 ; and in p. 117, commences another list (without a No.) having for its title the words Benefactors and Annual Subscribers to Societies in the Country, occupying the pages from 117 to 196.

2. In Report II. in the Table of Contents, at the end of the list of numbered articles, comes an article without a No. viz. “ A List of Benefactors and Annual Subscribers,” with a reference to p. 203. At p. 203, accordingly commences a list having for its title the words BENEFACTORS and ANNUAL SUBSCRIBERS ; occupying the pages from 205 to 253. A remarkable circumstance is—that in this Report II., no list of Benefactors and Annual Subscribers to Societies in the Country is to be found.

3. In Report III., as in Report II., in the Table of Contents, at the end of the list of numbered articles, comes an article with-

of the proceedings, and thence in the whole of the accounts given of them,—this meeting it is, of

out a number, viz. “A List of Benefactors and Annual Subscribers.” Here no reference is to be found in any page. At the end of the publication however, (the series of numbered pages closing with p. 183,) commences a list, (pages not numbered) having for its title, as in Report II., the words Benefactors and Annual Subscribers. But neither in this Third Report, any more than in Report II., is any list, of Benefactors, &c. in the Country, to be found. In Report I. this Country list is a good deal more numerous, it may be seen, than the Town list. Of this discontinuance would you know the cause?—Enquire of those who are in the secret.

V. Persons present.—In the article, Report III. No. 9, exhibiting certain Resolutions come to by a Society styled “Society of Secretaries”—(Resolutions tending to the communicating of information and to the appointment of a Visitor to the schools)—the persons present are all mentioned by their names, in conjunction respectively with the names of the Societies for which they were thus officiating. Moreover, in this instance, exhibition is made of the several other tokens of authenticity: viz. Place, “The Central School:”—Time,—and that, as in so many of the above instances, not incompletely, but completely, and even more than completely, designated;—viz. “Tuesday, the 31st of May, 1814.”—To this article is attached the following signature, viz. T. T. WALMSLEY, Chairman.—The body here in question,—though a body in a certain sort connected with, and acting under the influence of the governing body of the Society in question,—not being, in the manner of a Committee, in a state of regular sub-ordination in relation to it,—thence it was that, under the several former heads, in the character of a source of exemplification, this article could not without impropriety be brought to view.

which, though out of its turn, the account is thus taken up, and set at the head of the articles consigned to this Appendix. May the 9th, 1812, is the day assigned, to the meeting recorded in this first recorded document. The document which thus stands first recorded, is it the document of the earliest date? Oh no: for of that which stands next recorded, and of which the mention is thus postponed to the mention of it, viz. No. II. p. 25, the "Address to the Public," (it is the Address calling for Contributions,) the date is more than three months earlier—viz. "29th January," in that same year, "1812."

More than this, in that same first recorded document, intituled Report of the Sub-Committee for Building, immediately after mention of the Members present as above, "The Building Committee" (continues this Report, p. 23,) "having met the 26th of December, 1811, in consequence of instructions from the General Committee, proceeded to enquire for a proper place wherein to establish a Central School." Here then is evidence of an anterior meeting—a meeting held on this same subject—held on a day more than four months anterior to that of this first regularly recorded meeting; and even more than a month anterior to the date of that Address, the record of which is postponed to the record of it: and that too a meeting, as it should seem—though perhaps not—of this same Committee: but at any rate, a meeting, the proceedings of which, for some reason or other were not thought meet to be had in any more particular remembrance.

O yes:—perhaps the same; perhaps not:—for here comes another quere;—the assembly mentioned in the title to this No. I. p. 23, under the name of “the Sub-Committee for Building,” and the assembly in line eighth of that same page mentioned under the name of the Building Committee, are they after all the same Committee? or—to speak more particularly, and thence more plainly—the persons who were appointed members of it, and moreover the persons who in virtue of that appointment met and acted,—were they, at both times, or in no one, or in one only, and which of those two times, these same persons?

In the body of the Report, it is in a paragraph contained in pages 14 and 15, and not in any other place, that mention is made of this Sub-Committee, or say of these Sub-Committees. Look to that place for elucidations,—and, instead of the elucidations sought, what as usual you will find is—darkness visible.

“ The Committee (page 14,) at its first meeting “ appointed a Sub-Committee, to take mea“ sures for establishing a Central School in the “ Metropolis . . . At the next meeting” . . . “ The “ Sub-Committee . . . was renewed, and instructed “ to find out, &c. . . . which business was entered “ upon and brought to a conclusion without delay,

“ as will be seen in the report of their proceedings
 “ under the sanction of the general Committee, “ printed in the App. No. I.”—viz. the so often mentioned Report of May 9, 1812.

This same “first meeting”—on what day was it held?—Answer.—If on any day, on some day posterior to October 21st, 1811, and anterior to 26th December, in that same year, 1811:—posterior to the day in October; that being the day on which, according to p. 13, the “Society was formed:” anterior to the day in December; that being the day, on which, under the name of the Building Committee, a Building Committee, nominated according to p. 14, either at that same first meeting, or at the next to it, is in No. I. p. 23, “Report of the Sub-Committee for Building,” stated to have met.

That same “next meeting”—on what day was it held?—Answer.—If on any day, on some day posterior to that, on which the “first” of these same two meetings was held: as also anterior to that same day of December, viz. the 26th: sure it was at that same meeting of the General Committee, that “the Sub-Committee,” by which instructions were thereupon “at the same time” received, “was,” as above, “renewed:” always supposing that the Sub-Committee, which on that same 26th of December, co-operated as above, was the same Committee, which on that same nameless day of the General Committee’s said “next meeting” was so renewed and instructed” as aforesaid.

These are all the data: and from these data, let the Chronologer, whose skill in Chronology is adequate to such an enterprize, and who at the same time wants employment, fix the date.

Concluding problem.—Of the disorder that has been seen, required to find, what part, if any, has been the result of artifice,—what part, if any, the result of incapacity. To this problem all along has a solution been sought:—sought—sincerely and diligently sought:—yet still, in conclusion—such is the darkness with which the face of this deep is covered—must it be left unsolved. By a peep into the books of this self-styled Committee—if indeed any such books have been kept—the solution, or at any rate an approximation towards it, might probably be effected. But these books are in the custody—nominally, of the Reverend Secretary; effectively, of the most Reverend President. Enquire of them—(but, to the power, who is there that adds the inclination, necessary to the making any such enquiry with effect?) enquire of them, the answer will be—either that the voracity of some profane rat has taken an unhappy direction to these sacred muniments,—or that,—in virtue of one of those inscrutable decrees of an all-directing providence, the aid of which is never wanting to orthodox divines at a dead lift,—fire from heaven has come down, and consumed into a burnt sacrifice these offerings of Church-of-England devotion:—consumed them, as of old, in token of acceptance, on the very altars on which they have been offered.

§ XII. General Committee.—Fraud involved in the title thus given to the Managing body.

Of whatever in the course of this discussion there has been occasion to say of the Governing body, one source of perplexity has been a perpetual accompaniment:—this is—the impossibility of giving to it, without joining in a system of misrepresentation, the style and title given to it throughout the whole course of these Reports:—viz. the General Committee. By the word Committee, in every instance, is, or ought to be, meant to be designated a subordinate assemblage of the members of the artificial body in question,—to which assemblage, on some particular occasion, a particular portion of the business is, by the whole body committed, i. e. entrusted: entrusted—viz. for the purpose of exercising some preparatory function.

A Committee is a relative term: and, though as in the case of a trustee, and so many others, the current language, (such is its imperfection,) has not, in the compass of a single word, afforded to it its correlative,—yet to the existence of the object thus designated, the existence of a correlative object is not in this instance less undeniably necessary, than in the case of father and son, or that of grantor and grantee. A Committee?—and without a person or set of persons by whom the business in question is committed?—not less self-contradictory would be the supposition of a deputy or set of deputies, without a person or set of persons by whom he or they had been deputed. As well might you speak of a son who had never had a father, as of a Committee to which the business performed by it had never been committed to it.—Committee of the whole House?—Yes: in the practice of Parliament this locution is to be found, though in that instance alone. And why?—only because, to the exercise of those preparatory functions, for the exercise of which a select portion of the body in question is in general regarded as most competent,—in some particular instances nothing less than the whole is regarded as being sufficient. But even in this case,—in which, for reasons foreign to the present purpose, a sort of fiction has been recurred to,—even in this case the offspring is no more unprovided of its parent than when, as in general, the Committee is a select one. True it is, that for any sort of purpose,—with any sort of intention, good or bad,—a set of men self-chosen may, on this or that occasion, have gone about calling themselves a Committee. But, for any such purpose never did any set of men ever go about under that name, by whom,—were any such question put to them as—by whom was this business committed to you?, the impropriety of the appellation thus assumed would not immediately have been recognized.

In this respect, how stands the matter in the present instance?

The name given to the governing body is, as above, the General Committee. But the expression is elliptical: and, ere any determinate import can be attached to it, the ellipsis must be filled up. Committee?—of what body?—In the business of Parliament the answer is in every case given without difficulty.—Committee of the House:—Committee of the House of Lords;—Committee of the House of Commons.

Well then—the filling up—how shall it be performed in the present instance? The General Committee?—of what? The answer insinuated, is—the General Committee of the Society, styled by this same pretended Committee the National Society.—Insinuated?—Yes.—Asserted?—No.—Why not?—Even because, if asserted, the assertion would have been too notoriously false.—For, in addition to the Members of this self-styled General Committee, of what Members can the Society, styled the National Society, have been composed?—Answer.—Of those and those alone, who, from the birth of the Society down to the present time, have, by their subscriptions, contributed to the formation of that fund,—which, in consequence of their acquiescence, has been disposed of by unknown persons, whom the fifty-two Members, of the body, in the name of which, under this falsely assumed, or, at any rate, falsely attributed name, the business has been conducted, have suffered to act in their names.

Now then—of this supposed governing body,—by the self-concealed person or persons, who, without any produced or probably producible warrant, have been acting in its name, so groundlessly styled the General Committee,—what is the true genealogy?—Supposing it to have had any real existence, by whom was it formed?—The Members of it—by whom were they nominated?—By the whole number of the Contributors, reckoning down to this or that day? or by any meeting to which that whole number had been invited?—No such thing. Of the persons, in relation to whom, by means of this fraud, the authors of it endeavour to cause it to be believed that, under the name of the General Committee, they were named and appointed members of the governing body by the Contributors at large, the nomination was in fact begun by an unknown small number, in which were included—of a certainty, the present Archbishop of Canterbury, as certainly the late Bishop of London, and perhaps another or two of the Bishops:—by these were put down, and in each instance with or without consent, the names of the remaining Bishops and Archbishops: with or without whose concurrence, they went on to name certain Peers and Privy Counsellors: which body, in some not fully declared way and proportion, composed of Archbishops, Bishops, Peers, and Privy Counsellors, made up the nominated number, to a total of fifty-two, out of laymen and clergymen of inferior dignity.

To form a fund for the purpose in question, these fifty-two,—some of them at least—not improbably, upon looking over the list of contributors, it would appear all of them,—contributed respectively so many sums of money: inviting persons at large to become contributors along with them. But, to no one individual, other than those fifty-two persons themselves, is any part in the management—any share in the power of disposing of the money, or in any other of the powers exercised—allowed by them.

Now then, as to this principal point, what is the true state of the case?—By the whole number of the Contributors, of whom the assemblage of persons, styled in these Reports by their collective name the National Society, is composed—is it by this body, that the members of the body, in these same Reports styled the General Committee, were appointed?—or are so much as here represented as having been appointed?—No such thing.—It is by themselves or one another, that these members of the governing body were appointed.—Appointed?—and to what?—to the function of disposing of whatsoever monies should by the several contributors be eventually put into their hands.

Here then is a scheme of misrepresentation—a radical scheme of misrepresentation—planned and executed from the first. Represented are these men,—and by themselves, or at least by some of themselves,—as having been appointed, and invested with all these powers, which they have since been exercising. Invested? and by whom?—by a body, which, even by their own shewing, had not at the time of the supposed act of investment, any existence.

Well but—after their having thus begotten the Society, may not the Society have returned the favour, and begotten or adopted them? Begotten or adopted them—in the character which they assume, viz. that of its General Committee?—Oh no: no such thing:—no such incident is so much as pretended. Thanks and approbation—for these things, and these alone, has it been their pleasure to be beholden to these their children: existence is too precious a possession for them to claim to be regarded as indebted for it to, or to hold it of, any persons but themselves.

Thus it is that, from first to last, the power they exercise, they exercise on a false pretence: the pretence of having received it from a set of persons from whom in truth they never have received any such thing;—to whom in truth they never chose to be beholden for—any such thing.—No: no such experiment durst they venture upon: disappointment and disgrace might have been the result of it.—The scheme—is it a national scheme, or is it a party scheme?—the religion to be supported—is it the religion of Jesus, or is it Church-of-Englandism?—the means of execution—are they uncorrupt or corrupt?—To questions such as these, no answer could have been returned, but a self-condemning one;—and, for the putting of all these questions, in any one meeting, supposing it a free and open one, any one tongue would have sufficed.

Here then is a fraud : a fraud planned and executed from the beginning : a fraud in which all the Archbishops and Bishops, with the addition of Right Honourables in abundance, seem at first appearance implicated.

That as to this part of the whole system of fraud, the Archbishops and Bishops were however, generally speaking, unconscious, nothing is there in this that in the nature of the case seems incredible. What sort of a thing a Committee is—to an Archbishop or Bishop as such, it is not necessary to know that or any thing else.

But the Right Honourables?—look at the Right Honourables!—among them—not to speak of the titled Saints of lower degree—you will see the Lord Chancellor,—Speaker as such of the House of Lords,—the Lord Redesdale, quondam Speaker of the House of Commons—and Mr. Abbot, the present Speaker of the same Honourable House. These lawyers—these veteran and wily lawyers—to them is it possible that it should have been unknown what a Committee is? To them is it possible that it should not have been known, that without an agent there is no such object as a patient—that without a Committer there is no such thing as a Committee? This they might have learnt from Mother Goose: this they had actually learnt from Mother Blackstone.—Ah no:—at the price of no such confession of ignorance would these, or any other such lawyers, be content to purchase the reputation of innocence.

Fraud, under the name of fiction, being the grand instrument of his power—fraud upon the legislature—fraud upon the people—fraud on every occasion—is dear to the man of law: dear to him—primarily for the sake of that same power, secondarily, and by force of habit, for its own sake. Fraud, in every licensed shape in which he has a part in the management of it—(and in what licensed shape has he not a part in the management of it?) it is his interest that to the eye of the public it should be as familiar as possible. Familiar?—Why?—even that by familiarity the deformity of it may, as nearly as possible, be rendered imperceptible. Never without fraud will the man of law do any thing which he can contrive to do by or with fraud. Bad things he does by fraud, because he could not do them otherwise: good things, when they must be done, he chooses to do by fraud,—that by the goodness of the effect the blindness of the public may be deluded into a belief of the goodness of the instrument. And whether he is or is not conscious of them (for—no fees being to be got by the perusal of it—his own mind is an object too frightful for the man of law to be fond of looking into)—whether he is or is not conscious of them—in the fictions, alias the frauds, with which the Catechism will be seen to swarm, may be seen the cause of the fondness with which it is hugged, not only by the established priest, but by his confederate, the man of law. The Liturgy, with its Catechism and its Altar, have they not become stepping-stones not only to spiritual but to temporal benches? From interpreting, in the Church-of-England mode, according to the rules that will be seen,* the Oracles of God, the half-bigot, half-hypocrite comes to interpret, according to the same rules, the oracles of the grim Idol, to which, day by day, under the name of Common Law, so many lives and fortunes are sacrificed: the Idol manufactured by his predecessors on the same Bench, with the instrument with which Samson slew the Philistines.

In addition to the universal objects,—common, as just above explained, to all priestly and to all lawyerly fraud,—the particular fraud in question had it not any special object?—Oh yes, that it had. It had for its object the blinding the eyes of the Contributors at large, by causing them to ascribe regularity to the whole system of irregularity thus organized. Referring himself to Resolution 10, Report I.—under and by virtue of his right, had it happened to any “Subscriber of one guinea annually” to make a motion respecting the disposal of the fund—a motion tending for example to the exclusion of the exclusionary conditions—that instant would his mouth have been stopt by the observation, that by Resolution the 4th of that same string of Resolutions, “to manage the affairs of “the Society” was a function that belonged to none but the “Committee of sixteen, besides the “President and Vice-Presidents;” which President and Vice-Presidents were, by Resolution 3, the twenty-six Archbishops and Bishops, together with ten temporal Peers or Privy-Counsellors, to be perpetually nominated by the said Presidents and other Vice-Presidents, (these others being the said Archbishop and Bishops only,) and which said Committee of sixteen were moreover, by Resolution 5, to be nominated by the said Most and Right Reverend President and Vice-Presidents.

* See Appendix, No. I. pp. 96 to 106.

Well but (says some surly Guinea-Subscriber)—these men, in the choice of whom we had none of us any share—is it for these men to do what they please with the money we furnish? and are we ourselves to have nothing to do with the disposal of it?

Oh no, to be sure—(answers some lawyer or lawyer-tutored priest)—Oh no, to be sure—for, by Re- solution the 4th, the management (you see) is theirs and not yours: it is theirs and theirs only. And why should you grudge it them?—For they—do not you see it?—they are your own Committee. You and they are the Society, and they are your Committee. Great men as they are,—and, out of the Royal family, where will you find greater, or so great?—Great men as they are!—Such is their condescension, they claim to be nothing more. Great men, and so condescending to boot!—is it for such as you to fly in their faces, and act as if you were their superiors?—You their superiors—and not they yours?

In this fictitious election, thus it is, that with relation to these self-chosen Elect, the supposed Electors are superior and inferior at the same time: superior as touching the furnishing of the money, inferior as touching the disposal of it: superior to the purpose of shew and appearance; inferior, or rather nothing at all, to every real purpose:—to every real purpose, but above all to the purpose of keeping open the door of the instruction, to all persons, by whom,—for their own sake, and that of the whole people of which they form a part,—it is so much needed.

But why—when facts are before us—why tax imagination for suppositions?—He would have been dealt with—this impertinently intruding guineaman at Sion-College—he would have been dealt with—exactly as, at the intended courtly meeting at Maidstone, the truth-obtruding journeyman-watchmaker was dealt with by the Whig Member, between whom and the Tory Member the representation of the County of Kent is so commodiously divided.*

Of this fiction, as of all such lawyer-begotten frauds, confusion is among the inevitable, as well as relatively useful and desirable, and desired consequences. Instead of the proper appellation, viz. Governing or Managing body, the appellation General Committee being employed—employed in the first instance—and thereafter, dropping the word General, the word Committee alone,—one consequence is—that to what is really a Committee, the term Sub-Committee is thereafter attached. In those places in which this word Sub-Committee is employed, improper as the appellation is, no confusion however is produced by it. But, as often as for the designation

* Kentish Chronicle, 18th June, 1816, in Cobbett's Register, 29th June, 1816, p. 808. "Here one of the populace had the " effrontery to remark, that only two hands were held up, except
" by the High-Sheriff and his friends. Sir William Geary
" then challenged this man as to his condition in life, when he " turned out to be a journeyman watchmaker, who was only a " lodger in the town." The proposed addresses in question (it is insisted, p. 818.) "purported to be the addresses of the No" bility, &c. . . . and Inhabitants:" The watchmaker, "it " is added had lived at Maidstone not above two years, and
" was only a lodger."

solution the 4th, the management (you see) is theirs and not yours: it is theirs and theirs only. And why should you grudge it them?—For they—do not you see it?—they are your own Committee. You and they are the Society, and they are your Committee. Great men as they are,—and, out of the Royal family, where will you find greater, or so great?—Great men as they are!—Such is their condescension, they claim to be nothing more. Great men, and so condescending to boot!—is it for such as you to fly in their faces, and act as if you were their superiors?—You their superiors—and not they yours?

In this fictitious election, thus it is, that with relation to these self-chosen Elect, the supposed Electors are superior and inferior at the same time: superior as touching the furnishing of the money, inferior as touching the disposal of it: superior to the purpose of shew and appearance; inferior, or rather nothing at all, to every real purpose:—to every real purpose, but above all to the purpose of keeping open the door of the instruction, to all persons, by whom,—for their own sake, and that of the whole people of which they form a part,—it is so much needed.

But why—when facts are before us—why tax imagination for suppositions?—He would have been dealt with—this impertinently intruding guineaman at Sion-College—he would have been dealt with—exactly as, at the intended courtly meeting at Maidstone, the truth-obtruding journeyman-watchmaker was dealt with by the Whig Member, between whom and the Tory Member the representation of the County of Kent is so commodiously divided.*

Of this fiction, as of all such lawyer-begotten frauds, confusion is among the inevitable, as well as relatively useful and desirable, and desired consequences. Instead of the proper appellation, viz. Governing or Managing body, the appellation General Committee being employed—employed in the first instance—and thereafter, dropping the word General, the word Committee alone,—one consequence is—that to what is really a Committee, the term Sub-Committee is thereafter attached. In those places in which this word Sub-Committee is employed, improper as the appellation is, no confusion however is produced by it. But, as often as for the designation

* Kentish Chronicle, 18th June, 1816, in Cobbett's Register, 29th June, 1816, p. 808. "Here one of the populace had the effrontery to remark, that only two hands were held up, except by the High-Sheriff and his friends. Sir William Geary then challenged this man as to his condition in life, when he turned out to be a journeyman watchmaker, who was only a lodger in the town." The proposed addresses in question (it is insisted, p. 818.) "purported to be the addresses of the Nobility, &c. . . . and Inhabitants:" The watchmaker, "it is added had lived at Maidstone not above two years, and was only a lodger." of the governing body the word Committee is employed, on every such occasion,—on pain of misconceiving the matter, and taking the body so styled for the body there styled a Sub-Committee,—what you have to do is—to remember that this which is called a Committee, viz. of the Governing body is—not a Committee of the governing body, but the governing body itself.

But, without some special motive—and that a pretty strong one—a man does not choose to keep his attention and memory thus upon the rack for hours together. Nor would even all this pains suffice: for, to thicken the confusion, to this sort of body called a Sub-Committee, is also applied the appellation Committee:* and thus it is that, through-

* Thus, in Report I. p. 23. the same body which is styled “the Sub-Committee for Building” is presently afterwards styled “the Building Committee.” So likewise in Report II. p. 5. we have “the School-Committee,” and that before any mention is made of Sub-Committees: and immediately after the word “Sub-Committees,” instead of the Sub-Committee for Building we have “the Committee for Building.” So again in the next page (p. 6.) we have “their Committee” (i. e. the Committee’s Committee) “of Correspondence:” and moreover in the same page “a finance Committee:”—in p. 14. “School Committee” twice; in p. 16, twice; in p. 17, once: and in pages 15 and 16, a “Committee of Ladies:”—in all which instances, after due consideration, it will appear that what is meant by Committee is Sub-Committee. And thus it is, that throughout,—as far as depends upon the Reverend and most Reverend penmen,—the two ideas, for the distinout the whole of this business, the personality of the real agents in it is kept involved in a perpetual cloud: which is the very thing that was to be done.

guishing of which the terms Committee and Sub-Committee are in one place held up to view in form and ceremony, are, by what is done in so many other places, so effectually confounded.

282 out the whole of this business, the personality of the real agents in it is kept involved in a perpetual cloud; which is the very thing that was to be done.

PART V.

BAPTISM AND SPONSORSHIP PROPER, WHEN INSTI-TUTED—BAPTISM USELESS, SPONSORSHIP IM-PROPER, NOW.

OF this tract the main object is—to promote the passing a correct judgment on the nature and tendency of the formulary, which forms the subject of it. To this purpose it will not be necessary to enter into any part of the history of that same formulary, other than what is legible upon the face of it, together with a few such other particulars of Church history as are matter of universal and undisputed notoriety.

When, upon the accession of Elizabeth, and the re-substitution of the Protestant system to the Catholic, a set of formularies to be employed on religious occasions was framed,—the interest of public peace concurred with this one particular interest, in recommending to the ruling few, the preserving, with as little change as might be, every institution which was not, on some particular account, in a particular way and high degree obnoxious: and the prepossession,—which, in the breasts of the uninformed and unscrutinizing multitude, habit had formed in favour of every thing, in which they had been accustomed to behold an object of respect,—was sufficient to present change, in so far as it went, in the character of a hazardous operation,—adherence to established usage as the course most favourable to general content and peace—in a word as the only safe one.

In the Romish ritual, mixt up with those notions, which, having been suggested by the temporal interests and interest-begotten prejudices of successive rulers, were of course subservient to those interests, others may be observed, which,—having been instituted in a state of things altogether different from that in which the religion of Jesus, and with it the authority of the successors of St. Peter, found itself seated on the throne,—had, though no longer suited to the times, been preserved from change, only because no special and urgent interest had been felt calling for a change.

Among these, the formulary here in question, viz. the Catechism,—together with the supposed more important formulary of Baptism by which it was preceded,—and the confessedly less important formulary of Confirmation by which it was followed,—formed so many links of a connected chain.

In the difference between the primæval and the subsequent states of Christian society, may be found the cause of those two leading features in the Catechism, of which the monstrosity will come to be displayed in the ensuing tract: viz. the unperformable obligation actually taken upon themselves by the Sponsors, and the obligation pretended to be imposed by them upon the child:—of that monstrosity and palpable absurdity in the texture of the instrument, and of the ceremony in which it is employed, and of that immorality, which in the lips and breasts of those who bear a part in that ceremony, is the consequence of the continuance of the practices in question, in a state of things, which, in respect of the particulars in question, is so opposite to that, in which these obligations were at first instituted.

At the time at which this Sponsorship had its rise, it had in utility and reason a foundation at least, and that altogether a natural and obvious one.

In those days, it was in the persons of adults rather than of infants—of infants no otherwise than in company with, and in the character of appendages to adults, that the religion of Jesus received its recruits. To the condition of an adult, and to that alone, are any obligations such as those in question, adapted,—and with them the formulary in question, in so far as those obligations are contained in it. To this position, when once brought to view, who is it that can refuse his assent?

Be the society what it may into which a member is received, a precaution too obvious not to be in some degree attended to in it, is—the taking measures, such as the particular nature of the case points out, for avoiding to give admittance, in the character of a member, to any person other than such an one,—in whose instance a ground presents itself for expecting to see two conditions fulfilled:—the one a negative, the other a positive one: the negative one,—that of his not inflicting in any shape annoyance upon the Society, or any of its members; the positive condition—that, in some way or other he will be contributory, to the purposes which in its formation the Society had in view.

In the early ages of the religion of Jesus, any society formed for the exercise of it was naturally and necessarily a select one: as a whole, it was surrounded with adversaries: at a very early period, it was split into parts called sects; and each sect beheld in some measure an adversary in every other. On the admission of a new member, the making such provision as the nature of the case admitted of for the fulfilment of the above conditions, was therefore an obvious and rational, not to say a necessary and unavoidable, exercise of prudence.

Thus useful and unexceptionable, at its commencement, and even for ages afterwards, was the institution of Sponsors: by this one institution it was, that provision was made for the fulfilment of both those conditions: for the negative one, by the very act performed by a man in offering himself as a

Sponsor ;—forasmuch as, even without any such positive and verbally expressed engagement, what no one could fail of perceiving is—that by the very act of proposing the individual in question for the purpose of his being received as a member, a degree of displeasure in the breast of the other members, towards any person by whose imprudence the Society had been loaded with the supposed burthen, would, in case of annoyance received either from his deportment or his character, be a natural result:—for the fulfilment of the positive condition, an undertaking to instruct him in the several principles and practices, essential or peculiar to the society, would be an expedient altogether obvious.

In the case thus brought to view, the candidate for admission being by the supposition, in an adult state,—no absurdity—no impropriety in any shape—was attached to an undertaking to any such effect: his consent to do whatever should on his part be necessary to the fulfilment of it, was necessarily implied in the act of his appearing in the character of a candidate: in the very act of solicitation, or even without solicitation, by a bare consent on his part to his being admitted. Admit me into your Society, says the Candidate.—Yes, if you will do as we do, say the Members. So I will, as soon as I know how, replies the Candidate. I will shew him how, says a Sponsor. In this short dialogue, the nature of the engagement,—and at the same time the plain and real use of the function of Sponsor,—stand expressed.

Widely different is the state of things, in which, under the Church of England,—not to speak of other Churches,—the formulary of baptism, with the institution of sponsorship included in it, is at this time of day employed.

For the practice of sponsorship, in the present state of the religion of Jesus—in a country in which it is established—supported, or even though it were but protected against injury, by government—there cannot be at any rate any general necessity,—nor even, as it should seem, any very considerable use.

By its father alone,—or some nominee of his, declared, or at any rate implied,—can a child be legally subjected to this ceremony. By the custom of the country and of the Church, it is almost immediately after birth—it is long before the dawn of reason—that it takes place. At this time of life, and for one-and-twenty years thereafter,—in the hands of that parent, or of his substitute as above, dwells the power,—and, unless by accident, the habit,—of giving direction to the conduct of the child.

On the part of the father, or any such substitute of his, any such sponsorship is neither necessary, nor so much as proper. The religion of Jesus, is it in his eyes a true religion? and that edition of it, which is in use in the Church of England, a proper mode—in the belief and practice of that religion, and in that mode, voluntarily, spontaneously, and without any such or any other engagement, will he bring up his child. In the eyes of this only proper judge, is that religion not a true one, or is this edition of it not a good edition? It is not right that by any external inducement, whether in the shape of reward, or in the shape of punishment,—by any such external inducement, howsoever disguised, he should be induced, or sought to be induced, to follow it.

Considered as undertaken by the father, or his substitute, whether upon the whole defensible or not, the propriety of this sort of sponsorship is at any rate not altogether destitute of plausibility. The object being desirable—in every point of view desirable—desirable in respect of temporal, desirable in respect of eternal welfare; the guardians of the whole community, shall they refuse to do what is in their power to promote it?

Thus stands the question, as applied to the father or his substitute. Be this as it may,—applied to any person or persons other than those two, it will be found replete with absurdity and immorality.

In number, the Sponsors are commonly three: two of the same sex with the child: the third of the opposite sex: to avoid confusion, it will be sufficient to speak of one. The course of conduct then, the maintenance of which for so long a course of years, is thus promised by him, what is it?—it is one which it never is either in his power or in his intention, so much as to commence. With the consent of his father or his substitute—yes, with that consent the power might be acquired by this person just as by any other: but, neither has he any expectation that any such consent will be given to him, nor if given, has he any such intention as that of accepting it; nor, on the other hand, in the breast of the father or his substitute, has any such intention any place.

Among the three Sponsors, suppose three irreconcilable ways of thinking, on the subject of the religious instruction proposed to be given to the child—what in this case is the result? To this question there are two answers. One is in the spirit of the Church, viz. that no such schism—no such “guilt,” as his Lordship of London would call it—is to be supposed: the other is in the spirit of sincerity and experience; viz. that as this office,—though without pay, and therefore reserved for the laity,—belongs to the catalogue of sinecures, there cannot be two modes of executing it.

Under these circumstances, not only does a man engage, as above, for a course of action to be persevered in by himself—a course upon which it is neither in his intention nor in his power so much as to enter—but moreover for the child's entering upon, and to the last day of his life persevering in, another course of action—and that a different, though a correspondent one.

Over his own conduct he has power: over that other line of conduct, viz. that of the child, to which he thus engages to give direction, he has not, as he well knows, any power whatsoever. Under these circumstances, though what he could not do is—actually to exercise over the conduct of the child any influence, yet what he could do is—to endeavour to exercise the promised influence. But what he promises to do is—not simply to endeavour to exercise, but actually to exercise it.

Amongst other acts which he promises the child shall perform, is the act of believing: in the formulary,—in the lump, and no otherwise than by a loose and general description,—a set of propositions, (and, such propositions!) are brought to view; and all these the Sponsor promises the infant shall believe.

Of the compound of absurdity and wickedness mixt up in every such undertaking, nothing further will be said here: in the ensuing Commentary, something on this subject,—and what it is hoped will be sufficient,—will be found.

In the tenor of the formulary, not only is the Sponsor made to take this rash vow, but the vow,—rash and absurd as it would be on the part of any person, on whom it could by possibility be obligatory,—is assumed to be obligatory on the infant, who took no part in it.

Of this supposed vicarious obligation, and the absurdity involved in it, something will be likewise found, as above.

So much as to the Sponsorship referred to and necessitated by this Catechism: before coming to particulars, one word of general observation may suffice for the Catechism itself.

Considered as involving a declaration of persuasion in relation to a body of speculative religious doctrine—a declaration to be made, by a child but just emerged from infancy—by a being in whose mind the faculty of reason has but just begun to put itself forth—in the very nature of the species of composition called a Catechism, there is a peculiar, and that a flagrant, degree of inaptitude.

At this age, in relation to any such subject, a declaration of persuasion, what can it be but an untruth?—the habit of making such declarations, what is it but an habitual course of lying?—the obligation to which the child is thus subjected—the obligation of continuing in this course, what is it but an obligation to enter upon and continue in a course of lying?—If, by the helpless subjection and blameless ignorance attached to that age, the child itself stands exempted from all guilt,—can any such exemption be for a moment supposed to extend itself to any of those in whose situation no such excuse—no such cause of exemption—is to be found? To the open-eyed, and deliberate, and determined teachers and suborners of immorality in this shape?

Meantime an indication, which may already be given in this place is—that,—as of this formulary, so of every other formulary, and every other characteristic part of Church of England discipline and doctrine,—if not the justificative, the final and efficient cause, stands full in the face of every one who dares look at it: it may be seen in the situation of the rulers of the Church, and the sinister interest, that springs out of that source. Under every system of government, in proportion as it is corrupt, it is the interest of the ruling few that the intellectual, and thence the moral part of the public mind, should be in the most perfect and convenient state of depravation possible:—that, on the part of the subject many, in the words of his Lordship of London, the “prostration of understanding and will” should be as abject and as universal as possible: that, being themselves enured and habituated to the violation of all engagements and all other moral duties, the like violation, on the part of those their superiors, should on every occasion be in their eyes an object of indifference:—that—to take this one example out of a thousand—Church falsehoods and Church sinecures being regarded not merely as objects of indifference, but as sacred,—State falsehoods and state sinecures may at the least be regarded as objects of indifference. And, under a system of all pervading corruption,—under which, while all powers are real, all checks are nominal,—these, though never reduced to writing, nor ever settled in concert—(for where co-operation without concert suffices, concert, having its dangers, is worse than useless)—these then are the terms—the too well established and by the ruling few too generally understood and fulfilled terms—of the so insolently trumpeted, and too really existing, Alliance,—between Church and State.

“ I conclude,” (says Dr. Bell, Elements of Tuition, Part II. Edit. 1814, p. 377,) “ I conclude with “ the conclusion of the Instructions for the establish- “ ing and conducting Regimental Schools.” *—Good :
 and to the present purpose a more apt conclusion could not be found. “ The attention, (continues the doctor)—“ the attention of every person, directing “ and superintending a school, is particularly called “ to watch over the moral and religious conduct of “ the children; and to implant in them, as well by “ daily practice, as by perfect instruction in the “ books recommended for that purpose, such habits
 “ as may best conduce to guard them against the “ vices to which their condition is peculiarly liable.
 “ In particular, the most rigid observance should be “ enforced of the grand virtue of truth, both for its “ own sake, and as supplying one of the readiest “ means of correcting vice of every kind. On this “ ground, a lie should never be excused; and a “ fault, aggravated by a lie, should always be “ punished with exemplary severity.”

Punished, say you?—Oh yes, good Doctor,

* Printed and sold by Authority, by W. Clowes, Northumberland Court, Strand, 1811. Price 6d.

punished they should be. Punished?—but who? the innocent or the guilty? the helpless infant, or the grey-headed suborners, and inexcusable authors of the unwitting and unwilling transgression of the thus gradually and insensibly corrupted innocents?

“Those portions of their religious books should be strongly rivetted in their minds,” continues the Reverend Doctor, “which warn against lying,” . . . then follows a list of other transgressions, of which lying, we see, stands at the head:—Oh yes, good Doctor, rivetted in their minds should those books be, by which this pander to all vices and all crimes, is warned against. But, out of those same tender and susceptible minds, with how much more anxious care should be kept the poison of that book, by which that vice of all vices is not only forced into practice, but inculcated as the first and most sacred of all duties?

THE

Church of England Catechism

EXAMINED.

Question 1.

WHAT is your name?

Answer. (Pronouncing the child's name.)

Question 2. Who gave you that name?

Answer. My Godfathers and my Godmothers in my baptism(1); wherein I was made a member of Christ, the child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven(2).

OBSERVATIONS.

(1). [Godfathers and Godmothers in my Baptism.].—Thus far the answer appears not to stand exposed to any considerable objection: it being supposed, that to this examination no child is subjected, on whom the ceremony called baptism has not been performed. So far as this is true, the answer is nothing more than the statement of a matter of fact, of the existence of which, though, generally speaking, it is not possible the child should have any remembrance of it, it is but natural that he should feel himself assured by satisfactory and unsuspected evidence. But this blamelessness—it will soon be seen, whether it be of any long continuance.

(2). [Wherein I was made, &c.].—Already the contempt of truth, pregnant with those incongruities, of which that corrupt affection is so naturally productive, begins to manifest itself. In this formulary, styled a Catechism, will be found involved, though many of them tacitly, in a manner and without any sufficient warning, a system of assertions, prodigious in extent and variety, contained in another formulary, being the verbal part of a ceremony of prior date, called baptism. Of this anterior ceremony, the examinee, a child, commonly but just able to speak—a child, in which the faculty of name has as yet scarcely begun to develope itself—a child completely incompetent to the forming of any judgment, or so much as a conception, in relation to the matter contained in it, is made to take upon himself to pronounce the effect.

Here, then, the first lesson which he is made to learn, and that under the notion of forming his mind to the sentiment of piety, is a lesson, which, if it amount to any thing, and has any meaning, is a lesson of insincerity: and which, in as far as it forms him to any thing, forms him to insincerity. For hereby what is the declaration which he is made to utter?—a declaration, asserting in the character of a true fact, the fact of his entertaining a persuasion which in truth he does not entertain, and which that he should entertain, is, in the nature of the case, not possible. When by Rousseau, on the occasion of the stories commonly put into the hands of children, under the name of fables, the practice, of thus drawing from the fountain of falsehood and misrepresentation the first aliment presented to the infant mind, was held up to view, and the absurdity and mischievous tendency of it displayed, deep and extensive was the sensation produced by the remark, not less so the conviction and recognition of the justice of it. But if, in any such profane book of instruction, the admission of falsehood be incongruous, and the habit of regarding it not only with indifference but with approbation pernicious, how much more so in a book of religious instruction?—in a book professing to introduce men to the favour of the God of truth?

Yes, if by misrepresentation—yes, if by falsehood, any real and preponderant good effect could be produced, such as could not be produced by any other means. But by this or any other of the falsehoods, so plentifully strewed all over this Catechism, and which will successively be held up to view, in what imaginable shape can any good be seen to flow?

Question 3.—What did your Godfathers and Godmothers then for you?

Answer.—They did promise and vow three things in my name(1): First, that I should renounce the devil and all his works(2), the pomps and vanity of this wicked world(3), and all the sinful lusts of the flesh(4): Secondly, that I should believe all the articles of the Christian faith(5): And, thirdly, that I should keep God's holy will and commandments, and walk in the same all the days of my life(6).

OBSERVATIONS.

I. Things is the name given to the courses of conduct, which are the subjects of the vow here spoken of. But before we enter upon the consideration of these things, one thing presents itself as calling for consideration,—and that is the implied—the necessarily implied—assumption, that it is in the power of any person,—not only with the consent of the father or other guardian, but even without any such consent,—to fasten upon a child at its birth, and long before it is itself capable of giving consent to any thing, with the concurrence of two other persons, alike self-appointed, load it with a set of obligations—obligations of a most terrific and appalling character—obligations of the nature of oaths, of which just so much and no more is rendered visible, as is sufficient to render them terrific,—obligations, to which neither in quantity, nor in quality, are any limits attempted to be, or capable of being assigned.

Every child, at its birth, is cast into bondage, under the power of three persons, who, for any provision that is made to the contrary, may have been self-chosen, and in practice frequently are. Even though these bonds were not more coercive than those of temporal slavery—of slavery in the temporal sense—this surely would be bad enough :—the notion of a power, derived from the Almighty, to cast men into such bondage, absurd and indefensible enough. But such bondage, what is it in comparison of the bondage actually supposed to be thus imposable and imposed? It is as the space covered by human life, to eternity : to that eternity over which the effects, here supposed to be produced by this bondage, are here supposed to extend.

Oh but, by our wisdom and our care (say the lawgivers, by whom this formulary was devised and imposed),—by our wisdom and our care, against abuse of this power, provision—effectual provision—has, in and by this very instrument, been made....

Answer.—Yes: such provision as will be seen. But, in the mean time, and to authorize you to make this provision, what you have assumed,—and what for that purpose it was necessary for you to assume,—and that in the character of an universal proposition, is—that, by the Almighty, in consideration of that particular portion of wisdom, which, to you in particular, it has happened to be blest with—such power not only is fit to be given to rulers in general, but has actually been given to them:—and this, be they who they may, to all rulers: and sure enough, if, to the extent to which, to the purpose of the argument, it is necessary it should be assumed, this general proposition is granted, every proposition, necessary to the establishment of your own aptitude in particular, may be thrown into the bargain, as not being worth disputing about.

But, any such power—when, and on what occasion, was it ever given? where is any the least evidence, of any such gift, to be found?

A job for the casuists.—Here is an engagement taken—an engagement taken in the solemn and awful form of a vow—a vow made by the sponsors—that the child shall do so and so: a vow made by A, not that he himself, but that B, shall do so and so. B, in process of time, breaks the vow: for this transgression—for this breach of a vow—of a promissory oath—for this species of perjury, who is it that is to be punished? A or B? or some one else, and who else? If punished, in what mode and to what amount, punished? by everlasting flames in hell, or by any and what milder punishment?—Questions these, which, whenever this formulary is considered as any thing better than a parcel of words without meaning, will surely, now that, perhaps, for the first time the suggestion is made, be regarded as having some claim to answers. The persons thus dealing out eventual punishment at their own pleasure—viz. the sponsors—are they the persons, by whom, in case of a breach of the vow, the punishment is to be borne,—suppose the ordinary one of everlasting burning in hell fire?—if so, quere, of the whole number of persons who have been inveigled into the taking upon themselves this office, what is the number that will be saved?—What is the number?—Answer. None. For, whether its being kept inviolate is not as far from being possible as from being desirable, is what any rational eye will presently be in a condition to perceive. Upon the person, whom, in a state of helpless infancy, under the direction of the Church of England hierarchy, they have thus fastened upon and loaded with this burthen—is it upon this Jonas, that the lot of punishment will fall?—What a case is his! and, in its effect, what sort of a boon is this, which is thus magnified!

II.—Thus much as to the general principle of the alleged engagement—now as to the subject matter of it.

Three, and but three, is the number here spoken of as the number of the things vowed and promised. But, of these three things, the first-mentioned is of itself a TRIPLE one, speaking of three things, or sets of things, as so many things which are to be renounced: as so many things, for the renunciation of which by the child (whatsoever be meant by renunciation), undertakers, under the name of sponsors, (or the child can not be a Christian), must be found, that will pledge themselves.

Mean time, without stopping as yet to take any clear view of the preceding things, no sooner is the last of them brought to view, than a question very naturally presents itself. Supposing this engagement fulfilled, can any thing else be wanting? “God’s holy will and commandments” kept, can any thing more be necessary? Is it in the nature of the case that even God himself should will or desire any thing more? The terms of the phrase, it must be confessed, are general; at the same time, for terms so comprehensive, few can be clearer or more easily intelligible.—“A commandment”—what sort of a thing that is, is among those things, which, by daily and hourly reference, are made known to every body. Sure enough, if every thing else had been equally clear, no such commentary as the present would ever have made its appearance.

Come we now to those other “things,” by which this last is so unnecessarily preceded.

In relation to these first-mentioned things, numbered first and second, the first observation that strikes the eye is—that, presented as they are in this manner to view, the child is bid to look upon them as so many distinct things:—upon each of them as something, which in its nature is distinct, and on this occasion specially contradistinguished, from the thing last-mentioned, viz. “the keeping God’s holy will and commandments.” If, all the days of his life, so it is that a man has been keeping this holy will, and these holy commandments, what he has thus been doing, is he to understand then that it will be accepted as sufficient? Not he, indeed:—remain for him to do all these other things, whatsoever they may be.

These things, whatever they are, if so it be that it is in pursuance, as well as in consequence, of the engagement thus taken, that they are to be done by him, then so it is that to his doing them one thing more is necessary; which is, that he understand what they are: unfortunately, here, it will be seen, lies the difficulty,—and that, to an ordinary understanding, not to speak of extraordinary ones, it is much to be feared, an insuperable one.

Among the three things, or sets of things, that are to be renounced, first come "the Devil and all his works."—The Devil, who or what is he, and how is it that he is renounced?—The works of the Devil, what are they—and how is it that they are renounced?—Applied to the Devil, who or whatever he is,—applied to the Devil's works, whatever they are,—what sort of an operation is renouncement, or renunciation?

To all these several words,—to one of them in particular, by which an idea, no less terrific than obscure and indeterminate, is wont to be excited,—what tolerably distinct ideas can rationally be expected to be attached, in the mind of infant simplicity and ignorance? When the holy person, whose name is next under the Sovereign's, seated on the pinnacle of theological science,—when the Archbishop of Canterbury himself is able to tell us who or what the Devil is, what are his works, and by what operation they are renounced,—they being all the while things distinct,—all of them,—as well from "the sinful lusts of the flesh," as from "the pomps and vanity of this wicked world,"—then it is that it may be time enough to expect any tolerably clear, and practically useful idea, of all these mysteries, to stand attached to these words, in the infant mind, for the nourishment of which this composition, such as we see it, is the morsel first administered.

"The Devil and all his works."—And in the first place, the Devil himself,—of whom so decided and familiar a mention, as of one whom every body knows, is made.—Where lives he? Who is he? What is he? The child itself, did it ever see him? by any one, to whom, for the purpose of the inquiry, the child has access, was he ever seen? The child, has it ever happened to it to have any sort of dealings with him? Is it in any such danger as that of having, at any time, to his knowledge, any sort of dealings with him?—If not, then to what purpose is this renouncement? and, once more, what is it that is meant by it? Suppose him, however, to have actually renounced this Devil—that is, speaking of this Devil, to have said, I renounce him—in what condition is he, other than that which he would have been in, had no such renouncement been made?—The engagement, whatever it be, if any, which by this renunciation has been taken, by what act or acts is it that it would be violated?—This is surely among the things that would be worth knowing, were it only that a man might have it in his power to avoid the violating—the breaking—of this his engagement, without knowing, and for want of knowing, what it is.

“The Devil and all his works!”—Exists there any where any real being to which this name is applicable? If yes, exists there any sufficient reason for supposing that he ever made his appearance upon this earth?—ever made his presence sensible to, exhibited his person to the senses of, any human being that ever lived?

Not by unbelievers only, but by many a pious Christian, is the existence of any such being not merely doubted of, but, for such reasons as to them have been satisfactory, utterly denied:—the sort of being mentioned under this name, being, in their notion of the matter, no other than an allegorical one; the passages, in which mention is made of him, so many purely allegorical or figurative expressions.

Figurative, and nothing more, was and is, according to them, the existence of this personage: figurative, and upon a line with that of Jupiter and Juno, and the other inhabitants of the classical heaven, subjects or colleagues to those celestial potentates.

True, say certain fathers of the primitive Christian church. Yes; most exactly indeed upon a par were and are the Devils, great and small, with those Gods and Goddesses, great and small—with those Dii majorum gentium—with those Dii minorum gentium. Strange, indeed, if they were not upon a par, when in truth they were and are the very same. Who?—yes—who were Jupiter and Juno, and the rest of them?—Who, but so many Devils, who, applying their influence to the inhabitants of this earth, caused themselves to be respectively worshipped under those classic names.

In these later times, to men of the deepest learning,—though among them it probably would not be easy to find many, if any, to join their suffrages on this question with those of the abovementioned fathers,—every thing relative to this personage, and in particular his existence, is matter of doubt and difficulty; and as between this and that one of them is matter of dispute. At the same time, even among babes and sucklings, there is not one who is not qualified to decide upon it, and so well qualified as in this our Church to be forced to decide upon it, and to decide upon it accordingly.

To any such tender mind how indeed should it be matter of doubt or difficulty!—when, besides being assured of the existence of this personage by the earliest of all lessons, and highest of all authorities—(for that of the Bible,—a book of which the sense is to be taken upon the credit of this improved substitute, is but derivative)—not only his nature, but his very form is brought to view and made known by those portraits, which are to be seen every where, and in particular in so many copies of the Book of Common Prayer, of which this Catechism forms a part.

To the learned, as well as to the gay, among persons of riper years, such portraits, with the infinite variety of tales connected with them, are either subjects of merriment or objects of indifference. But, to the multitude of the young and uninformed, whose learning begins and ends with this so highly magnified summary, serious indeed is the idea attached to that tremendous sound. How many, from whose minds the horrific being,—of which, from the most unquestionable authority, the existence is thus certified,—is never absent! How many to whom this his ideal presence is sufficient to render solitude, at least when coupled with darkness, a situation of never-ceasing torment?

(3). [“The pomps and vanity of this wicked world.”] —Pomps and vanity, two other sorts of things given here as one thing,—and that one, as well as the things preceding and succeeding, a thing to be “renounced.” Renounced? —By whom?—By every member of the Church of England without exception, and that with almost his earliest articulate breath.

As to the vanity, with or without the subjoined limitation, by which it is confined to “this wicked world,” being in itself the vainest of all vain words—so completely vain as to be void of all meaning—it may, with that character attached to it, be dismissed.

But the word pomp—to this word is attached by usage—unvaried usage—a meaning somewhat more determinate and intelligible. Under the word pomp are comprised all those factitious appendages, by which factitious dignity,—when combined with the visible and tangible fruits and marks of opulence,—is, in the hands of the ruling few, employed to distinguish them from the subject many.

The Monarch, in the first place, is it not by pomp that he is intended and enabled to display and preserve his dignity, and therewith and thereby to maintain his power? The robes—the sceptre—the crown—the train of attendants, in so many forms and colours—armed and unarmed

—if these be not the elements of pomp, what others are?

Not to speak of Lords Temporal, with their titles, their coronets, and their armorial ensigns, behold the Lords Spiritual with the “fine linen” on their shoulders, the “purple” on their liveries, the purple and the mitre on their equipages. If not of these things, of what things is “pomp” made?

Of all these holy personages—these sitting and walking pageants—what one has there ever been, by whom all these things have not been thus solemnly renounced?—all these things, to which, disguised under the name of decency, they now cling with such fond and undisguised affection:—these things, of which the very essence of their order is, according to them, composed, and by the taking away of which the Church would, according to them, be laid in ruins, and along with it the State.

That this so much magnified instrument of theatrical piety, is neither more nor less than a farce,—that nothing that is to be found in it need or ought to be considered as possessing any binding force,—that it is neither more nor less than so much sound without sense,—is not this the comment, which, in that highest of all high places, the text receives from practice?

Such, then, being the judgment passed on it by the highest of all authorities, by what inferior authority—by what private individual—should any different judgment be passed upon it?

And this is the “Instruction, which,” (as it says itself in and by its title), is “to be learned of every person before “he be brought to be confirmed by the Bishop :”—By the Bishop? and by what Bishop?—by the self-same Bishop, who by the “pomps,” whatever they are, by which he is surrounded, manifests the contempt with which, by himself, this same Instruction is regarded: and who, at the very time, when the youthful votaries, whom he beholds at his feet, are passing examination under his eye,—and, under his authority, in and by the words thus forced into their mouths, made to declare the knowledge which they have of its contents, and the sentiments of veneration with which, by these same contents, they have been impregnated,—is all the while, in relation to these same contents, making manifest, if not his deliberate contempt of them, at least his ignorance or negligence.

(4). “Sinful lusts of the flesh.”—In this may be seen the third and last of the three “things,” or sets of things, which with its scarce articulate accents, the child, so lately in its cradle, is made to declare itself to have “renounced.” —Those “lusts,” which he has so decidedly “renounced” —those “sinful lusts”—what are they?—what, in his view of them, can they be?—Is it that the “lusts of the flesh” are, all of them, “sinful,” and as such to be comprised in the renunciation? or is it that, while there are some of them that are sinful, and as such are to be “renounced,” others there are, that are not sinful, and accordingly are not comprised in it?—These are among the secrets, which, howsoever here mentioned, are not here made known. But are they not worth knowing?—Are they not necessary to be known?—Are they not such as must have been known, ere the “Instruction which is to be learned of (meaning “by) every person,” can, to any one person, be of any sort of use?

(5). “Secondly, that I should believe all the articles of the Christian faith.”

Behold here another subject for a promise—for a promise in the shape of a solemn vow—in the shape of that sacred sort of instrument, which is neither more nor less than an oath, applied and adapted to this particular purpose. A promise?—to do what?—to believe:—a promise to believe an innumerable host of things,—and that without knowing what they are. For, be it observed, the thing to be believed is—not simply the Articles, but all the Articles. Follows, indeed, the Creed, called the “Apostles’ Creed,” the repetition of which is performed in answer to the presently following command—“Rehearse the Articles of thy Belief.”—but in this Creed are they all contained? Not they indeed. For if they are, what is the Nicene Creed, and what the Athanasian?—both of them comprised in the Liturgy—that massy compound, which the child is condemned to gulp down after he has swallowed this Catechism;—each of them as much a part of the Church of England Liturgy, and thereby of what passes among Church of Englandists for the repository of the Christian faith, as that, called the Apostles’ Creed, is.

Question 4.—Dost thou not think that thou art bound to believe, and to do as they have promised for thee?

Answer.—Yes, verily; and, by God’s help, so I will. And I heartily thank our heavenly Father, that he hath called me to this state of salvation, through Jesus Christ our Saviour. And I pray unto God to give me his grace, that I may continue in the same to my life’s end.

OBSERVATIONS.

Question. “Dost thou not think,” &c.—Answer. “Yes, verily," &c.—Here then, not only do the authors of this formulary themselves advance this absurdity, but they compel the poor child,—as they have hitherto compelled so many millions—compelled, during so many successive generations, the far greater part of the population of the whole kingdom, and done what depended upon them towards compelling all future generations to the end of time, —to pronounce his assent to it, and his approbation of it.

Now then, once more, if so it be, that it is in the power of any three persons, under the name of Sponsors, to take possession of a child—a new-born child—and bind it, force it, to believe this set of Articles—how should it not be equally in their power to force it to believe any other set of Articles!—to believe, for example, the direct reverse of these same Articles?—If it be in their power, thus to force a child,—to force as many children as they please,—to believe a set of Articles which they call "the Christian faith," how should it not be in their power to force it to believe a set of Articles, for example, of the Mahometan faith?

Here then is a notion, which strikes—(for does it not strike?)—at the root of all religion as well as all morality: and, forasmuch as, in giving utterance to this mass of absurdity, the child is forced to say that he believes it,—while, at his years, at any rate, to believe it is not possible,—thus it is that the duty and practice of lying forms part of every Church of England child's first lesson:—forms part?—Yes—forms a part, though but a part, of what he is taught, —but forms nearly the whole of what—let us hope at least—it is possible to him to learn from it.

Command, immediately following upon the fourth question—" Rehearse the Articles of thy Belief."

Answer.—"I believe in God, the Father Almighty, Maker of heaven and earth: And in Jesus Christ, his only Son our Lord, who was conceived by the Holy Ghost(1), born of the Virgin Mary(2), suffered under Pontius Pilate(3), was crucified, dead, and buried(4), He descended into hell(5); the third day he rose again from the dead, He ascended into heaven, and sitteth at the right hand of God the Father Almighty; From thence he shall come to judge the quick and the dead. I believe in the Holy Ghost(6); the holy Catholic Church(7); the communion of Saints(8); the forgiveness of sins(9); the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting. Amen."

OBSERVATIONS.

Of the three declarations of persuasion, which, under the name of Creeds, are all adopted into, and make part of the Church of England Liturgy, this,—which by universal confession falsely(1), yet not the less universally, is called the Apostles' Creed,—is one.

In relation to this instrument, as here placed and employed, two questions naturally present themselves—

1. The set of opinions here stated as deduced from the text of holy writ, are they rightly deduced from holy writ? Do they in holy writ find a sufficient warrant?

If yes, is it right and useful to take the whole of the instrument, as it stands,—and thus, at the tenderest age, force it into the mouths of children?

Of these questions, the first does not in any peculiar manner belong to this place: for the present at least it may therefore be dismissed.

In relation to the other question, a few observations may be not altogether without their use.

(1). [Who was conceived by the Holy Ghost.].—Not to dispute the matter of fact—the child—is it in the nature of the case that, of this conception, any conception at all should be entertained by the child, by whom the answer is lisped?

(2). [Born of the Virgin Mary.].—The like question to this clause.—Born of a Virgin?—Yes: viz. of a woman who was once a virgin: but, if that be what is here to be understood, so was every man that was ever born. Born without prejudice to her virginity?—she remaining after the birth as entirely a virgin as she was before? Is this a matter, the conception of which is, to a pupil, at such an age, in the number of things possible?—at such an age—not to speak of any less early age. Admitting the possibility, the attempt to convey an idea such as this, can it in any way be of use?

(3). [Suffered under Pontius Pilate.].—To a child at such an age, the name of the Roman governor, under whose government the suffering took place—the remembrance of it, is it of any particular use?

(4). [Was crucified, dead and buried.].—Crucifixion—burial—in neither of these two facts is there any thing but what, at a very early age, a child may be capable of comprehending without much difficulty.—But death? the death of whom?—the death of a God?—What? a God? a God of our own die?—Much about this time, perhaps a little earlier, perhaps a little later, it may have happened to the child to hear of the Gods of the heathens—Gods in multitudes—not one of them subject to death. In such a case how inferior will this comparatively new God be apt to appear to him, in comparison of the least of these ancient ones? But if God the Son was thus mortal, what should preserve his Father from being mortal too? If it was the Son's turn to die at that time, may it not one of these days be the Father's turn? and then what is to become of the world, and all that live in it?

For the removal of this difficulty, what answer is left, but the doctrine of the two natures? Jesus (the child must be told) had two natures—the human and the divine: he was a man and a God, that is the God—for there is but one God—at the same time. It was the man only that was crucified, and, dying under the operation, was then buried. The God did not die: in the case of God, no such thing as death took place: it is not in the nature of God, that is to say, of the one God, to die. Well, then, while one of these persons, viz. the man, was dying, the other of them, the God, the one God, whereabouts was he?—Have a care, child, what you say. Two persons? no such thing. Man one, God one: these one and one, which you in your ignorance take for two, are not two persons: they are but one.—How but one person? One man, is not that one person? and one God, is not that another person? One and one, do they not make two?—In answer to any such questions, nothing remains but to chide the poor child for his ignorance—to insist upon his understanding in this case the difference between a nature and a person, and thereupon to plague him till he declares himself satisfied, that though Jesus had two natures, he had but one person, and that, in that instance at least, so far as personality was concerned, a God—no, not a God, but God—yes God, and man together, were one and the same.

Now, to any practical purpose, whether this or any part of it be true or no, is not, to child or man, worth inquiry. How should it be? For to human conduct, take it in any of these ways, what difference does it make? But, in regard to all this, or any part of this, to force a child to declare—to declare most solemnly and seriously, that he believes it: believes it just as he believes in the existence of the person, by whose words and gestures the words are forced into his mouth; and this in a case, in which any such belief is as plainly impossible! In this lies the mischief:—and, so long as in a habit of falsehood and insincerity, and that a universal one, there is any thing mischievous, this mischief will be as real, as the pretended belief is false.

(5). [He descended into hell.].—Of the matter of fact here asserted, the truth being admitted—(though for the admitting it no warrant was ever so much as attempted to be found in any part of Scripture, that bears any relation to Jesus, and though as well might it have been asserted, that, while a visit was then paid to hell by Jesus, a visit was at the same time paid to heaven by the Devil)—still, on this, as on so many preceding and so many succeeding occasions, comes the question—supposing the fact ever so well established, to what possible good use force a child, as soon as it can speak, to say that it believes this,—or so much as use any endeavours to cause it actually to believe any such thing?

When, against this proposition, the monstrous absurdity of it, coupled with its utter destituteness of all warrant from Scripture, is brought to view, the observation made by way of answer—and that probably enough a true one, is—that in this particular the translation is incorrect: for that in the original Greek the word, rendered in English by hell, did not, on this occasion, mean that which on every other occasion it is commonly understood to mean—viz. the abode, and place of torment, of the damned.

But, besides that, of this observation, a necessary effect is to give birth to another question,—viz. if not hell, what other place then is, on this occasion, to be understood?—(a question, to which an answer would not, it is supposed, be very easy to be found),—another observation is, that, in the case of at least nine hundred and ninety-nine out of a thousand, of those, whose salvation is understood to be in so material a degree dependent—dependent, in some way or other—upon this Catechism,—no such mis-translation is known, or so much as suspected. In the conception of this vast majority,—the place of torment, appointed for the Devil and his angels,—this is the place, to which the visit of this Son of God—himself God—was, in his own divine person, paid.

Of this perplexity, added to so many other perplexities, what is the result? That,—in the minds of a very large proportion of the whole number,—a very large proportion, if not the whole, of this discourse, called a Creed and the Creed, produces the same effect as, and no more than, so much inarticulate sound. Not but that if, in the instance of the whole number, such were the case with the whole of this same creed, it would be all the better: always excepted the mischief of the lie which the child is taught and compelled to utter, in thus seriously and solemnly declaring that he believes it.

(6). [I believe in the Holy Ghost.—Mere sounds without sense: mere words without meaning: not only void of all meaning, which to any such young person can be of any use—not only void of all meaning which to any person can be of any use,—but without any thing attached to them that can be called meaning.

What is the Holy Ghost?—Answer. The same as the Holy Spirit.

What then is the Holy Spirit?—Answer. The Spirit of God.

What then is this Spirit of God, that, when you believe God, this should not be enough, but that you must believe in this Spirit of God besides? Believing in a man, what more do you do, by believing in his Spirit likewise?

“The Lord be with you,” says the Minister to the congregation in one part of our Liturgy. Not to be behind hand with him in piety or politeness, nor yet to give him back his compliment without variation, as if for want of words, “And with thy Spirit,” returns the Chorus, under the command of the Clerk. In any such variation of the phrase, has imagination, in its extravagance, ever soared to such a height as to fancy itself to be possessing and employing a re-agent, having the effect of decomposing a human person, in such sort as to convert him, polypus like, into two persons, of which himself is one, and his spirit the other?

If believing in God be not enough, without believing in the Spirit of God besides, how came this to be enough? To believe in the Spirit of God, in addition to God himself, how can this be sufficient, when, besides the Spirit of God, according to the flowery texture of the same language and the same Scriptures, there are so many other things belonging to God, viz. the hand of God, the arm of God, the finger of God, the word of God, the power of God, the glory of God, and so forth: each of them not less susceptible, than the Spirit of God, of a separate existence.—Oh, silly men—yes, if sincere, “more silly than “any sheep, which on the flowery plains shepherd did “ever keep”—ye string words upon words,—and then, for every word, believe, or pretend to believe, that a correspondent really existing object is brought into existence.

The Holy Ghost being, at the end of the account, something which is the same as God, and at the same time distinct from God,—and being something, in which, day by day, the child is obliged to say that he believes,—by the sense of this obligation, should it happen to him to be induced, to put himself upon the look-out for something determinate to believe in,—of such his inquiry, what, if any thing, will be the result?

In the same instructive prints, which present to his view the Devil, in the character of a black man, with horns to his head, and a tail to his rump, he will behold a pigeon, hovering in a spot of light. This pigeon, which, however, he will be taught to call not by this name, but by its other and more poetical name, a dove—this pigeon it is, that if any thing, will be the object of his belief.

Our God, whose picture here and now must not be drawn, but which when here it was drawn, was—and there where it is drawn, is—the picture of an old man,—another God, whose picture may be drawn, and is continually drawn, and when drawn is seen to be the picture of a young man—which God is likewise not only a God but also a man,—a third God, whose picture may be drawn, and being drawn, is seen to be the picture of the sort of pigeon called a dove,—these three Gods, who, man and pigeon included, make, after all, but one and the same object of belief, and that object a God,—these, when this system of instruction has been read, marked, learnt, and inwardly digested,—comprise and constitute the subject of all this science—the object of the young child's belief—of that belief, of which he is forced to say that he entertains it.—That he entertains it?—why?—Even because, in an unthinking and half-hearing moment, three persons, under the rod of the law,—to save him from the endless and inscrutable mass of temporal inconvenience, attached to the non-performance of the ceremony,—undertook, by that which would be not only a rash, but a flagitious, were it any thing but a senseless vow, that, after having begun to entertain this belief, before he knew or cared what it was that he was thus entertaining, he would, to the end of his life, continue to entertain it.

(7). [The Holy Catholic Church.].—The Holy Catholic Church.—“I believe in the Holy Catholic Church.”—Not to speak of former times, what is it that at present a child can understand himself to have spoken of himself as doing, when he has declared that he believes in the Holy Catholic Church?—I believe in God?—Yes, this is what he may conceive himself to understand.—I believe in God; i. e. I believe in the existence of a God—and so in regard to Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost. But—I believe in the existence of a Holy Catholic Church?—For this same Church, of which, under the name of the Holy Catholic Church—one Holy Catholic Church, and no more than one—he is thus forced to speak, where is it that he is to look? If, by any such name as the Catholic Church, there be any thing that, on any other occasion, he has ever heard spoken of as being in existence, it will have been the Roman Catholic Church:—a Church, composed of Roman Catholics, who are the same men that are sometimes called Papists, and who, when they were in power, burnt as many of the good people called Protestants, of whom he himself is one, as for that purpose they could lay hold of. Now, as to the Holy Ghost, in whom the child has just been declaring himself to believe,—whatsoever is or is not meant by holiness,—that Ghost, without any difficulty, is holy. But this Church, composed as it is of the barbarous men called Papists, is this too Holy?—holy, even as the Holy Ghost is Holy?—On the part of the poor child, suppose any particle of thought to be bestowed upon the subject, how distressing must be the perplexity, into which he here finds himself plunged?—But no:—before it has arrived thus far, the plain truth of the case is—that, whether in the breast of a child, or in the breast of an adult, the faculty of thought, having found itself baffled and wearied out,—has, in despair, withdrawn itself from the whole subject,—leaving in the grasp of the conception and the memory, nothing but a string of sounds and characters, void of all sense.

(8). [The Communion of Saints.]—The Communion of Saints? One more puzzle: a riddle, which unhappily is not explicable, but which happily is not worth being explained.

The Communion of Saints—What is a Communion? What are Saints?—Saints, the poor child will soon have heard of.—There is St. Peter; there are the rest of the twelve Apostles, (Traitor Judas being excepted): there are Jesus's four Biographers, decorated with the title of Evangelists: all or most of them more or less known to him by their portraits; all of them striking likenesses; and, though last not least, there is St. Paul, whose beginning had borne but too near a resemblance to the latter end of Judas. In the Communion,—or, at any rate, in a communion,—the child may likewise, ere long, behold a thing which he has heard of, and moreover heard—a part of the Church service, called sometimes, for shortness, the Communion simply; at other times, without abbreviation, the Communion Service. — Communion — Saints — belief — putting together the ideas brought to view by these three words,—what, in relation to this matter, will be the little creature's belief?—something, perhaps, to this effect; viz. that, among the Apostles, and whatever other holy men used to be called Saints, it was a custom to join together in the performance of the Communion service; of the Communion service,—worded, as he has seen it, or is about to see it worded, viz. in the Church of England Liturgy.

If this be an error, well would it be for the successive generations, by which the compound, here analyzed, is destined to be swallowed,—not to speak of those by whom it has been swallowed,—if, of all errors contained in it, this were the most pernicious one.

Saints, whose portraits he has there been used to see—that, like good Saints as they were, they used, all of them, to join in the performance of the Communion service—this may do for a time. But to believe in the Communion of Saints, is to believe in the Saints themselves:—and who are these Saints? Any such question, should it ever happen to him to put to himself, what answer will he have to give?—Where shall he find it?—Where shall he look for it?—Sooner or later it may happen to him to look into the Calendar, that stands at the commencement of his Common Prayer Book, more especially as it is there that he will have to look for Holidays. Looking into this treasury of consecrated idleness, he will find, that, to the original stock of Saints, he will have to add a list of modern ones; not to speak of Martyrs and Confessors, with whom this Catechism has happily abstained from burthening his memory and his conscience. Neither in this however will there be any great difficulty: and now, to his belief in the Devil will be added, his belief in Saint Dunstan, whose Church is established still in Fleet-street, and whose Saintship consisted in pulling the unclean spirit by the nose.

Here at any rate may be Saints enough to satisfy his believing appetite, so long as his studies are confined to the Common Prayer Book, of which this Catechism makes a part, and the Calendar, by which it is commenced, or preceded. But, by the Holy Scriptures—should they ever carry him so far—how will those ideas, which by the Common Prayer Book he had been led to form of Saints, be enlarged, and at the same time confused and troubled? On this head, are the Holy Scriptures—is the New Testament—are the Acts of the Apostles, to be believed? If so, then is every one a Saint, by whom the religion of Jesus is, or ever has been, or shall ever have been, professed. Read to this purpose the Acts of the Apostles: or, what is shorter—turn to any Concordance.

If this be so, then in the number of these holy subjects or objects of his belief, he may have to place not only St. Peter and St. Paul with their contemporaries, as above, with such of their successors, as St. Sutton and St. Vernon, and St. Howell, and St. Burgess, and St. Eldon, and St. Sidmouth, and St. Harrowby, and St. Bailey, and St. Stevens, and St. Parke, and St. Wilberforce, and St. Bernard, and St. W. Milner the Protestant, and St. Milner the Catholic, and St. Hannah and St. Joanna,—but St. Napoleon moreover, and St. George, and St. Ellenborough, and St. Yarmouth the Orange-man, and St. Headfort, and St. Dudley Bate, and St. Southey, and St. Anti-Jacobin, and St. Eclectic, and St. Quarterly Review.

(9). [The forgiveness of sins; the resurrection of the body; and the life everlasting.].—On these several points, to the present purpose it seems scarcely necessary to bestow any very particular observations. Thus briefly and elliptically conceived, containing nothing but a mere indication of certain topics, as if touched upon in some other work, the phrases amount of themselves to nothing. The demand they present for explanation is obvious and undeniable; and in the whole body of that formulary, by not so much as a syllable in the way of explanation are they accompanied. Nothing of that sort is there in the Creed itself; as little in this Catechism, into which, for the instruction of young children, it is engrafted.

As such they add to the number of propositions or subject-matters, in relation to which, while it is impossible the child should entertain any belief concerning them, he is thus forced to stand up with all solemnity, and say, "I do believe."

As to these three last-mentioned subjects, compleat the proposition—what in each instance you have, and all that you have, is composed of so many allusions—mere allusions. In the mind of him, whoever he was, by whom this formulary was penned, they had doubtless, every one of them, a subject-matter or object, more or less determinate—every one of them accordingly a meaning. But, in the mind of the so newly-born child,—in that mind, in which it is, generally speaking, impossible that the indeterminate portion of matter thus alluded to should have any place——what meaning can they, any of them, have? At bottom, what then is it that he is thus forced to declare? What but this, viz. that he believes in whatever is thus forced into his mouth, without knowing so much as who it is that put it where it is, much less what it is?

Question 5th.—What dost thou chiefly learn in these articles of thy belief?

Answer.—First, I learn to believe in God the Father, who hath made me and all the world(1).

Secondly, in God the Son, who hath redeemed me and all mankind (2).

Thirdly, in God the Holy Ghost, who sanctifieth me and all the elect people of God (3).

OBSERVATIONS.

To these three things may be added three others, which, with a degree of correctness, proportioned to the degree of the impregnation he has received from them, a child may make sure of learning;—and these are,—the art of gratuitous assertion—the art of speaking and writing without thinking—and the art of making groundless inferences.

(1). [Belief in God the Father.]—Yes: this is among the things which, supposing them noticed, are not incapable of being learnt from it.

(2). [Belief in God the Son?]—Yes, and this likewise. But—belief in God the Son, who redeemed me and all the world?—As to the fact of the redemption; had it been taken for the subject of an independent article of belief, no objection would, here at least, have been made to it. But the Creed called the Apostles' Creed?—this just repeated Creed?—from this discourse is the belief of any such thing as redemption to be learnt? Look at it, reader, once more: examine it from top to bottom. Of no such thing—any the slightest intimation will you find in it.

But mankind, all of whom the child is thus made to say he believes to have been redeemed—redeemed, along with himself, by Jesus—they, on considering the condition in which they will be seen to be placed, present some claim to notice.

Of this redemption, the universality any more than the fact, is not here meant to be disputed. But, whosoever has been made to declare himself to be a believer in it, it might not have been amiss, it should seem, had some little provision been made, for preserving him from any such obligation, as that of declaring, on an eventually subsequent occasion, a directly opposite belief: viz. that of declaring, in solemn form, his belief of and in the entire contents of that other formulary, called the Thirty-nine Articles.—Of that test and treasury of Church of England orthodoxy, in one article, viz. the 18th, intituled, “Of obtaining eternal salvation only by the name of Christ,” “Those (it is said) are to be held accursed, that presume to say, that every man shall be saved by the law or sect which he professed, so that he be diligent to frame his life according to that Law and the Light of Nature. For holy Scripture doth set out unto us (concludes the article) only the name of Jesus whereby men must be saved.”

Not to speak of any former portion of time,—of the whole number of human beings existing at this time upon this our earth, by far the greater number, it is manifest, can never have heard of any such person or name as Jesus. This great majority—are they capable of being saved, each of them “diligently framing his life,” in the terms of the article, “according to the Law of Nature,” (i.e. it must be presumed, leading a virtuous life), or are they not?

Being, along with the rest of mankind, redeemed by Jesus, is a man capable of being “saved,” otherwise than “by the name of Jesus?”—then is the article false.—Is he incapable?—then where is the use of such redemption, and what is a man the better for it?

Every man who takes what are called Holy Orders—every man whose name is entered in the books of either University—declares in writing his belief in all these Articles. But, as hath been seen, no sooner does he thus declare, than, by such his declaration, he contradicts the belief thus expressed in and by this his Catechism.

By parental authority—by the compulsion, inseparable from the exercise, however directed, of that authority,—in a word, by force—by any thing but argument or reason applied to the understanding,—during a long and uninterrupted course of years, he is made continually to declare this to be his belief: thereupon, when the time for the purchase of a ticket in the Ecclesiastical Lottery, and with it the time for Subscription comes,—all on a sudden he turns short round, casts from him this his belief, and embraces the reverse of it.

All this with the most perfect, and the most exemplary regularity: and thus it is that order, good order, regularity, decency—sounds so sweet to the ears of Orthodoxy, Despotism, and their ever ready handmaid, Mendacity—are preserved.

(3). [Thirdly, in God the Holy Ghost, who sanctifieth me and all the elect people of God.]—In explanation of the function called sanctification, thus allotted to God the Holy Ghost, what, in this instrument, is there to be found?—Just as much as in explanation of the function of redemption, just allotted, as above, to God the Son.

Whence then all this elaborate distinction of functions? all the work thus given to the carving knife? The God-head being, as every body is supposed to know, or at least made to say, composed of three persons,—and, on the occasion in question, the plan being to give something to do for each,—thereupon, the less plainly incomprehensible functions of creation and redemption being already disposed of,—divided, as hath been seen, between the two other persons of this undivided Trinity, comes the question—what can we find for the Holy Ghost to do?—Answer. Sanctification.—Here, then, whatsoever be the meaning of it, here was a sort of employment found for him, every other being engaged.

Here, then, in this word we have the name of a sort of process, which the child is made to say is going on within him; going on within him at all times—going on within him at the very instant he is giving this account of it. This process, then, what is it? Of what feelings is it productive? By what marks and symptoms is he to know whether it really is or is not going on within him, as he is forced to say it is? How does he feel, now that the Holy Ghost is sanctifying him? How is it that he would feel, if no such operation were going on within him?

Too often does it happen to him, in some shape or other, to commit sin; or something which he is told and regarded to believe is sin: an event which cannot fail to be frequently, not to say continually, taking place, if that be true, which in the Liturgy we are all made so decidedly to confess and assert,—viz. that we are all—all of us without exception—so many “miserable sinners?” In the School room, doing what by this Catechism he is forced to do, saying what he is forced to say, the child thus declares himself, notwithstanding, a sanctified person. From thence going to church, he confesses himself to be no better than “a miserable sinner.” If he is not always this miserable sinner, then why is he always forced to say he is? If he is always this same miserable sinner, then this sanctification, be it what it may, which the Holy Ghost was at the pains of bestowing upon him, what is he the better for it?

The child, into whose mouth these words are forced, does he not so much as suppose himself to feel going on within him any process, to which the word sanctification can be applied? If not, then what is it that this same sanctification means? and why is it that he is made to speak of the Holy Ghost, as performing or having performed it upon him, when he feels not any such thing, nor knows any thing about the matter?

Does he then feel or suppose any such particular operation going on with him? If so, then must this sanctification be the receiving of that inward light, which certain of the people called Methodists, take upon them to speak of themselves as feeling within themselves. By the rulers of the Church and their adherents, these Methodists are spoken of as schismatics, and a species of heretics. Quere, such reprobation, how is it consistent with the declaration thus expressed and included in this Catechism?

To be sanctified is to be made holy. By the child, be he who he may, sooner or later, this point of information will have been received, if it has not been already. While giving this answer, does the child then feel itself holy?—If not, then why is it to be forced to say it does? If yes, then is it already a Methodist child: an arrant Methodist.

Question 6.—You said that your Godfathers and Godmothers did promise for you that you should keep God's commandments. Tell me how many there be.

Answer.—Ten.

Question 7.—Which be they?

Answer.—The same which God spake in the twentieth chapter of Exodus, saying, I am the Lord thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage.

1. Thou shalt have none other Gods but me.

☞ Thereupon follow the other nine of these commandments.

OBSERVATIONS.

Upon the face of this introduction, an appearance rather unfortunate presents itself. The child in question is not a Jew: neither he nor any of his forefathers were ever, in the manner thus alluded to, "brought out of the land of Egypt." But it is to the Jews, and to that race alone,—to those, and the progeny of those, who were thus brought out of the land of Egypt,—that these Commandments are any where in the Bible represented as having been delivered.

How far, by a person professing the religion of Jesus they ought to be considered as binding upon him, is a subject of controversy, upon which it is not proposed to enter in this place.

One observation, however, there is, which, even in this place, claims admission,—and that by a title which it seems not easy to dispute. This is—that, in a discourse, which is intended for the instruction of Christian children, and which has for one of its objects the causing these Commandments to be regarded as binding upon Christians, it seems not altogether congruous to that design, to employ a form of words, upon the face of which it appears, that no person, not being of Jewish lineage, and at the same time of the Jewish persuasion in matters of religion, and therefore no child for whose use this formulary was intended, is of the number of the persons to whom these Commandments were addressed.

In relation to this incongruity, what was the expectation, and consequent instruction, of the penners and establishers of this formulary?—that it would and should, or that it would not and should not, attract, in general, the notice, and engage the attention, of those who were destined to be impregnated with it?—impregnated with the matter, or, at any rate, with the words of it? If yes, then the expectation and intention was,—that, by those, by whom the words of this formulary were got by heart, no reliance should be placed in the words, of which it was composed; but that for the sense of it, they were to refer themselves to whatever construction the person, to whose guidance it was meant they should stand subjected, might at any time be pleased to put upon it:—if no, then the expectation and intention was,—that in this part at least—(and if in this part, how should it be otherwise in any other?) the place it occupied in men's minds would and should be that of an insignificant assemblage of words:—of mere words, not accompanied by correspondent ideas, and therefore not capable of exercising any influence on human practice;—on the conduct of those upon whose memories it was to be impressed.

But, in relation to this matter, let the expectation and intention have been what they may, what is likely to be the effect? The incongruity, will it be perceived? then in so far will the unfitness of this formulary for its purpose be perceived. The incongruity, will it not be perceived? it will then be, because,—in this particular part, as in the whole together,—it is not of a nature to take on the understanding any efficient hold, nor therefore to produce on life and conduct any beneficial effect.

Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image, nor the likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth.

OBSERVATIONS.

Upon the face of this commandment, two branches of art and science stand condemned and prohibited; viz. the graphic art in all its various modifications; the graphic art, and thereby, in great measure, the science of natural history: two branches of art and science; and thereby, among men, those by whom those branches of art and science are respectively practised and cultivated: on the one hand, painters and other such artists—on the other hand, natural philosophers.

True it is, that, immediately after the above, these are the words that follow:—"Thou shalt not bow down to them, nor worship them." Well then (it has been said) by this it appears, that in so far as concerns manual operation in any shape, in addition to the act of bowing down to and worshipping them, all that was meant to be included in the prohibition, was—not simply the act of making the sorts of things in question, but the act of making them for the purpose in question: viz. that of their being bowed down to and worshipped.

Yes, verily: in this may be seen a signification, which must per force be put upon these words, in so far as a resolution has been previously taken, that whatsoever were the real meaning of the prohibitory clause, the act of making, as applied to the class of articles in question, shall not be considered as included in it.

But, upon the face of the words, as they here stand, is this the true, the natural, the proper sense of them? If so, then are the words designative of the sort of act first mentioned, viz. the act of making—then are the words—"Thou shalt not make to thyself"—to be considered as words void of meaning: then is the whole passage to be understood, as it would be if no such words were there.

But, for the taking of any such liberty with this passage where is the sufficient warrant? If with this passage that sort of liberty may be taken,—taken at pleasure, by any man who finds a convenience in so doing,—why not with any other, and every other?—This is the way that, now-a-days, so many religions are made. By omission, by insertion, by substitution—by amendment in every shape—a man makes a Bible of his own; and thereupon, with intimations given of divine vengeance in case of refractoriness, he calls upon mankind to bow down and worship it.

The writer, inspired or not inspired, by whom this passage was originally penned, was he so much less skilled in the import and management of his own language, as not to be able to give expression to a prohibition, which he did intend should take effect,—not to be able to give expression to this prohibition, without adding to it another and still more extensive,—and that a useless and pernicious one,—which he did not intend should take effect? Inspired or uninspired, had he not foresight enough to foresee (and surely no such gift as that of supernatural prophecy was necessary to enable a man to foresee) that such as is here contended for would be the signification put upon these words,—and in consequence to do what was so perfectly easy to do, for preventing any such sense from being put upon them, viz. to forbear inserting the words by which this supposed real intention was so plainly counteracted, and which could not be either necessary or conducive to any other purpose than that of counteracting it.

In truth, according to the plain and only natural import of the words, here are two sorts of acts, perfectly distinct from and unconnected with each other, that are successively taken for the objects of so many successive prohibitory clauses. One is—the act of worshipping the natural objects therein described, the other is—the act of making visible representations of these same objects.

True it is, that it is not in this order that the two prohibitions follow one another: it is in the reverse order: the prohibition of making any likenesses of the objects in question, this is the prohibition that happens here to have been first. And in this collocation it is—in the relative position thus given to these two prohibitive clauses, which in this their situation are, however, upon the face of them, no less completely independent of one another, than in the opposite situation they would have been—in this circumstance, insignificant as it is, may be seen the only shadow of pretence, that could be found, for a change so violent—for a misrepresentation so manifest.

All this while—as every body knows—in this country, in which the religion of Jesus is not only professed, but established, and even forced upon men by law,—under the same law the making of graven images is not only practised, and allowed, but by public authority encouraged; as well as in all other imaginable ways, “the likenesses” of all sorts of things that are “in heaven above, or in the earth beneath, or in the water (whatsoever there is of it that is) under the earth.” In this state of law and universal practice, while such as above is manifestly the import of this commandment,—a commandment, exhibiting not only in the character of a divine one, but of a divine one, binding not only upon the Jews, to whom it was delivered, but upon Christians, to whom it was not delivered,—is it not deplorable, that, in this country in particular, every Christian, belonging to the established religion, should thus be forced to declare his resolution to keep this commandment along with the rest;—this commandment, which no such Christian ever does keep, or entertain so much as a thought of keeping? or, except in and by this formulary, addressed to young children only, is ever called upon to keep?

To engage in any such task as that of writing a commentary on this Jewish code, forms not any part of the design of the present tract. That part of this Catechism, which is composed of the remaining eight of these commandments, has therefore been omitted.

Question 8.—What dost thou chiefly learn by these commandments?

Answer.—I learn two things: my duty towards God, and my duty towards my neighbour.

OBSERVATIONS.

Of a commentary, be the subject what it may, a proper,—and (it should seem) where, as here, censure is out of the question, the only proper,—use is—in so far as the text is, either with reference to all persons in general, or with reference to a particular description of persons, for whose use the commentary is intended, less perspicuous than might have been wished, to clear away the ambiguity or obscurity;—to wit, by bringing to view what, upon the consideration of the whole, presents itself as the true meaning—the meaning intended by the person of whose discourse the text is composed.

On a subject such as the present, if,—besides exhibiting the meaning which it was in the mind and intention of the author of the original work to convey,—the author of the accessory work in question takes upon himself to draw inferences of his own, in so far it is rather a sermon than a commentary. Be that as it may, in this case what he ought to do is—carefully to avoid confounding with the consecrated ground-work his own unconsecrated inference: and, in particular, in giving expression to his own inference, he ought to employ for that purpose other words of his own, chosen by himself for that same purpose; and not any such words of the original text, as will have the effect of causing this inference of his to be regarded not as his inference, but as so much matter already and actually included in the text; i. e. as constituting a part of that meaning, which, by means of that text, it had been the intention of the author to convey to his expected readers.

Taken on the footing of an independent proposition, that in the main, at this time of day, it would be for the benefit of a professor of the religion of Jesus, to regard the above described duties as so many duties incumbent on himself, is not here less meant to be represented as a matter open to dispute. But that, in the character of an inference—an inference drawn from the tenor of the code here in question, any such proposition is correct, can not be admitted. The Jews—they and they alone—were the people to whom this code was addressed. In addressing himself, whether to his hearers or his readers, those, and those alone, were the people, which, on this occasion, could have been present to the mind of Moses, in such sort as to be considered as the people, with reference to whom the word neighbour was to be understood. But in those days, and on that occasion, who was the neighbour of a Jew? In general, every other Jew: but most assuredly no person other than a Jew. On that occasion, had the benefit of these commandments been meant to be extended to men in general, the word correspondent to the word man, and not the word correspondent to the word neighbour, would have been the word employed. If by Moses, of all men, men in general—all men without distinction—had been meant, what should have been his inducement to discard this most obvious of all words, and substitute to it a different word, the effect of which, in so far as any effect is given to it, is—to designate, to the exclusion of the whole remainder of the species, a comparatively minute portion of it.

Neighbour being a relative term—a word of reference—, no sooner is the object of reference changed, than, in this new case, it comes to be designative of a set of persons altogether different from those which in the first instance it was employed to designate. The sort of person, who, during the penning of the text, was in contemplation under the word neighbour, could be no other than a Jew. But, at this time of day, in so far as the word neighbour is used in its only proper sense, no Jew is the neighbour, much less the only sort of neighbour, of any child into whose mouth this formulary is forced. True it is that, when Jesus comes, he is represented as making an amendment to this code: declaring, on that occasion, that, by every one of his followers, not Jews alone, but every other man without exception, should, to the purpose of receiving the benefits proffered by him, be considered in the character of a neighbour. With this explanation, true it is that, to the particular purpose in question, in the vocabulary of a follower of Jesus, the word neighbour becomes synonymous to the word man:—understand with this explanation, given as it was by Jesus. But, to the explanation and extension, thus, at so vast a distance of time after the issuing of this code, given to it by Jesus, no reference is, in this formulary, to be found. In it the neighbour of the Christian is represented as being at all times the same sort of person as was the neighbour of the Jew in Moses's time; and the one as well as the other, as being the same sort of person as is designated by the word man at all times. Accordingly, presently after, viz. in the answer to the next question but one, the expression all men is slipped in,—and, without notice, is employed in the place of neighbour:

as if the two words had all along the same meaning: and thus, instead of the clear light, in which the whole matter might so easily have been placed, it is wrapt up in confusion and darkness.

Question 9.—What is thy duty towards God?

Answer.—My duty towards God is to believe in him, to fear him, and to love him with all my heart, with all my mind, with all my soul, and with all my strength; to worship him, to give him thanks, to put my whole trust in him, to call upon him, to honour his holy name and his word, and to serve him truly all the days of my life.

OBSERVATIONS.

On the subject of this answer, not a few are the questions that present themselves:—the questions,—pregnant, all of them, with doubts, if not with objections,—some of them chargeable, as it should seem, with impertinence. But, as the suggestions conveyed by them have not for their result any imputation on the morality of the discourse;—as, supposing them well grounded, nothing beyond its character for wisdom is affected by them,—to frame the answers is a task that will be left altogether to the reader: nor, upon any of the subjects thus touched upon, will any more words be employed, than what have been found absolutely necessary for giving expression to the questions themselves.

1. Belief in God? what is it that is here meant by it? belief that God exists, or any thing, and what else?

2. Belief—an act of the understanding—ought it to be, or can it be made subject to the determination of the will?

3. If, in the mind in question, the existence of God is already the subject matter of belief, what need can there be to take it for a subject of obligation?—to rank it among duties?

4. If it be not, where can be the effective ground—the cause of fulfilment—in the case of the obligation thus supposed? Of what sort of matter can any such ground be composed?

5. In regard to love, on the supposition that, to the person in question, the object in question is not only an object of fear, but of a fear which is altogether boundless, in this case, of any such affection as is expressed by the word love, is the real existence, or any thing but the name and profession, compatible with such fear?

6. In particular, any such sentiment or affection as love, is it, in such a place as the human breast, producible by, or so much as compatible with, all this straining.

7. Wherein, except in words, consists, on this occasion, the difference between heart and mind, and soul and strength?

8. By this accumulation of words, thus heaped one upon another, is any other idea conveyed, than that of the extreme difficulty of the task thus endeavoured to be imposed, viz. the task of loving?

9. Any such affection as that called love, where it really has place, does it ever happen to it to have for its accompaniment any such idea as that of difficulty?

10. Be the object what it may, he to whom the idea of loving it presents any such idea as that of difficulty, can he with truth be said to love it?

11. In the case of a young child—not to speak of maturer age—does it seem likely that, by all these words, any such straining should frequently be produced?

12. Supposing it produced, does it seem likely that any real good effects, with relation either to his own happiness, or to the happiness of those, whose lot may have placed them within the field of his influence, will result from it?

13. Be the person who he may, a determination on his part to put his whole trust in God, is it, if carried into effect, compatible with the practice of putting any part of his trust in the known and perpetually experienced and unquestionable operation and efficiency of second causes?

14. A total, or even considerable, though it were but partial, disregard to the operation of such second causes, would it be in any degree compatible with personal safety—with the preservation of health, of life, or of any thing that is worth preserving, whether to the individual himself, or to any other person or persons, whose lot it may be to stand in need of his assistance?

15. The exertions thus required, and perforce undertaken to be employed, in the endeavour to serve that Being, to whom all human service is “unprofitable,”* might they not with more profit be directed to the service of those weak creatures, whose need, of all the service that can be rendered to them, is at all times so urgent and so abundant?

Question 10.—What is thy duty towards thy neighbour?

Answer.—My duty towards my neighbour, is

* Luke xvii. 10.—So likewise ye, when ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, we are unprofitable servants; we have done that which was our duty to do.

to love him as myself, and to do to all men as I would they should do unto me. To love, honour, and succour my father and mother. To honour and obey the king, and all that are put in authority under him. To submit myself to all my governors, teachers, spiritual pastors and masters. To order myself lowly and reverently to all my betters. To hurt nobody by word or deed. To be true and just in all my dealings. To bear no malice nor hatred in my heart. To keep my hands from picking and stealing, and my tongue from evil speaking, lying, and slandering. To keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Not to covet nor desire other men's goods; but to learn and labour, truly to get mine own living, and to do my duty in that state of life, unto which it shall please God to call me.

OBSERVATIONS.

Of this long and wordy formulary, had the whole contents been of a piece with the answer thus given to this question, assuredly it would never have been taken for the subject of a commentary, wearing any such complexion as that of the present, or having any such conclusions for its result and practical inference.

Throwing out the greater part, or the whole of the rest, adding or not adding any thing in the place of the matter thus discarded,—were it proposed to retain the substance of this answer, some such little changes might perhaps be suggested, as need not despair of being received in the character of amendments. But, taken even as it stands, especially when consideration is had of the age in which it was penned, and above all, when comparison is made of it with the whole remainder of that of which it forms a part,—so beautiful does it appear, that the eye shrinks from any such task, as that of travelling over it in search of imperfections.

Question 10, (put immediately after the Lord's Prayer),—What desirest thou of God in this Prayer?

Answer.—I desire my Lord God our heavenly Father, who is the giver of all goodness, to send his grace (1) unto me, and to all people.

OBSERVATIONS.

(1). [Grace.].—Here is the Prayer; and in the whole tenor of it, from beginning to end, about any such thing or word as grace, not so much as a single syllable.

The misrepresentation thus made, is it an innocent one? On the mind of every man, by whom this formulary is regarded as unexceptionable, the effect of it—is it not—in conjunction with so many other causes which the same formulary sets to work,—to contribute towards the reconciling him to that convenient laxity of interpretation, which among religionists is so unhappily frequent,—and, with relation to all worldly interests, so convenient?

A subject-matter, of which every body sees that no mention is made in this Prayer—this subject-matter, a child, who sees that it is not there, is made to declare—to declare in the face of a clergyman, or other person, under whom he is passing this examination,—and who, as well as he, sees that it is not there,—to declare, and to declare most solemnly, that it is there.

The lesson, thus forced into every Church-of-England mouth, suppose it to be productive of any fruits whatsoever,—is it possible that, under such instruction, a rooted and habitual depravation of the mental faculties, intellectual and moral, should not be of the number of those fruits? To repeat, as if it were true, that which, with his own eyes, he sees to be untrue, this is what from infancy a child is compelled to practise—this is what he is made to reckon among the number of his duties.

In addition to grace, another of the things which, they not being in this Prayer, the pupil is thus forced to declare himself to have found in it, is death—everlasting death.—Of everlasting death, what mention is there in this Prayer of Jesus?—Not any: nor yet so much as of what is commonly meant by death. Of evil, yes: and death (it may be said) everlasting death—is not this an evil?—Doubtless: at least if by death be meant—not the absence of all sufferance, but sufferance itself. But if this were a sufficient warrant for making the child say, that Jesus spoke of death, when no such word as death is to be found in what he said, so would it be for speaking of all other things, one after another, to which, with any propriety, the word evil could be applied, and thereupon saying of each, that Jesus had spoken of it.

As to grace, on this occasion, as on so many others—not to say all others—it is a mere expletive; adding nothing to the sense. Yet upon the ground of this expletive, systems have been built, controversies raised, swords drawn, and blood made to flow in torrents.

But, of this disastrous expletive, more will be seen presently; viz. when the modern inventions, called Sacraments, come to be laid upon the table.

Question 11.—How many Sacraments hath Christ ordained in his Church?

Answer.—Two only(1), as generally necessary to salvation: that is to say, Baptism(2), and the Supper of the Lord(3).

OBSERVATIONS.

(1). [Two only.].—Of the word only, the use—so all commentators are agreed—was to put an exclusion upon a parcel of other ceremonies, to which this revolted Church, the Church of England, had found the name of sacrament attached by the original Church from which she broke loose.

But, as to Christ, the question being how many sacraments hath Christ ordained, the true answer would have been—none. For on what occasion, in the only language in which he spoke, is he represented as having employed any word, to which the word sacrament, taken from the Latin sacramentum, corresponds in this our language?

Sacrament? what is it but a word of modern invention—a sort of metaphysical term, having certainly for its effect, probably for its object, the causing to be regarded as mysterious, two operations, in neither of which there was any mystery,—to be regarded as having a connexion with each other—and that connexion fraught with mystery—two objects, between which no such connexion, nor any connexion at all, had been established by Jesus.

(2). [1. Baptism.].—This operation was a ceremony: a ceremony, having for its object the serving to establish, and upon occasion bring to mind, the fact of a man's having been aggregated into the society formed by Jesus: the religious society, of which—God or man, or both in one,—he was the teacher and the head.

The lesson, thus forced into every Church-of-England mouth, suppose it to be productive of any fruits whatsoever,—is it possible that, under such instruction, a rooted and habitual depravation of the mental faculties, intellectual and moral, should not be of the number of those fruits? To repeat, as if it were true, that which, with his own eyes, he sees to be untrue, this is what from infancy a child is compelled to practise—this is what he is made to reckon among the number of his duties.

In addition to grace, another of the things which, they not being in this Prayer, the pupil is thus forced to declare himself to have found in it, is death—everlasting death.—Of everlasting death, what mention is there in this Prayer of Jesus?—Not any: nor yet so much as of what is commonly meant by death. Of evil, yes: and death (it may be said) everlasting death—is not this an evil?—Doubtless: at least if by death be meant—not the absence of all sufferance, but sufferance itself. But if this were a sufficient warrant for making the child say, that Jesus spoke of death, when no such word as death is to be found in what he said, so would it be for speaking of all other things, one after another, to which, with any propriety, the word evil could be applied, and thereupon saying of each, that Jesus had spoken of it.

As to grace, on this occasion, as on so many others—not to say all others—it is a mere expletive; adding nothing to the sense. Yet upon the ground of this expletive, systems have been built, controversies raised, swords drawn, and blood made to flow in torrents.

But, of this disastrous expletive, more will be seen presently; viz. when the modern inventions, called Sacraments, come to be laid upon the table.

Question 11.—How many Sacraments hath Christ ordained in his Church?

Answer.—Two only(1), as generally necessary to salvation: that is to say, Baptism(2), and the Supper of the Lord(3).

OBSERVATIONS.

(1). [Two only.].—Of the word only, the use—so all commentators are agreed—was to put an exclusion upon a parcel of other ceremonies, to which this revolted Church, the Church of England, had found the name of sacrament attached by the original Church from which she broke loose.

But, as to Christ, the question being how many sacraments hath Christ ordained, the true answer would have been—none. For on what occasion, in the only language in which he spoke, is he represented as having employed any word, to which the word sacrament, taken from the Latin sacramentum, corresponds in this our language?

Sacrament? what is it but a word of modern invention—a sort of metaphysical term, having certainly for its effect, probably for its object, the causing to be regarded as mysterious, two operations, in neither of which there was any mystery,—to be regarded as having a connexion with each other—and that connexion fraught with mystery—two objects, between which no such connexion, nor any connexion at all, had been established by Jesus.

(2). [1. Baptism].—This operation was a ceremony: a ceremony, having for its object the serving to establish, and upon occasion bring to mind, the fact of a man's having been aggregated into the society formed by Jesus: the religious society, of which—God or man, or both in one,—he was the teacher and the head.

In an unlettered community, it was a sort of substitute for an entry in a register or memorandum book. By a too natural misconception, the mere sign or evidence of this aggregation was taken for the efficient cause of the benefits produced by it. Thereupon came questions, out of number, about the circumstances by which it should be accompanied:—1. whether the application of the water should be total or partial?—2. if partial, what fingers should be employed in it?—3. and what the form should be, that should be given to the wet mark made by it? &c. &c.* the principle of nullity—that inexhaustible source of uncertainty in all its excruciating shapes—that prime instrument of fraud and rapine—being borrowed from technical jurisprudence, and, in the character of a necessary consequence, attached to every deviation from the arbitrarily imagined and endlessly diversified standard of rectitude. In the same spirit, had the literary, and more durable expedient of a Register-book been employed, questions might have been started—whether, for the validity of the appointment, the quill should be a goose-quill or a crow-quill; the paper, demy or foolscap; the binding, calf or sheep.

Christ ordain Baptism under the name and character of a Sacrament? If by ordain is meant the same as by institute—the same as the having been the first to practise, or cause to be practised,—he did not so much as ordain it in the

* In the Russian Empire, by differences on this ground, persecutions and disastrous civil wars have been kindled. By the sect, which, in the sixteenth century, under the name of Anabaptists, to the determination of performing the humectation in the total way, as it was performed by Jesus, added other particulars, some of which were not only absurd but deplorably mischievous—peculiarities not regarding ceremony but morals—prodigious were the miseries inflicted and suffered.

character of a ceremony. Practise it indeed he did, and afterwards cause it to be practised. But, before he practised it, or caused it to be practised by or upon any one else, he submitted to have it practised upon himself, after it had been practised already upon multitudes. By John it had already been practised upon multitudes, before it was practised by him upon Jesus.—Those who are forced to say this Catechism, why are they so much as suffered to read the New Testament? Can they read it without seeing this?

By whomsoever first invented and put in practice,—in its character of a succedaneum to an entry in a Register-book, it was an operation in every respect well imagined. In the country in which it was thus practised, heat was plenty, water scarce, writing and reading still scarcer, money not over plenty. Baptism,—whether by dipping, by sprinkling, or by both,—was then and there a pleasant operation. Wherever either a river ran, or a lake stood, it cost nothing. John took no surplice fees. Jesus took no surplice fees. Whenever the existence of the Devil is fully proved, it will be proved that by that Ghost it was that these priests' fees were instituted, exactly at the same time with Judges' fees. Surplice fees are unknown in Scotland. By the Church of England only, not by the Church of Scotland, do the poor behold the gates of heaven shut against them.

Question 12.—What meanest thou by the word sacrament?

Answer.—I mean an outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace, given unto us, ordained by Christ himself, as a means whereby we receive the same, and a pledge to assure us thereof.

OBSERVATIONS.

Here, as already observed—here may be seen another example,—shewing how a semblance of something may be manufactured out of nothing. Two transactions—the performance of the ceremony of Baptism, and the utterance of a few words, stated as having been uttered by Jesus on the occasion of a supper at which he was present—two transactions,—which, unless it be the identity of the person who bore the principal part in both, had nothing at all in common,—forced into conjunction; and a generic appellation—the sacrament—made, to serve as it were, for a box, for inclosing them, and keeping them together.—Sacrament? by whom was this word invented and made? By Jesus?—no more than it was by Satan. When thus made, what is the meaning given to this Rome-sprung vocable? In the English, and other dialects of the Teutonic, it is rendered by holy: it is the holy thing. And a holy thing, what is it?—Holiness? the word holiness, what is meant by it? As a property belonging to the thing itself, be the thing what it may, just nothing. By a thing—by any thing whatsoever, of which, by the principle of association, the idea has happened to become connected with the idea of the Almighty Creator,—a connexion of which any one created thing is, and ever has been, just as capable as any other,—by any thing—by every thing to which any such accident has happened, is this mysterious property thus acquired.

Thus then—such has been the course taken by the manufacturing process—by the invention of this so much worse than useless generic term, a branch of false science —a portion of wayward school logic—has been manufactured. Being made to pass examination in this science, the unfledged parrot takes in the words that are forced into its mouth, and declares itself to understand, where there is nothing to be understood.

Under the name of “a grace,” a something—and that something “good”—given unto us—given to every body—given alike to every man, whatsoever be his conduct—given as a thing of course,—by the mere ceremony : a pretended something, which, when examined by an unsophisticated eye, turns out to be in itself exactly nothing,—and even by the name thus given to it, is but a sign,—yet, by the description at this same time given of it, it is an efficient cause !

The Almighty laid hold of, and made to enter into a contract (under what penalty is not mentioned), pledging himself, binding himself, to give to this pretended efficient cause a pretendedly real effect ! Thus it is that the sham science grows : thus it is that the wilderness is formed, in which the wits of those who are destined to travel in it, are destined to be lost.

Question 13.—How many parts are there in a sacrament ?

Answer.—Two: the outward visible sign, and the inward spiritual grace.

OBSERVATIONS.

A compound made out of a real and visible ceremony, to which, by the force of imagination, is attached an invisible and unintelligible effect—such is the whole : and now comes the unfledged parrot, and with his tongue is required to split it into two parts.

Question 14.—What is the outward visible sign, or form in Baptism?

Answer.—Water(1); wherein the person is baptized(2) in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost(3).

OBSERVATIONS.

(1).—Water the sign? No:—of itself water is not the sign of the thing in question—i. e. the transaction here in question—or of any thing else. Of the transaction in question, viz. aggregation to the society in question, the sign was a physical operation: not water itself, but the application of that liquid to the body of the person aggregated. For preserving the memory of the transaction in question,—instead of a transient operation, such as was the application of water to the body in question, suppose the object employed to have been an entry in a Baptism book:—of the transaction in question what would have been the sign?—not the leaf of the book in its blank state, but the mark made—the words written—on that leaf.

In itself nothing can be more trifling than such an inaccuracy: the real matter of regret is—that in this body of pretended instruction, composed by a man who understood not what he wrote, a child should be forced to declare himself to understand, that which, neither to himself nor any one else, is any thing better than unintelligible.

(2). “Wherein the person is baptized”—not wherewith, but wherein—Alas! alas! what a scene of horror presents itself to view! The baptism then must be by immersion—by a thorough dipping—or it is no baptism.—The whole ceremony—all null and void! Of the myriads in a year, who, under the Church of England discipline, are said to be baptized, how many are the really baptized?—

—Not one!

All, all of us heathens! all a prey to Satan!—all children of wrath! (so we shall see the next answer saying)—all “alive to sin!”—all “dead to righteousness!”—the best works we ever do, or can do, no better than so many sins!!!

(3). [In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.].—Here we have a short string of sounds—sounds that are in use to perform the office of names—and, by the texture thus given to a mouthful of air, note well the effects produced! a human being rescued or not rescued from a state of endless torment! And, to such an operation, in the character of a cause,—by whom—by what—have such effects been attached?—By the deluded or deluding imaginations of a set of presumptuous and domineering men.—Under the name of magic, or some such name, state the same conceit as issuing from a heathen brain,—execration or derision, instead of awe and veneration, are the sentiments it calls forth.

Question 15.—What is the inward and spiritual grace?

Answer.—A death unto sin, and a new birth unto righteousness; for being by nature born in sin, and the children of wrath, we are hereby made the children of grace.

OBSERVATIONS.

Note well the sort of story that is here told.—The Almighty God,—maker of all things visible and “invisible”

—“of heaven and earth, and all that therein is”—makes, amongst other things, a child; and no sooner has he made it, than he is “wrath” with it for being made. He determines accordingly to consign it to a state of endless torture. Meantime comes somebody,—and, pronouncing certain words, applies the child to a quantity of water, or a quantity of water to the child. Moved by these words, the all-wise Being changes his design; and, though he is not so far appeased as to give the child its pardon, vouchsafes to it a chance—no one can say what chance—of ultimate escape.—And this is what the child gets by being “made”—and we see in what way made—“a child of grace.”

Thereupon comes the sort of wit, ghostly and ghastly, which, on such occasions, has been so plentifully played off: there we have death, and here we have new birth: death unto sin, new birth unto righteousness. And in this wit we have a subject—not merely for admiration, but moreover for belief:—for belief, of the withholding of which, as if it were in the power of every man to believe or not believe what he pleased, the consequence is—what at every turn, and, upon every occasion, stares us in the face—a state of endless torture.

Question 16.—What is required of persons to be baptized?

Answer.—Repentance, whereby they forsake sin; and faith, whereby they stedfastly believe the promises of God made to them in that sacrament.

OBSERVATIONS.

Obvious indeed are the observations suggested by this answer. But forasmuch as by the next question these observations are themselves undertaken to be obviated, let this next question, with the answers which it is employed to call forth, be first heard.

Question 17.—Why then are infants baptized, when, by reason of their tender age, they cannot perform them?

Answer.—Because they promise them both by their sureties: which promise, when they come to age, themselves are bound to perform.

OBSERVATIONS.

[Perform them?]—Perform what?—Here may be seen a cloud of obscurity and ambiguity, derived from a sort of source—a purely grammatical one—such as in a composition so highly elaborated, and so abundantly examined, would not naturally have been looked for. Of such things as are in their nature capable of being “performed,” the last thing mentioned,—not to say the only thing,—is what is brought to view by the word promises. Yet, on a little reflection, these things, viz. promises, (it will be seen) can not be among the things here in view.—Why?—Answer—Because God is the person by whom these promises were stated as being made. But, not even in such a composition as this, can it have been supposed or pretended, that when God is the person by whom a promise is made, the person by whom that promise is to be performed is an infant.—An infant? Yea, a just-born infant:—the time allowed for performance being no longer than the interval between its birth and the age at which baptism is commonly administered: an interval commonly of between a week and a fortnight.

Look a little forwards however, and then a little backwards, and it will be sufficiently clear, that, though the things to be performed are indeed promises, yet the person, by whom they are to be performed, is—not the least antecedent, viz. God, but the infant: the infant who is considered as the subject of the operation in question, viz. baptism. Why not God but the infant?—Answer, for this plain reason:—because the acts which are held up to view in the character of subjects of promise are “Faith and Repentance,” to wit, the Faith and Repentance above spoken of.

It is not, however, without some violence to grammar—some violation of the rules of grammar—that the language is here reconcileable to the rules of common sense. The number employed in the 16th question is the singular number.—“What is required:” the number employed in the 17th question, by which, with its answer, the answer to that 16th question is undertaken to be explained, is the plural number: “Perform them,” says the 7th question: promise them, says the answer to it. And this promise them, of what is it the representative? Why—as turns out immediately after—of two things. Here then, between question the 16th (i. e. the question, to which, it being, and with so much reason, considered, that explanation is wanting, explanation, such as we see, is accordingly given)—between this 16th question and question 17th (i. e. the question employed to explain it) a contradiction exhibits itself. Believe the explained question, there is but one thing required: believe the explaining question, there are two things—two very different things, both, required: viz. the faith and the repentance. These are the them which, viz. by their sureties, the children promised: these are the them which, viz. by themselves, they are to perform. For so it is, that according to this law and this divinity, they themselves are thus to be sureties for their own sureties.

From the grammatical, return we now to the religious ground: and thereon to what remains of the task which the poor child has to go through with.

Two things, as above, he is required to do: and that because once upon a time, without knowing any thing about the matter, he promised to do them: he promised, that is other people did, which comes to the same thing. These things are—to repent of sin, whether he has committed any or no: and to believe,—and that “stedfastly,” whatever he may think of it,—what, for that purpose, is thereupon put into his hands. This is—that when, a few days after his birth, the Clergyman threw a little water on his face,—saying over him at the same time a few words without a meaning,—God was all the while making him promises, which promises might however as well have not been made, since nobody has so much as pretended to know what they were.

Another task, which his believing faculty is, at the same time, put to,—though without any express mention of it,—consists in the believing bad principles to be good principles, and bad reasons good reasons.

Example of bad principles:—that it is in the power of any three persons, two of them being of the one sex and one of the other, by making, in the name of a new-born infant, a parcel of promises, to saddle it with a load of obligations: amongst others, that of believing,—how incredible soever, when the time comes, they may appear to him,—things upon things, which, had he not been thus saddled, he could not have believed.

Example of bad reasons:—that a man’s having taken upon him to promise, that a child shall believe so and so, affords any reason for the child's believing as much, or so much as trying to believe it.

The point of time, at which these two exploits are to be performed—in this may be seen a point, in relation to which, if the babes and sucklings should, any of them, succeed in forming to themselves any thing like a clear conception, they will have done more than seems to have been done by the sages, by whom this task has been thus put into their hands.

“What is required of persons AFTER they have been baptized?” Had the question stood thus, the meaning would have been clear enough. Thus however it, unfortunately, does not stand: instead of so doing, it stands thus:—“What is required of persons TO BE baptized?” In this way of putting it, the child's having done these things, that are thus “required” of him, is what, in the language of lawyers, is called a condition precedent to his being baptized. These things, then, which he is to do before he is baptized—that is, before he is a fortnight, or perhaps before he is a week old—what are they?—The question has been already answered. He is to repent—to repent of the sins which, in nobody can say what numbers, in his way from the breast to the cradle and back again, he has already committed: and he is to believe—to believe with all his might, all the fine things which for that purpose have been provided. All this while, if so it be, that a child, almost as soon as born, may promise by proxy, why not repent and believe by proxy? The sponsors, when they have promised for him, why not as well perform for him? Having undertaken for the performances, as they are all along called,—viz. a quantity of repentance, and moreover, a quantity of faith,—who so proper as they to execute these several performances?

To a child of a week or a fortnight old, the finding sins of its own to repent of, may not be altogether so easy a task, as on this occasion seems to have been supposed:—to the good men and woman, or the good man and women, by whom all these promises are made for it, the matter may, every now and then at least, be a matter of much less difficulty.

The order in which these same two performances are required and expected to succeed one another;—in this may be seen another exemplification, of the muddiness of the fountain, from which all this instruction flowed. In the natural course of things, the motive comes before the act. If the course here prescribed were to be pursued, the act would take the lead: and then, with a manifestation of humility, of which any example would not easily be found elsewhere, up comes in the train of it the generating and directing motive. According to the scheme of Jesus, faith was of course every where the seed, repentance one of the fruits of it: it was because a man believed—expected to experience the eventual fulfilment of the threats and promises held out to him—it was because a man believed that he was to repent,—not because he repented, that he was to believe. Into the conception of any man besides this Catechism-maker, did any such idea ever enter, as that of addressing threats and promises to a man, to no other purpose than that of making him do what he had done already? But, if the mind, in which both these fruits were to be produced by the genial virtue of this ceremony, was a new-born infant's, either of them would be as ready to come forth as the other: and thus the Catechism-maker is justified.

Question 18.—Why was the sacrament of the Lord's Supper ordained?

Answer.—For the continual remembrance of the sacrifice of the death of Christ, and of the benefits which we receive thereby.

OBSERVATIONS.

Of this answer,—keeping in that part for which a warrant is to be found in the text of the Gospel History, and leaving out of it that part which, no such warrant being to be found for it, has been the work of imagination,—inserting at the same time such words of limitation as may be necessary to confine the proposition within the limits designated by the sacred text,—of this answer the purport might (it should seem) have stood thus expressed:—“For “the continual remembrance of the death of Christ,” to be preserved in the minds of such of his disciples, as,—having been admitted by him into a state of peculiar intimacy, and, from time to time, sent out by him, from place to place, to preach his doctrine,—became distinguished by the appellation of his “Apostles :”—Apostles, in the Greek (the only language in which the Gospel history, or any part of it, has been handed down to us) meaning neither more nor less than an Emissary, or Messenger.

As to “the benefits which we receive thereby,”—what, in this Catechism, they are said to be—what the child is forced to say he believes them to be—will be seen presently.

Moreover, in the act of receiving, as brought to view by the word “received,” is implied the act of delivering : as also, that he, by whom the act of delivering is to be performed, is a different person from him by whom the act of receiving is to be performed. A foundation being thus laid,—and that foundation having, in the words of the sacred history, a sufficient support,—and that not exposed to dispute,—now comes the superstructure, which is the seat of the deception, and which has no such support. This is—that to the act of delivering, one sort of person and one alone, is competent: viz. a Priest: a person, on whom a corporeal ceremony has been performed: a ceremony from which a multitude of spiritual, supernatural, and mystical consequences are deduced:—the act of receiving—that alone is the act, whereunto, under the system, of which this Catechism makes a part, persons other than priests, are competent: nor even to this are the profane multitude competent, but subject to exceptions, drawn out of an inexhaustible mine of exceptions, which has been opened for that purpose:—a mine capable, in its origin at least, of being dug into to any depth, which the interest of those who opened it could require.

And thus it is, that, upon the ground of this supper, which, as the whole history declares, was neither more nor less than a mere social and farewell repast, taken with the utmost privacy;—a repast of which none were partakers, but the most confidential friends and disciples of the Master;—a repast, taken on the occasion of his foreseen and approaching fall;—upon this ground, and with so slender a stock of the most ordinary materials, has been erected a manufactory of grace:—of grace,—a commodity, which, being alike suited to every body's use, was to be sold to all who should be disposed to purchase it: a manufactory, carried on in different forms, under an imaginary perpetual patent, always for the benefit of the patentees.

Instead of domination for the purpose of degradation,—had useful instruction, and the melioration of moral disposition and conduct been the object,—and thereupon had some physical operation, performed by Jesus himself, and actually directed to that object, been looked out for, to be taken for a subject of imitation, and, for the above good purposes, converted into a ceremony,—in any such case, in the incident of the feet-washing, as related by Saint John, the founders of the Romish, and therein of the English Church, might have found what they wanted.

A little before the supper in question, there was another; if indeed it was another, and not the same. Be this as it may, at the supper spoken of by John, (by whom not the least intimation is given of the bread-breaking,) the same select disciples being present, Jesus sees reason to give them a lesson of humility. He therefore in his own person and deportment sets them an example of that virtue. He insists on washing their feet. Put to shame by a manifestation so striking of a disposition with which their own formed so disadvantageous a contrast, Peter resists: vain however is all resistance, and, upon the feet of all the twelve, the operation is performed.

To give to this ceremony a real importance—a practical object, no arbitrary inferences—no additions—would have been necessary: never was design more plainly, more impressively expressed.*

* ST. JOHN, CHAP. XIII.

1. Now before the feast of the Passover, when Jesus knew that his hour was come that he should depart out of this world unto the father, having loved his own which were in the world, he loved them unto the end.

2. And supper being ended, the devil having now put into the heart of Judas Iscariot, Simon's son, to betray him;

3. Jesus knowing that the father had given all things into his hands, and that he was come from God and went to God;

4. He riseth from supper, and laid aside his garments; and took a towel, and girded himself.

5. After that he poureth water into a bason, and began to wash the disciples' feet, and to wipe them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

6. Then cometh he to Simon Peter: and Peter said unto him, Lord, dost thou wash my feet?

While this comparatively insignificant one was sublimated into a mystery,—that really instructive ceremony, how comes it to have been passed over in such profound neglect?—How?—why for three perfectly intelligible reasons.—

1. Because it gave, to the self-created order of official persons, no privilege—no peculiar advantage.

2. Because the lesson, which it so plainly gives, is to them a lesson of condemnation.

3. Because, to the inventors of the drinking ceremony, drinking wine while others looked on, was an operation more pleasant than would have been the washing the feet of those same spectators.

Here then are two contiguous suppers—two farewell suppers—or two incidents, related as having had place at

7. Jesus answered and said unto him, what I do thou knowest not now; but thou shalt know hereafter.

8. Peter saith unto him, Thou shalt never wash my feet. Jesus answered him, if I wash thee not thou hast no part with me.

9. Simon Peter saith unto him, Lord, not my feet only, but also my hands, and my head.

10. Jesus saith unto him, he that is washed, needeth not, save to wash his feet, but is clean every whit; and ye are clean, but not all.

11. For he knew who should betray him; therefore said he, ye are not all clean.

12. So after he had washed their feet, and had taken his garments, and was set down again, he said unto them, Know ye what I have done to you?

13. Ye call me master and Lord; and ye say well, for so I am.

14. If I, then, your Lord and master have washed your feet; ye also ought to wash one another's feet.

15. For I have given you an example that ye should do as I have done to you.

16. Verily, verily, I say unto you, the servant is not greater than his Lord; neither he that is sent, greater than he that sent him.

17. If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them.

the same supper. By the one, a lesson is given—a lesson pregnant with instruction, as plain as it is salutary,—and one, the applicability of which, and with it the utility, will endure as long as man endures. In the other, what is visible to every eye is—an incident, naturally interesting indeed in no mean degree to the individuals then present, but having neither interest nor meaning, as applied to any other individual; nor of itself calculated, or designed, to convey instruction in any shape whatsoever.—The universally important transaction is passed over in universal silence and neglect,—the other is converted into a mystery, with damnation—universal damnation, or thereabouts—at the bottom of it!

Question 19.—What is the outward part or sign of the Lord's Supper.

Answer.—Bread and Wine, which the Lord hath commanded to be received.

OBSERVATIONS.

[Hath commanded to be received?]*—*Mark well the misrepresentation, of which this phrase is the chief instrument: seldom has a plan of misrepresentation been more subtilely contrived.

Had the passage stood in these words, Which the Lord commanded to be received,—stood in these words, without the word hath,—the answer would, as far as it went, have been unobjectionable: as far as it went, it would have been conformable to the sacred text. Mark well—without the word hath: for in this short word lurks the poison—the seed of the deceit.

It is by this word hath that the transaction is represented as meant to be applied to the indefinite present: i. e.

to every point of time, at which it shall have happened to this account of it to find a reader, and to every individual person, by whom,—he being a believer in the religion of Jesus,—it shall have happened to be heard or read.

Such is the conception, which, by the authors of this Catechism, composed in the sixteenth century after the birth of Jesus, is endeavoured to be impressed: viz. that to the effect just described, a command delivered by Jesus, in the intention of its being considered as obligatory,—obligatory with a force equal at least to that of any of his moral precepts,—was addressed to all persons, by whom the religion taught by him should come to be professed:—to all of them, without distinction, to the end of time.

Such is the conception, which, by these men of yesterday, this part of the history of Jesus is represented as intended to convey. In the history itself, how is this same matter represented?

According to the history, who are the persons present?—a numerous assembly, as at the delivery of the sermon on the Mount?—No:—but a chosen few, sitting with him in a private chamber: the twelve disciples, whose condition had been distinguished from that of the general body of his followers by marks of peculiar confidence, and whose life had been interwoven with his own by habits of peculiar intimacy.

“ Ever and anon, when I am no longer with you,—and “ when after my departure, it happens to you—to you
 “ the chosen among my disciples—to meet together, on a “ convivial occasion as at present,—when the materials of “ the repast are before you, think of your departed “ master, think of this your last meeting (for such it will “ be) in my presence. Think of his now approaching “ death: think of the cause and fruit of it. When, for

“ the purpose of the social repast, bread, such as that “ which I have thus broken, comes also to be broken, “ think of this body, which, for the part acted by me “ for your instruction, will, ere long, be broken and “ destroyed.”

“ When the wine, whatever it be that stands before
 “ you, comes to be poured out, let it call to your remem“ brance his blood which will have been shed in that “ same cause”

With this evident sense before them, will nothing satisfy men but the grossest nonsense? Of the multitude of figurative expressions, to which scanty and unformed languages in general—to which the Jewish language in particular, with its dialects—were necessitated, or at least were continually wont, to have recourse,—is this alone, in spite of the plainest common sense, to be understood in the literal sense?

That, in his own hand Jesus held his own body, but in the first instance without the blood belonging to it; and having, by breaking it into eleven or twelve pieces, converted each of those parts into the whole, gave those his eleven or twelve bodies, one to each guest—he himself, with or without his body, looking on all the while to see them eat it,—and thereupon, immediately after gave to each of them the whole of his blood—viz. the wine which had just been poured out, and by him converted into blood,—the bodies, into which the bread had been converted, not having any blood in them,—that of all these self-contradictory extravagances the existence should be more probable than that, on an impassioned occasion, Jesus should have made use of a figurative expression—and that too in a language which scarce offered any other? In a barbarous age, and thence, under the influence of blind caprice, even in a more improved age,—under the Roman Catholic edition of the religion of Jesus Yes: under such a system, in the admission given to any such style of interpretation, how little soever there may be of abstract reason, there is but too much of consistency.

But, under a government calling itself Protestant,—and oppressing Catholics, because they are Catholics, and, for these very extravagances, branding them with the name of Idolaters!

Believe that Jesus, having held his own body in his own hand, gave to each of twelve men, the whole of that same body, and then saw them eat it, &c. &c.—Believe this, because Jesus is related to have said so?—Well then—(not to speak of *a way) believe that Jesus was a door—a door always open for as many men as pleased to “go in” “and out” through it:† for this too is among the things, which, in the same sacred books, it is related of him that he said. In the mouth of a Protestant, among Protestants, this argument, when addressed by them to Catholics, is relied on as conclusive. Conclusive? and against what? why, against this very cannibal story, of the truth of which every Church of England child is thus forced to declare itself persuaded.

Compared with this, the supposition about the door would be rational and probable. Consider Bright and Lambert: the least of these great men had quantity of matter enough in his body, to admit of an aperture, through which, as through a door, a man of ordinary size might have passed without much difficulty. Believing and teaching the mystery of Cannibalism, will a man refuse

* John, xiv. 6. Jesus saith unto him, I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the father but through me.

† John x. 9. I am the door; by me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture.

to believe and teach this other mystery of the door? If so, what will his faith avail him?—When bread and wine, and body and blood, and every thing else is swallowed, still, unless he will swallow the door likewise,—still, if he is consistent, he is an unbeliever; he is still an infidel, and all that he has swallowed has been swallowed in waste.

Question 20.—What is the inward part, or thing signified?

Answer.—The body and blood of Christ, which are verily and indeed taken, and received by the faithful in the Lord's Supper.

OBSERVATIONS.

Body and Blood, without the Bread and Wine,—the Bread and Wine being metamorphosed into Body and Blood,—in the pure grimgribber of modern technical theology—in the theology of the Roman school—this is transubstantiation. Body and Blood, with the Bread and Wine—in the adulterated grimgribber—the produce of Luther's unmaturing attempts to throw off the load of pernicious rubbish heaped up by the Romish school—this is consubstantiation. In respect of absurdity, self-contradiction, and groundless inference,—between the trans and the sub, is there so much as a shade of difference worth thinking of? On the con plan the mess has more matter in it than in the trans: and the more the worse.

“Verily and indeed!”—Danger is here foreseen,—and, it being foreseen, provision is thus made against it:—the danger, lest, here or there, the stomach of this or that intractable and refractory child, should, in the midst of all this instruction, be tempted to listen, in preference, to the testimony of his own senses: lest, accordingly, not finding in his palate the taste and consistence of flesh, any more than, under his eyes, the colour of blood, he should thereupon, notwithstanding all assurances, and the threatenings that may be seen glittering in the back-ground, be perverse enough to harbour doubts of his own Cannibalism. Of the reiterated intensity of these asseverations, the object is—to keep out, if possible, all such doubts.

Question 21.—What are the benefits whereof we are partakers thereby?

Answer.—The strengthening and refreshing of our souls by the body and blood of Christ, as our bodies are by the bread and wine.

OBSERVATIONS.

In itself, a puzzling one indeed is the question here. But—answers such as this—let these be received as answers, no question can be a puzzling one.—Souls refreshed by a body and a quantity of blood?—Oh yes: if the body were but a metaphorical body, the blood but metaphorical blood, and the refreshment but metaphorical refreshment, in that case there would be no difficulty. By that which is metaphorical, any thing may be done: Yes, any thing; for that which is metaphorical is—any thing. But the body—is it then a metaphorical body?—Not it indeed. It is the real body: the blood is the real blood;—or how could they be “verily and indeed taken?” the refreshment, which a true Church of England soul takes by the eating of this body, and the drinking of this blood, is either no refreshment at all, or it is the same refreshment, that the soul of a New Zealander takes when he has been fortunate in battle: when,—as a clergyman of the New Zealand religion, whatever it be, would phrase it,—“the Lord has delivered the enemy into his hand.”

Nay, but it is only by that part of the meal which is composed of the bread and the wine, that our bodies, (says somebody), are here said to be "refreshed."—True: but the body and the blood are not the less said to be taken: i. e. taken, if into any thing, into our bodies: "verily, (lest any thing like doubt on the subject should be suffered to remain)—"verily and indeed taken." When thus taken, true indeed it is, that it is to the refreshing of our souls, that that part of the chyle, which is extracted from it, is applied. But, as to the verity, with which it must have been taken, the particular application thus made of it, makes not any difference: whatever part of man's person it goes to the refreshment of,—to produce this refreshment, whatever it is, taken it must be:—taken? yes, and digested likewise:—or how can any thing like refreshment be afforded by it?

To make all points not only plain and clear, but moreover smooth and easy,—on this, as on so many other occasions, the word spiritual is at hand. In a carnal, temporal, sense, not exactly true, conceditur: but besides the carnal, temporal source, for this, as for all other words for which it is wanted, there is a spiritual sense: and, if in this spiritual sense the thing be, as it is, true,—then, in this same spiritual sense, it is not only as well as if it were true in the carnal sense, but much better: better, viz. by the amount of the superiority—the undeniable superiority—of things spiritual over things temporal:—not to speak of persons.

So convenient is the use—so admirable the virtue—of the word spiritual. By it whatsoever things are false may at pleasure be made true: false in a carnal—false in a temporal sense—yes, so let them be:—still, in a spiritual sense, they are not the less capable of being true: whereupon, in that purer and superior sense, if there be any convenience in their being true, true they are.

To perform this metamorphosis, you couple the word spiritual, as above, with the word sense. This done, take any proposition that you please, the more absurd the better:—a still more absurd one, than the above cannibal proposition, if—which it will hardly be found to do—the nature of things affords any where a more absurd one.—Proposed by itself, and without that support, which the adjunct in question has in store for every absurdity, the falsity of it is, in the mind of any man in his senses, too glaring to admit of its finding so much as a momentary acceptance. Thus it is with it in its natural sense. To the word sense, add the word spiritual, and now, instead of being absurd and false—false to a degree of palpable absurdity—it requires nothing but a simple assertion to render it true. Have you any such thing in hand as a mind, to subdue,—to soften,—to weaken?—a mind, which you want to convert into a species of wax, ready to be moulded at any time to your purpose, whatsoever that purpose be?—here then is your way to go to work upon it. Take in hand one of these absurd propositions—the more palpably absurd the better—try it upon the man in the first place, without subterfuge: try it upon him in its natural sense. If in that sense you find him swallowing it, so much the better:—but, if you find him giving it back to you immediately, unable or refusing to swallow it,—you then give it to him a second time, wrapped up in the words spiritual sense—a spiritual sense, (tell him) and no other, is the sense in which he is to understand it.

Alas!—the quantity of the good things of this wicked world, which, by men calling themselves spiritual, are every day consuming—would they but content themselves with the consuming of these same good things, in a spiritual sense,—leaving to the growers, and makers, and buyers, the consuming of them in a carnal sense,—how much less would there be to be seen of that pauperism, which, under the covering of prosperity, that glitters at and about the head, is, in the heart of the population, so plainly seen, as well as so severely felt!

Generally speaking, this spiritual sense—alias nonsensical sense—seems to be the opposite or negative of the carnal sense. Thus, for example, in this cannibal case;—viz. eating the body and blood of a man, or of a God, or of both together.—Carnal sense, eating it; spiritual sense, not eating it.

To this interpretation of the word spiritual, as applied to sense, give constancy and consistency, then, in so far as it is understood in this sense, there may be not much harm in it.—For, in that case, forasmuch as there is such a thing as eating the sort of food in question in a spiritual sense, so there will also be such a thing as believing in that same sense: and as, in a spiritual sense, eating is not eating,—so, in a spiritual sense, believing will be not believing.

On this plan, unspeakable will be the benefit both to Faith and to Charity: to Faith, because, on this plan, there is nothing whatsoever but may be believed—believed by all men and without difficulty:—to Charity, because, on this plan, throughout the whole field of divinity, the whole mass of any two men's opinions,—in a word, of all men's opinions,—may, on every imaginable point, be as opposite as possible, and brotherly love not in any the smallest degree lessened by it:—take any proposition whatsoever, A believes it in a carnal or temporal sense, B, and every body else that differs from A, believes it in a spiritual sense. Here then, if, by and with this mode of unity, Faith is satisfied, so still more easily and heartily is Charity: Hope need never quit them, and thus every thing is as it should be.

Question 22.—What is required of them who come to the Lord's Supper?

Answer.—To examine themselves, whether(1) they repent them truly of their former sins(2), stedfastly purposing to lead a new life(3), have a lively faith in God's mercy through Christ(4), with a thankful remembrance of his death(5), and be in charity with all men.

OBSERVATIONS.

Five distinguishable alleged duties, forming so many subjects of examination, are here observable: five duties or obligations, concerning which every child is forced to affirm and declare, that he is persuaded of their having been imposed by the Almighty—imposed upon the child himself, together with all his fellow Christians.

Concerning all these supposed duties, the first question that presents itself as proper to be made, is—in any one of the histories we have of Jesus, what ground is there for any such supposition, as that, in the character of duties to be performed on the occasion of any such ceremony, as that which, having been instituted by the Church of Rome, and retained by the Church of England, is here spoken of,—duties, to this effect, or to any other, were by Jesus meant to be imposed upon any person whatsoever; and in particular upon any person, into whose mouth the declaration, to the effect that has just been seen, has ever been, or is ever destined to be forced?—Answer.—Not any. The ceremony itself, a mere modern invention;—the duties, thus attached to it, a mere fiction;—a fiction, put forth in the teeth of those undisputed and undisputable texts of Scripture, in which nothing that bears the smallest resemblance to it is to be found. In these texts, the persons addressed, no other than the twelve chosen disciples, distinguished by the name of Apostles;—no other disciples, or followers, being present,—or, so much as in the way of any the slightest and most general allusion, spoken of: even to these chosen few the act recommended, of such a nature,—a mere token and pledge of remembrance,—a social act of a purely convivial nature,—as scarcely to be capable of being taken for the subject of a duty. They all eat, they all drank:—thus say two of those three of his four biographers, by whom what passed at that supper is reported. At that same time, he (Jesus himself) eat with them, if Luke is to be believed: consequently, according to the orthodox interpretation, eat and drank along with them his thirteenth part of his own body and his own blood: which doing, he said to them, on that same occasion, according to that same Luke; “This do in remembrance of me.”* A duty, if a duty it can be called, plainly and expressly confined to twelve persons, then living and then present: and, in their instance, no such accessory duties as are here set up—no nor any other accessory duties—added to it;—such being the exact state of the case,—with the acknowledged standard of belief and practice before their eyes, up start a set of men, sixteen centuries after,—and, without deigning to assert, do more than assert—for they pretend to take for granted,—that, upon all that ever professed, or ever shall profess, the religion of Jesus, a whole swarm of duties, viz. the swarm thus confidently delivered, were, on that same occasion, imposed by him.

* Luke xxii. 15. “And he said unto them, With desire I have desired “to eat this passover with you before I suffer: 16. For I say unto you, I “will not any more eat thereof until it be fulfilled in the kingdom of God.” Such being his declared desire, and the means being at hand, and no obstacle at hand, of course that desire was fulfilled.

If, without support from any history, true or false,—and, on the contrary, in the teeth of so many histories, which now are, and then were in every body's hands—all of them recognized, as constituting, in relation to this very subject, the sole standard of belief and practice,—if, under such disadvantages, such palpable misrepresentation has been made—such gross impositions, not only attempted, but, by the arm of coercive power carried into effect with success,—what limits can there be to the impostures, which, with the same support, may with like success have been attempted, on subjects, on which the power of imposture has found no such obstacle to check it?—Tradition—Roman Catholic Tradition—in this word—not to look any further—an indication is given of the sort of matter, in which an answer to this question may be found.

Under all these five heads of examination, and in particular under the first,—suppose however the answer were in the affirmative: on this supposition, various are the observations, which the answer would be apt to suggest, if considered in its several particular parts.

1. This supernatural recipe with what degree of frequency is it expected to be repeated? 2. Suppose it were a week—suppose it but once a month—suppose even the number of doses taken in a year still smaller—Each time,—let the times follow one another ever so quickly,—here is “a new life” undertaken to be led:—such at least is to be, on each occasion, the “stedfast purpose.” But, of any such new life—(whatsoever may be meant by a new life)—what on any occasion, according to the string of intimations thus given, will be the fruit or use?—Each time there is to be “repentance”—each time the repentance is to be “true”—yet, true as it is, each and every time it is to be of no effect: the penitent being, all along, in the same sad case, as if no repentance had taken place. Each time the purpose, how "stedfast" soever it be, is to be broken through, and the condition which the penitent is thereupon to be in, is to be exactly the same as if no such "purpose" had been resolved upon. For, if that purpose be to lead a life without sin, then, suppose the purpose adhered to, of what use would be the new life?—The new life—no:—the old life is on that supposition the only good one:—a new life?—whatsoever of novelty his life had in it, he would, on this supposition, be but so much the worse for it.

Mark well, that all the time this perpetual alternative of sinning and repentance is going on, "lively" is to be the man's "faith in God's mercy:" lively, in other words, his assurance—that upon repentance, forgiveness will each and every time follow. Full of comfort, no doubt, for the time, will this assurance be. For time present, yes:—But on the future, on each such occasion, what, if any, will be, at all times, its tendency, and but too probably its effect? What but to give encouragement—and by encouragement birth—to sin?

In a word—to use a familiar, but not the less apposite, expression—at the end of each such supper, a new score, it appears, is to be considered as commenced; and, at the conclusion of each immediately succeeding one, such new score will, if the view thus given of the effect be a correct one, be considered as rubbed off. In an account of sins, any more than in an account of money, can there be any stronger, or indeed other encouragement to the running up of a fresh score, than the assurance of having it rubbed off at pleasure: rubbed off at any time, and at no other expense than that of a few words of course.

As to contrition, grief, sorrow, penitence, repentance,—whatever be the words employed,—for any such affection, what room does the nature of the case leave in the breast of a man, whose persuasion is—that he is dealing upon such terms? Sin, he may thus at all times have his bellyfull of: only one thing he must not forget, which is—that in some manner or other, between the time of his committing each such sin, and the time of the next supper of this sort that he partakes of, he must “truly repent,” i. e. be sincerely sorry for it.—Take a mouthful of bread and a mouthful of wine—taking care that before they are swallowed, whatsoever sins it has happened to you to commit, since the last preceding mouthful of each was swallowed, are truly repented of,—vanished are all these sins: all these sinful acts are caused not to have happened, and every thing is as it should be. Such is the virtue of this bread, and of this wine:—if not this, then what else is it?

Under or over the Church of Rome, certain Popes used for some time to be selling this sort of licence, (indulgence was in the language of technical theology, its appropriate name): and, in that Church, to a Church-of-England eye, it was of course every thing that was mischievous and abominable. By these Popes it was granted indeed, but in retail only, at so much per sin, and at high prices: and, the higher the prices, the smaller the number of those, in whose instance it could be obtained, and thereby become productive of its mischievous effects. But, if even under the Church of Rome this licensing system was a mischievous one, under the Church of England, how much greater must not be the mischievousness of it? Under the Church of England, at so small a price as that of the Table offering, if any such there be, it is put into every hand that can afford to pay that small price: and the whole mass of sins, which, between supper and supper, a man can see his convenience in committing—the whole mass, be they in spirit and number what they may, are thus included in one and the same indulgence.

Has it not this effect?—Well then, if it has not, no effect has it whatever:—and such, from beginning to end, is the perpetual alternative. Justification,—shadow of justification, the case affords not any: apology, palliation, this is all that can be made or done for it. That, when all is said and done, things may, by a dispensation of God's providence, produced by an act of God's mercy, turn out to be in that same state, in which they would have been, had nothing of this sort been either said or done,—such is the most favourable result, of which, under the guidance of the most prejudiced judgment, the most sanguine imagination can entertain a hope.

And, in that most favourable case, can it really be said to be thus destitute of effect?—Yes: but in no other sense than that, in which, after having, for a length of time, been employed, dose after dose, without success, in the hope of curing some disease, opium may be said to have been destitute of effect. The non-existence of particular effect—viz. of the particular good effect hoped for—is but too true. But, of a general effect—and that a most disastrous one—the existence is at the same time but too true—a prostration of strength—an universal debility—“that prostration of the understanding and will,” by which the constitution is destroyed.*

* And the production of which is among the declared objects of the NATIONAL INSTITUTION, according to the form given to it by the BENCH OF BISHOPS; and in particular of the BISHOP OF LONDON's labours in support of it. See the ensuing Appendix.

[NOTE.—The Author being at a distance from the press, what follows on the subject of the Creed, was by accident omitted to be inserted in its more proper place, which was in p. 16, in which that part of the Catechism is spoken of.

The Apostles' Creed! This name, thus formally and universally applied—applied to a formulary, which, of those, by whom in that character it is forced into the mouths of children, there is not one, by whom any such notion is entertained, as that any one of those immediate disciples of Jesus had any, the smallest share in the formation of it!

Applied?—and by whom?—By the rulers of the English Church—of the Church of England, past and present,—by that Bench of Bishops, whose names stand at the head of an Association, instituted for a set of purposes, of which the first in the order of time as well as of importance, is the causing the whole population to receive the formulary in that character.

An association, of which one main object is—to give currency to a forgery! to continue—and that for ever—to palm upon the rising generation as genuine an already exposed imposture. On the whole Bench sits there so much as a single individual, who will venture to declare, that he believes it not to have been a forgery? that he believes any one of those to have had a hand in it, in whose name it is thus put upon the whole people?

To all those who do not, with a critical eye, pointed to the questions of verity and authenticity, occupy themselves in the searching of the Scriptures, the immediate and sole looked-to evidence of that verity and authenticity, consists in the implied evidence, supposed to be bestowed upon it by those Right Reverend and well-paid witnesses. But here are these same witnesses, continually occupied in giving an attestation of authenticity, to a document, of the spuriousness of which they cannot but be, every one of them, fully conscious. If the religion of Jesus had no better ground to stand upon than this modern evidence, where would be the sort of regard due to it?

To give proofs, or so much as references to proofs, of its being a forgery—a generally exploded forgery—would be a mere waste of labour. Pearson—Bishop Pearson—whose comment on it is regularly included in the list of works, studied by all Candidates for Church of England Ministry, into whose heads any such idea as that of rendering themselves, in an intellectual point of view, in any degree fit for their office, ever happens to find entrance,—Pearson—in styling it the Creed—knew it too well to venture, either in his title page, or any where else, to style it the Apostles' Creed; or so much as, in the way of insinuation, to give it to be understood, that the Apostles had, any of them, any thing to do with it. “The Creed” received in all ages of the Church,” (says he in his Epistle dedicatory): and thus far only did he venture to go beyond the truth, in speaking of it, except by this, viz. “it is (says his Preface) generally taken to comprehend all things necessary to be believed:—the Creed—as if he had never heard of more Creeds than this one: as if that Liturgy, of which it forms a part, did not, lest confusion should not be thick enough—force into men’s mouths two other Creeds—the Nicene and the Athanasian (yes, the Athanasian!) by the side of it.

For the first time—(pity the edition now on the table, though the tenth, does not enable any one to say exactly what that time was)—for the first time—observing what sort of a thing this tissue of dark allusions, taken in its own state, was,—he formed the generous resolution of rendering it intelligible : and in this endeavour, no fewer than four hundred closely printed folio pages, with more of microscopic notes than text, are employed : “ so that every one, when he pronounceth the Creed, may know, “ (says the good Bishop) what he ought to intend, and “ what he is understood to profess, when he so pronounceth it :” so that now, to all those in whose instance to the labour of studying this Exposition, and the faculty of buying or borrowing it, has been added the felicity of understanding it, the text, in so far as the enterprize undertaken by the comment has been successful, has been rendered intelligible.

Creed and Exposition together, of those who but for it would have been damned, how many will have been saved by it ? Of those who, if they had had it, would have been saved, how many will have been damned for want of it ? —those included who will not have been rich enough either to buy or borrow it. When to each of these questions a satisfactory answer has been provided, then it is, that of its worth, a correct estimate, as well as conception, will have been formed.

This, together with both the other Creeds, and together with the spirit and so large a portion besides of the substance of her Liturgy, was by the Church of England received from her Holy Mother : among whose histories, that of the pic-nic formation of this Creed by its putative fathers the Apostles, may be found in their proper places. The equally Established Church of Scotland is wiser and honester than to teach any of these Creeds.

RECAPITULATION.

On recurring to the Observations contained in the preceding pages, the following are the vices which will, it is believed, be found to have been proved upon this formulary, the peccant matter of which is, with a diligence unhappily so successful, injected, by the hand of power, into the breasts of the great majority of the population, at the very first dawn of the reasoning faculty—

I. BAD GRAMMAR. For a passage teaching bad grammar by example, see p. 55.

II. BAD LOGIC; viz.

1. By inculcation of matter plainly useless. See p. 19. to 25.

2. By inculcation of manifest surplusage. See p. 67. 8.

3. By inculcation of matter plainly unintelligible. See p. 6 to 13. 17 to 27. 31. 32.

4. By inculcation of propositions inconsistent with one another. See p. 11. 12. 13.

5. By inculcation of instruction which is either erroneous, or at best useless. See p. 41. 42. 43.

6. By exemplification and consequent inculcation of the art and habit of gratuitous or unfounded assertion, and groundless inference. See p. 28. 29. 30. 38. 39. 40.

7. By inculcation of matter, repugnant to those thirty-nine Articles, to which the whole body of the Clergy—Bishops and Archbishops included—together with all other ruling and otherwise influential persons,—who become partakers of that course of education which is in highest repute, will, upon entrance into that course, after being thus impregnated with the repugnant matter of this formulary, be forced to declare their assent and approbation on record. See p. 29, 30.

8. By inculcation of matter savouring of Popery. See p. 66 to 70.

III. Matter, the tendency of which is—to operate, in various other ways, to the depravation of the INTELLECTUAL part of man's frame, viz.

1. Matter, by which the principle of vicarious obligation is inculcated: i. e. by which children are commanded to believe, that it is in the power of two or three self-appointed persons, by agreeing together, to oblige a young child, in conscience, to pursue to the end of his life, any course of conduct, which, at that time, it may please them to prescribe. See p. 4. 5. 6.

2. Matter, by which the young child is himself forced to utter a rash promise, binding him, during life, to pursue the course of conduct therein and thereby prescribed. See p. 13. 14.

3. Matter, by which the child is initiated in the art and habit of lax interpretation: i. e. of declaring, in relation to the discourse in question, whatever it may be, his persuasion, that such or such was the meaning, intended by the author to be conveyed by it: viz. whatever meaning it may at any time happen to suit the personal purpose of the interpreter so to convey, how wide soever of the import really so intended to be conveyed. See p. 45. 47 to 78.

4. Matter, by which the intellectual part of the child's frame is destined to be debilitated and depraved by groundless and useless terrors. See p. 8 to 11. 53.

IV. Matter, the tendency of which is to operate, in various other ways, to the DEPRAVATION of the MORAL part of man's frame: viz.

1. Matter, in the texture of which Hypocrisy is plainly discernible. See p. 12. 13.
2. Matter, by which lying is inculcated as a duty:—a duty, which the child is forced to declare himself bound to persevere in the performance of. See p. 2. 3. 15. 18. 19. 31. 45. 46. 52.
3. Matter, by which Imposture may be seen to be promoted. See p. 47 to 78.
4. Matter, by which Forgery may be seen to be knowingly uttered. See p. 79. 80.
5. Matter, by which encouragement is given to sin and wickedness in every shape. See p. 75 to 78.

V. Matter, the tendency of which is to operate, in an immediate way, to the injury of the SENSITIVE part of man's frame.

Matter, by which groundless and useless terrors are infused, as above.

Such,—on the grounds all along referred to, and plainly brought to view,—is the character and tendency herein imputed to this Church of England formulary, with the matter of which every English breast is, by the government at large, under the guidance of the ruling part of the Clergy, designed and endeavoured to be impregnated: imputed, and with what justice, let any person in whose eyes either the morals or the understanding of the whole people of England are objects worthy of regard, and who at the same time has courage to look in the face truth, however unwelcome, and opposed by prejudices ever so inveterate lay his hand upon his heart and pronounce.

Ill will towards men,—towards all men, in whatsoever rank in life situated, with reference to him in whose breast the corrupt affection is evident—equal superior or inferior,—this, taking the whole together, may now be added to the list of those fruits, the seeds of which are so thickly sown by this machine. Ill will and, from ill will, oppression and persecution :—oppression the chronical disease, persecution, the acute : oppression, universal, habitual, and sluggish ; persecution particular and casual ; according as opportunity happens to be favourable.

The genealogy is in this wise : From imaginary grace, imaginary mystery, imaginary sacrament, come imaginary blasphemy, imaginary sin ; from imaginary sin, comes real antipathy ; and from men, in ruling and otherwise influential situations, real oppression and real persecution, on that one part ; real suffering on the other :—for, by the imaginary sin, is produced, in the ruling breast, along with the antipathy, a pretence for gratifying it.

GOOD MEN, GOOD SUBJECTS, and GOOD CHRISTIANS—such, and in these very words, are the goods, which,—in giving the explanation of his truly admirable, and beyond doubt ultimately and highly useful, system of intellectual machinery,—over and over again,—and always, by means of a set of instruments, of which this formulary is the earliest and beyond comparison the most extensively employed article,—over and over again :—and, as here, in placard letters—Dr. Bell undertakes for the manufacturing.

Good men and Good Christians ! and by means of a thorough impregnation with the matter of this formulary !—Yes : if, of Good men and Good Christians, the characteristic qualities are—hypocrisy, lying, imposture, forgery, sin and vice in every other shape.

Good subjects ? Yes : if the goodness of the subjection be in proportion to the abjectness of it: for, of abjectness in the subjection of the subject many to the dominion of the ruling few, can any more conclusive exemplification be exhibited, than that which is afforded, by the practice thus persevered in, of the swallowing of matter, thus poisonous to the whole moral texture of man's frame?—Good Subjects?—Yes: if the Good Subject be a character purposely selected to form a contrast with that of the Good Citizen: a description, by which—though now so studiously marked out for infamy as descriptive of an enlisted partizan of anarchy—no Frenchman, in the most despotic æra of the monarchy, ever scrupled to designate himself.

GOOD MEN, GOOD SUBJECTS, and GOOD CHRISTIANS!
—Yes: let us not only wish, but hope, and even believe—that in and from the mind-turning mill, invented and worked by Dr. Bell, all these good articles will in conclusion be manufactured and issued out for use. Manufactured?—but by what instrument?—By this formulary?
—No:—but, if at all, in spite of it.

The greater the efficiency of this admirable instrument—the more capable in its own nature of being, in all its efficiency, applied to the best uses—the greater in the breast of a true lover of mankind will be the regret at seeing it, in the very first application made of it, employed in thus thickly sowing in the mind, at the earliest dawn of reason, the seeds of depravity in every shape.

For consolation one hope remains:—and this is—that, after having, with whatsoever success, been thus employed in the introduction of the disease, it may, in a maturer state of the faculties—such is the nature of the instrument—be, still more effectually as well as more worthily, rendered conducive to the extirpation of it.

APPENDIX. No. I.

REMARKS

ON THE OBJECT OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND RELIGION, AS AVOWED BY THE BISHOP OF LONDON.

A PROSTRATION of intellectual strength—a confirmed mental debility—in the review just given of the Church of England Catechism,—such, in conclusion, was the result brought to view, as being, how mischievous soever, the least mischievous effect, which, naturally speaking, it can reasonably be expected to have, when it has any, upon the generality of the minds of the children, into whose mouths it is forced.

While the pen was tracing some such words as the above, far enough was the penman from any such expectation, as that of seeing his conception expressed, in a manner so much more pointed and particular, and at the same time so completely apposite, in a Discourse which, after having passed through a pair of Episcopal lips, has, under the name of “A Charge to the Clergy of London,” (his diocese) been printed for and published under the Right Reverend author’s official name.

Expressed?—but in what character?—in the character of a disorder—an epidemic disease—of which the existence ought to be deplored, and, if possible, the continuance prevented?—No:—but in the character of a consummation devoutly to be wished, and to the acceleration of which the utmost exertions of the official instructors of the people ought to be directed: directed by the instrumentality of this same Catechism, through the medium of the National Society Schools.

Prostration of the understanding and the will—these are the words—the very words—therein employed, as expressive of the state of mind, regarded by the Right Reverend author, as being “indispensable to proficiency in Christian instruction.” (p. 16.)

To present a picture of a set of men, Unitarians by name, of whom some are Deists, others Atheists, (p. 14), and the rest (including, as it should seem, all Christians, whose profession varies in any degree from that of the Church of England), persons “on whom the charge of infidelity attaches in a certain degree,” (p. 15)—has been the business of a few preceding pages. In the 17th he speaks of them as being “generally” men of some education, whose thoughts “have been little employed on the subject of religion; or who, loving rather to question than learn, have approached the oracles of divine truth without that humble docility, that prostration of the understanding and will, which are indispensable to proficiency in Christian instruction.”

Prostration of the understanding and will? Yes, says the reader perhaps—but before what? “before those oracles of divine truth” just before-mentioned—viz. the Holy Scriptures. The limitation is a candid one—and but for what follows, might be not unreasonably taken for a just one: it is however by the reader, and not by the writer, that it is applied. It is rather that sort of limitation, which, to save himself from the imputation of applying a Roman Catholic spirit to Protestant doctrines, it were to be wished he had made, rather than what he has actually made.

A mind, in which the understanding and the will are prostrate—no matter before what—is a mind in the lowest state of debility, which, without correspondent debility of body, can have place. Not more than the corporeal, can the mental part of man's frame be at once in a state of weakness, and in a state of strength. If to "question" any thing that is set before it is regarded as a sin, if to "learn," without questioning, any thing that is set before it is regarded as a duty,—set before it, with the customary threats in the back ground, the Catholic Catechism, it is a Catholic mind;—set before it the Koran, it is a Mahometan mind.

Oh yes? Let God, in his own person, appear,—and, whether in speech or writing, deliver his oracles,—"prostration, of the understanding and will," would then indeed be as reasonable as it would be universal.

But to no man, in these our times, does God make any such appearance; nor, if on this point either Jesus* or John† are to be believed, ever did he. If, therefore, on any occasion, to any thing, by the name of "the oracles of divine truth" any such prostration as a prostration of the understanding and will is performed, it is to man, and not to God, that it is performed.

Meantime the oracles, which, under the name of the oracles of divine truth, his Lordship has had in view,—and towards which, on pain of forfeiture of "proficiency in

* John, vi. 46. Not that any man hath seen the Father, save he which is of God, he hath seen the Father.

† 1 John, iv. 12. No man hath seen God at any time.

“Christian instruction,” he calls for “that humble docility,” and that “prostration of the understanding and will,” which are indispensable to that same proficiency,—what are they?—The contents of the Bible, or of any part of it?—Not they indeed. They are what cometh out of the mouth of the Church of England Clergy:—viz. of that part of it, whose happy lot it is to be subject to his rule. (p. 23.) Ask his Lordship else.

After speaking of the National Society Schools, in all of which this Catechism is forced into all the scholars’ mouths, and on this, as on so many other occasions, giving his flock to understand—that, all who do not profess what the Church of England professes, should by all those who do, be regarded as enemies, (p. 22)—he exhorts them to be persevering in giving direction to these Schools; (p. 23)—and, in case of their being so, as it is his trust they will, looks forward with exultation to the blessed effects, which he is assured will follow. “Your instructions and exhortations, received with humble docility—(humble docility once more, for nothing less will serve)—(humble docility for ever!)—received with humble docility, as the oracles of God, by congregations who revere in your persons the dispensers of divine truth, will no longer be wasted on a barren soil.”

Here then in this concluding passage, whatsoever veil either his Lordship’s prudence, or the candour or partiality of some friendly hand, may, at an earlier period, have endeavoured, as above, to spread over his principles and his plans, over his wishes and his endeavours, is thrown aside, (thanks to the warmth produced by the inspiration of his own eloquence!); and here, in conclusion, may be seen, as the avowed object of his Lordship’s endeavours, the establishment of a state of things, which, when described in plain English, is neither more nor less (for, what else is it?) than a system of slavery;—of intellectual, and thence, as a necessary consequence, of moral and corporeal slavery,—in which, his Lordship, and his Right Reverend Co-adjutors and Reverend Sub-adjutors, are to be tyrants and sub-tyrants,—all other, i. e. all profane Church of Englandists, in the character of subjects, and all non-Church of Englandists in the character of “enemies,” slaves:—and, of this tyranny, the National Society's Schools—i. e. the Bench of Bishops' Schools—are to be the instruments in one sense,—and this Catechism, together with the rest of that body of formularies of which it makes a part—but above, because before all, this Catechism—is to be an instrument, in another sense. And whether, for such a design, it would be easy for the wit of man, to frame or devise a fitter or better-adapted instrument,—the reader has, for some time, been in a way to judge.

Not to speak of God himself,—who, as already above observed, is altogether out of the question,—let not any one imagine, that, if manifested towards the Holy Scriptures, or towards any object soever, other than the body of men in whose governance he acts so conspicuous a part,—the prostration of understanding and will, thus called for, would satisfy the holy zeal of this ruler of the Established Church,—that “Established Church,” “so justly considered (in p. 1) as the bulwark of pure religion, the pillar of divine truth.”

The “Scripture”—is it the Scripture, that, in his Lordship's declared conception, is to be taken for the object of this “prostration?” No: nor so much as for the standard of belief:—the standard of belief—the only practical and effectual standard of belief, and thence (p. 17) of conduct, is the “interpretation” put upon Scripture. This “interpretation” is the interpretation put upon it (p. 19) by certain “laws.” these laws are “established laws.”

What established laws?—To this question, in his Lordship's view, is it possible there can have been any other than one answer,—viz. the laws established by the Established Church:—"the Established Church," the above declared "bulwark of pure religion," the above declared "pillar of divine truth:"—that Established Church, whose "doctrines" alone are "sound," whose opinions and conduct alone are pure—pure (p. 1) from the "guilt of schism."

"Laws of interpretation" then there are, and these (according to his Lordship) "established laws:" and, "to all who refuse their assent to any material doctrine deducible from Scripture" . . . by these laws, "the charge of infidelity" (according to his Lordship, p. 15) attaches in a certain degree; and "great (continues he) must be the force of that prejudice, which can overlook the inconsistency of arbitrarily imposing a meaning, unwarranted by the usages of language, on a book to which all parties appeal as the standard and rule of faith."—Appealing to the Scripture as the standard and rule of faith—is this then capable of exempting any party from the charge of infidelity?—Not it indeed, says his Lordship, as we now see.

On the other hand—those, whose "instructions" as well as "exhortations" (on condition (p. 23) of their forcing into the mouths of children this Catechism with its accompaniments) ought to be "received with humble docility as the oracles of God, by congregations who revere in their persons the dispensers of divine truth"—to any such person can any such "charge" as that of "infidelity," (p. 15), "of prejudice," of "inconsistency," of arbitrary imposition, "of arbitrarily imposing a meaning unwarranted by the usages of language, on that book" (viz. the Scripture) "to which all parties appeal as the standard and rule

“of faith?”—No, verily. After this, let any one say, whether it be to the book,—that book, by the appeal to which no other effect is produced than the keeping alive those contests of contending parties, to all of which, all but one, the charge of infidelity attaches,—let any one say, whether it be to any such dead letter, or to the instruction, of those holy and living persons, whose instructions ought to be “received as oracles of God,” that in his Lordship’s view,—if they would save themselves from the charge of “infidelity,” and from the predicament of being regarded and treated by this disciple of the meek Jesus as “enemies,” and by the reason as well as piety of the people, “with contempt and horror,”—men must, to all practical and effectual purposes, look for the standard and rule of faith, and of that “conduct” which is to be “directed” by that faith. (p. 67.)

The Scriptures?—admitting them, for decorum sake, to have been, while page 16 was perusing, “the oracles of divine truth,” these were at best but dead oracles. The oracles, which, or rather who, while page 23 was perusing, were viewed in spirit as “the oracles of God,”—the oracles, in whose “persons the dispensers of divine truth” were to be “revered,”—these—(as, by those, upon whose substance they are fattened, is but too well felt)—are living Oracles.

From his Lordship’s own declaration, as evidenced by his Lordship’s own words, thus much is plain; viz. that, by him,—in addressing himself to the Clergy, of the diocese of which he is Bishop,—to the Clergy, his own subordinates,—their instructions being received with humble docility as the oracles of God is mentioned—not only as an event which would be the eventual result, of their taking, and persevering (as per p. 23) in, the “direction” of the schools in question,—the schools in which the first thing taught is this Catechism,—but as being a highly desirable event :—an event, desirable, not only to the world in general, but to them in particular, and that to such a degree as to serve them as a reward for the performance of the function thus recommended to their care.

In the character, in which he thus expresses his wishes, and uses his endeavours, to cause these instructions to be received,—did he—in the first place in the composing, in the second place in the preaching, in the third and last place in the revising for the press, this most deliberate, and perseveringly studied and considered, however inconsiderate, discourse—did he, or did he not, regard them as fit and entitled to be so considered—considered by all to whose ears or eyes it should ever happen to them to come? if no, then what is this but exhortation to, and conscious participation in, a system of imposture? If yes, then observe whether, according to his Lordship's views—those views in which, in and by this his published Charge, he is labouring, as far as may be in his power, to cause all men to be partakers—any regard which, at the suggestion of prudence, it may happen to him to have professed towards those dead “oracles of divine truth,” be in effect any thing better than a mockery.

That the privilege of having their “instructions” “received as the oracles of God,” was meant by him to be considered as one that ought to be, any more than as one that actually is, confined to his own particular subordinates in the body of the Church of England Clergy, is an interpretation, which,—it may be averred without fear of contradiction,—no friend of his Lordship's would wish to see put upon these or any other words of his.—No :—in this same privilege, what he meant to give us to understand was, that the whole body of that Clergy should be sharers:—sharers?—yes: and, saving the regard due to their respective situations in the hierarchy, equal sharers.

But, according to that other position of his Lordship's, (p. 15), which has been already brought to view, there are certain "established laws of interpretation from Scripture:" laws, not only established, but, in such sort, and so firmly established, that to disobedience to them—viz. to the act of "all who refuse their assent to any material doctrine deducible from Scripture" by those same laws, "the charge of infidelity" "in a certain degree" "attaches." These "laws of interpretation" "established" then as they are, where else can it have been his meaning that we should look for them, than in those instructions, which, almost in the same breath, and no more than eight pages after, are thus spoken of by him as "the oracles of God."

But if the instructions—be they what they may—which, from time to time, are delivered, by a set of men, whose doctrines,—as often as, according to what they represent as being the established laws of interpretation, (meaning interpretation of Scripture) they take upon themselves to put an interpretation upon any passage of Scripture,—are, as it is declared by his Lordship they ought to be, received as the oracles of God,—where is the practical use or application—where the real influence—that any one can discover, and shew, to be left to Scripture?—To the eyes (suppose) of all others who look upon it, Scripture delivers this as that "material doctrine:" pursuing, as they declare, the "established laws of interpretation"—the laws confirmed by themselves, and acted under, after having been established by their predecessors,—deducing from Scripture by those same laws all their "instructions,"—the doctrine they deliver is the direct opposite one. But "to “all who refuse their assent to any material doctrine so deducible, the charge of infidelity” (according to his Lordship, p. 15) attaches: by these same established laws of interpretation a material doctrine is thereupon actually deduced: and by the supposition, (no very improbable one), by all whose misfortune it is to be dissenters from the Church of England, assent to this same doctrine is refused. What, according to his Lordship, with his established laws of interpretation, is the consequence?—What, but that these unfortunate persons, little as they imagine it, are—all in the lump—ipso facto infidels. In such a state of things—under such an authority—what particle of effectual authority can any one shew to be still left to Scripture?—How can it, otherwise than subject to their good pleasure, serve on any occasion for the “direction” either of belief or “conduct?” In this dead oracle may, perhaps, be seen one “standard of truth”—one source of direction:—but in those living “oracles of God” is at all times to be seen another, from which—let the dead one say what it will—every man’s belief and conduct is, on pain of judgment of infidelity, to take its direction, as often as they please.

In such a state of things, those same dead oracles of God, of what sort of deportment and affection are they—can they be—the object, other than outward grimace and secret mockery? while all the real authority—all the power—all the influence—is the property of these living ones!

Meantime these “established laws of interpretation,” what are they?—where are they to be found? Not to speak of the professors of Christianity at large—not to speak of the ruling members of established Churches in general—all of whom by these his Lordship’s decrees stand already condemned and put aside as infidels—established by the Church of England itself or herself, are there any such laws?—If so it be, that his Lordship knows of any, which, established as he declares them to be—are universally, or though it were but generally, avowed, appealed to, and acted upon—the cause of Christianity, would it not have been somewhat better served by an enumeration given of them, or though it were but a reference made to them, than by a discourse, in which, on the occasion, and under the mask of an Episcopal Charge to the Clergy of one diocese, the whole body of the people—such of them as, while occupied in exercising upon the most important of all subjects that reasonable faculty which God has given to them, are not able to agree with one another, what to believe and what to disbelieve, are thus excited to regard one another with contempt and horror?

Of any such established laws of interpretation,—laws established in the form of written or statute law,—the text, it is believed, would not be very easy to be found. But of the laws of interpretation,—established, in so far as, by practice, laws that have never been framed, may be said to be established,—laws established, in the form of unwritten, alias Common Law,—of laws of interpretation established in this way, and in particular by that Church, to which we are indebted for this Catechism,—a set, in which the whole body will be found comprized, may, though not in tenor (for of the laws of Common Law it is the characteristic property not to have any tenor) be in purport stated with sufficient accuracy.

One of them may be styled—the law of virtual insertion:—a law, in virtue of which, to the whole body of holy writ may be added—any body of doctrine, which, any number of centuries ago, in the most tyrannical times, happened to suit, or to be thought to suit, the present and temporal interests of the tyrants of these times: and moreover, any other body or bodies of doctrine, which may happen to suit the like interest, of his Lordship's above-mentioned living "oracles of God," the present, and in all future times.

Another is—the law of omission, or virtual expunction: in virtue of which,—by so simple an expedient as that of mere saying any thing about the matter—or in one word, silence,—any doctrine of Scripture, which is found to stand in the way of these same interests may be got rid of, and caused to be as if it never had been.

A third—the third—is, (for beyond this the form of interpretation "can no further go") is—the rule of virtual substitution: "to make which third, they join the former "two." Provided with these three rules as with so many thunderbolts, the living Oracles of God may now be seen to be pretty well equipped for laying "prostrate," and casting down into the abyss of just "contempt and horror," all such presumptuous men, who, "loving rather to question than to learn," might otherwise be found troublesome.

As to exemplifications,—for exemplifications of the rule of virtual insertion, after the indications, which, in the review here made of the Catechism, have just been given, no person need, now at least, be at a loss, who either remembers, or is able to read that same Catechism. From beginning to end that formulary may be stated as being in some sort an exemplification of this commodious rule: but, should any more particularly limited exemplification be wanted, they may be found in the Recapitulation, under the head of gratuitous insertion and groundless inference.

2. As to virtual omission,—for the exemplification of this one of the Church of England's laws of spiritual interpretation, as by the Holy Mother Church, so by the no less Holy Daughter, all those texts are marked of course, the observance of which would, to the living Oracles of God, be in any shape matter of inconvenience.

In particular, all those precepts of Jesus, from which, (supposing any regard paid to them,) they being in a special manner addressed, to the persons chosen among his disciples, to serve in the character of Apostles,—any reduction in the articles of opulence, power, or dignity, would be apt to ensue, to these lineally descended spiritual children and successors of those same Apostles.

In relation to this subject, in the history of Jesus, as delivered by his biographers the Evangelists, several very untoward passages (it must be acknowledged) are to be found: passages, by which, but for this expedient, no small degree of perplexity might have been produced.

One, for example—one very untoward passage, is,—and that most unfortunately, repeated by three out of these four inspired biographers,*—the passage, in which, to him who

* Luke xviii. 18 to 30.

Matt. xxx. 16 to 28.

Mark x. 17 to 31.

24. And when Jesus saw that he was very sorrowful, he said, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God.

25. For it is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26. And they that heard it said, Who then can be saved?

27. And he said, The things which are impossible with men are pos-

22. But when the young man heard that saying, he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions.

23. Then said Jesus unto his disciples, verily I say unto you, that a rich man shall hardly enter into the kingdom of heaven.

24. And again I say unto you, it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom

22. And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved: for he had great possessions.

23. And Jesus looked round about, and said unto his disciples, How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God.

24. And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answered again, and saith unto them, Children, how hard is it for them that trust in riches to “trusts in riches,” (not to go further—though the text does seem to go somewhat further) salvation is by Jesus himself declared to be—though not exactly, yet something very near to exactly—“impossible.” In all of them, “it is easier (says he) for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.” In one of them alone is to be found the explanation, in which all the softening, any where given to the severity of the sentence, is contained—“How hard is it for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God!” and, unfortunately, even in this account, the softening, instead of closing the discourse, is followed by the repetition of the sentence, clothed as above in all its sible with God.

28. Then Peter said, Lo, we have left all and followed thee.

of God.

25. When his disciples heard it, they were exceedingly amazed, saying, who then can be saved?

26. But Jesus beheld them, and said unto them, With men this is impossible, but with God all things are possible.

27. Then answered Peter, and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all, and followed thee.

enter into the kingdom of God.

25. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle, than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God.

26. And they were astonished out of measure, saying among themselves, who then can be saved?

27. And Jesus looking upon them, saith, With men it is impossible, but not with God: for with God all things are possible.

28. Then Peter began to say unto him, Lo, we have left all and have followed thee.

rigour.—Well then—among them that trust in riches—among them, at any rate, no more will be seen entering into the kingdom of God, than there will have been seen camels going through the eye of a needle.

Call it an hyperbole—assume the utmost licence that distress of argument can gasp for—still, if by this be meant any thing, what is meant by it will be—that, to him who trusts in riches, admission into the kingdom of heaven will be more difficult, than if he did not trust in riches.

But, by trusting in riches, what is it that can have here been meant?—trusting in their procuring to the possessor the necessities and conveniences of this life? trusting in money, for its procuring money's worth? money's worth in all its shapes?—This is a trust, which, to avoid putting in riches is not, to any man, who ever lived in a country in which money was in use, so much as possible. Not to believe that riches have this power, is to deny the truth of a multitude of facts, the truth of which is every day proved to him by the evidence of his senses. What then, if any, is the sense, that must be put upon this passage? What but this—viz. that, in the first place, it is not in the nature of riches, to render it more easy for the possessor himself to enter into the kingdom of heaven, than it would be if he did not possess them; in the next place, that as little is it in their nature to render it easier to him to persuade others, into that course of life, which will cause them to enter into that same kingdom, than it would be to him if he did not possess them. To speak more shortly—on the occasion here in question, by trusting in riches is meant, if any thing be meant, relying upon them in the character of instruments of salvation,—of salvation, either to the possessor himself, or to those on whom, to that end, his influence exerts itself.

But, the clergy of an Established Church—unless it be by their riches, in conjunction with their powers and their dignities, (of which presently) by what are they distinguished from the Clergy of a Non-Established Church? and, among Established Churches, unless by the riches, the powers, and the dignities possessed by some among them, by what are the Clergy of the Church of England distinguished from the Clergy of the Church of Scotland? As often as it happens to any of them to speak of the security of the Church, what else is it that they mean, but the preserving, without diminution, to those among them that are rich their riches,—to those among them who have power their power,—to those among them who have dignities their dignities,—to those among them, who have any of those good things in prospect, their prospects?—When it happens to any of them to speak of the downfall—the destruction—the ruin—the subversion—of the Church, or of the Ecclesiastical establishment,—of which the subversion of the religion of Jesus, if it be not the self-same event, is of course the immediate consequence,—what is it that they mean, unless it be the divesting of their riches, such of them as have riches,—of their power, such of them as have power,—of their dignities, such of them as have dignities,—of their prospects, such of them as have prospects. Now if this be not trusting in riches, in what other shape, by what other tokens, can trust in riches be made manifest?

Three times—not to say oftener—did the spirit of contentious ambition break out among the Apostles: as often was it repressed by Jesus, in almost the same words. One would be first or greatest—another would be first or greatest—and what to all of them was his answer? No one of you shall be greater than any other: let your contention be—not who shall possess most power, but who shall render most service.*

* FIRST TIME.

Mark ix. 33, 34, 35.

Luke ix. 46, 47.

Matt. xviii. 1, 2, 3, 4.

33. And he came to Capernaum: and being in the house, he asked them what was it that they disputed among themselves by the way?

34. But they held their peace: for by the way they had disputed among themselves who should be greatest.

35. And he sat down and called the twelve, and saith unto them, if any man shall desire to be first, the same shall be last of all, and servant of all.

46. Then there arose a reasoning amongst them which of them should be greatest.

47. And Jesus perceiving the thought of their heart, took a child and set him by him.

1. At the same time came the disciples unto Jesus, saying, who is the greatest in the kingdom of heaven?

2. And Jesus called a little child unto him, and set him in the midst of them.

3. And said, Verily I say unto you, unless you be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven.

4. Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven.

SECOND TIME.

Matt. xx. 20 to 28.

Mark x. 35 to 45.

20. Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children, with her sons, worshipping him, and desiring a certain thing of him.

21. And he said unto her, What wilt thou?—She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons, may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom....

35. And James and John, the sons of Zebedee, came unto him, saying, Master, we would that thou shouldst do for us whatsoever we shall desire.

36. And he said, What would ye that I should do for you?

37. They said unto him, Grant unto us that we may sit, one on thy

On these texts, then,—meaning always in the virtual expunction of them—or rather in an interpretation put upon them by the rule of contraries—may be seen founded the whole hierarchy.—Prebends, Canons, Deans—these wallow in riches—contend which shall first be made a Bishop—and neither render, nor so much as pretend to render—so much as the least particle of service. Bishops and Archbishops—these wallow in a compost made of riches, power, and factitious dignity—assume the style of royalty

24. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren. right hand, and the other on thy left hand, in thy glory. . . .

25. But Jesus called them unto him, and said, ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. 41. And when the ten heard it, they began to be much displeased with James and John.

26. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister. 42. But Jesus called them to him, and saith unto them, ye know that they which are accounted to rule over the gentiles exercise lordship over them; and their great ones exercise authority upon them.

27. And whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant. 43. But so shall it not be among you; but whosoever will be great among you shall be your minister:

28. Even as the son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many. 44. And whosoever of you will be the chiefest shall be servant of all.

45. For even the son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

THIRD TIME.

Luke xxii. 24, 25, 26.

24. And there was also a strife among them which of them should be accounted the greatest.

25. And he said unto them, the kings of the Gentiles exercise lordship over them; and they that exercise authority upon them are called benefactors.

26. But ye shall not be so; but he that is greatest among you, let him be as the younger; and he that is chief, as he that doth serve.

—call their houses, palaces—call their arm-chairs, thrones—take Dives, as if in bravado, for their pattern—clothe themselves—yea and their very footmen also—“in purple and fine linen”—strut about and look big—call aloud for “humble docility”—declare their “contempt and horror” for every person who presumes to demur to the demand—talk of the service they are rendering—and this is the way in which they render it.

On this same occasion, to the three already mentioned established laws of interpretation, one other might perhaps have been added, viz. the rule of contraries: Minister ye unto every one, say the texts; lord it over no one. Let us lord it over every one, says the interpretation; let us minister to none.

Of virtual substitution, no further exemplification need be looked for, than the avowed, and pertinaciously defended practice of one of the Bible-circulating Societies: that association of the wise in their own generation, by whom such care is taken, in as far as depends upon themselves, not to suffer the word of God to go abroad, without the word of man to speak for it.

Along with the dead “Oracles of divine truth,” (p. 16), lest a poison so dangerous should be without its antidote—care is, by these true sons of the Church, thus taken, to administer a corrective, made up about two centuries and a half ago; a corrective of which this Catechism composes either the most essential portion, or the whole. Under the mask of an accompaniment, this corrective, it has been shewn already, is in effect and virtue—in every thing but the name, a substitute.

Into any company, not instructed in the deaf and dumb language—or even into any company that has been so instructed, send a deaf and dumb man that has not been so instructed, to what real use, but that of empty ceremony could be the presence of this unfortunate person? Were he a king?—Were he an emperor—where would be his power or influence?—To what purpose, then, can any such concomitancy be insisted upon, unless it be one or other of these two:—viz. that which the priests of Apollo at Delphi had, when those living Oracles of that God took upon themselves the trouble of declaring and expounding the will of the dead stone ones,—or that which the rulers of Jerusalem had when they placarded Jesus, in the character of the king of the Jews?

While as yet she remained in the womb of her holy mother, the prudence of the Church of England refused to suffer a poison so dangerous as that of the Scriptures to circulate in the body politic on any terms. Now that, having eaten her way out of the body of that parent, of whose person she wants so little of being the express image, she turns upon her to bite, and even, if possible, to devour the womb in which she was conceived,—unable to annihilate the dreaded poison, she does that which answers her purpose less invidiously, and scarcely less effectually—she amalgamates with it her own antidotes.

Suppose now the Holy Mother (nor is this supposition at present altogether without foundation in fact)—suppose her, at any time, to circulate the pretended poison without any pretended antidote—which will then be the honestest—the Mother or the Daughter?

True it is, that all this about Churches is but allegory: equally true, that all profane allegory is but trumpery or imposture. But that Church, that self-styled “excellent” Church—in which every deficiency in merit is so amply made up by self-praise—what existence has it or she, but an allegorical one? and of an allegorical entity who can speak but in allegory?

If, stript of that power, which cannot be exercised but to be abused,—the well-fed children of this world, who, to save themselves from being seen to be what they are, take shelter—sometimes in the image of an old building, sometimes in the image of a beautiful woman, were, so far as concerns the mammon of unrighteousness—all of them that now feed upon it—left in the plight in which they are,—take away the idol, what would there be to be reviled, to be ruined, to be violated—to be overthrown, to be subverted, to be destroyed?—But for allegory, where would be her fathers, her sons, her children—her pillars, her buttresses, her ornaments?—Where would be the most efficient as well as splendid portions, of the matter, of which all her defences are composed?

To return to his Lordship of London—Speaking of the Bell Instruction Schools (p. 23), which, so far as established, are under the patronage of the National Society,—and in which, part,—and that the most efficiently administered part,—of the matter of instruction, is composed of the matter of this Catechism.—“ In proportion to the success of your “ attention to this important point, the course of your “ ministry” (says he, p. 23, in that passage of which something has been said already) “ will become smooth and “ easy. Your parishioners, from their infancy initiated
 “ in the principles, and inured to the practice, of pure “ Christianity, will crowd with pious affection to the “ altars of their Mother Church; and will have to regard “ the pretences and artifices of corrupt or illiterate in“ structors with indifference or disdain. Your instructions
 “ and exhortations” (continues he) “ received with humble
 “ docility as the oracles of God, by congregations who re“ vere in your persons the dispensers of divine truth, will “ no longer be wasted on a barren soil: and you will find “ unspeakable consolation” (concludes this Charge, p. 24)
 “ in contemplating the efficacy of your labours in the ad“ vancement and maintenance of those high interests, “ which have been confided by your Redeemer, as a pre“ cious deposit, to your especial protection and care.”

“ Smooth and easy?” Yes, my good Lord of yesterday, worthy successor of the Lord of t’other day,—in whose eyes, as well as your’s, (p. 1), “schism” was “guilt,” in whose eyes “the Established Church,” (more than half the opulence of which is obtained and received on false pretences—on the pretence of doing duty, accompanied with the determination to do none)—in whose eyes this nest and nursery of deliberate and lucrative falsehood was, as we stand assured by you, “the follower of divine truth,”—and “whose endeavour” (p. 2) was to replace ecclesiastical discipline on its “ancient footing”—smooth and easy, as your Lordship says, will be, if they perform the task you are thus recommending to them, this course of theirs—“the course of their ministry.”—Still more smooth and easy—no less smooth and easy than those your Lordship’s periods—will be the course of all those among them (that is to say, the great multitude) who will give themselves no such trouble.

Smooth and easy this course?—Strange indeed if it were not so. If not to them, to whom else should it be so? What other course is there that can be so? and how should it be otherwise?

The Minister receives his 20*l.* a year, his 200*l.* a year, or his 2,000*l.* a year, for of this sort is the equality observed in the apportionment of their hire, among the labourers in this vineyard—his 2,000*l.* a year for reading, or undertaking to read, with a determination not to read, his half of the Liturgy,—with or without a Sermon, which, if it be not an already printed one, but of his own composing, is so much the worse for being so. The Parish Clerk receives his 5*l.* or his 10*l.* a year for reading his half of the same formulary. The members of the congregation—such of them as can read and are so disposed—read the same string of words that the Clerk reads,—and these Amateurs perform gratis.

What the Minister reads, might just as well be read by the Clerk: what the Minister and the Clerk read, might just as well be read by any of the National Society's Scholars, as soon as their course of instruction in its schools is finished, or before: Doing this—i. e. reading this—(for what else is there that they are, any of them, under any obligation of doing?) Doing this, or doing neither this nor any thing else, “the Established Church is”—i. e. the Ministers of the Established Church are, according to the system of poetico-architectural divinity, “the pillars of divine truth.... But, the more pillars the edifice has, the more firmly it will be established.” Instead of troubling so many grown Gentlemen, whose time might in other ways be employed so much more agreeably to themselves,—instead of employing them to do this drudgery, why not turn it over at once to the scholars thus recommended to their care? So many scholars, who, having passed through one of these schools, would be thus employed, so many more pillars would the Church have for its supports. Of all the things, which the Reverend persons in question are, as such, under any obligation of performing—of all the things which they ever do perform, except it be here and there in the character of a work of supererogation, and receiving extraordinary laud for it,—is there a single one, which might not be done precisely as well—supposing their school-time well and successfully employed—by these “babes and sucklings.” And, in this case, supposing the manner of reading “smooth and easy,” is there any thing else that could fail to be so?

A zealous and diligent (every thing but a humble) servant of God—labouring, in season and out of season, to rescue souls from the jaws of Satan,—contending against a host of opposing adversaries, in the shape of “ corrupt or “ illiterate instructors,” full (p. 23) of “ pretences and artifices,”—struggling under loads of difficulties—difficulties raised (p. 18) by “ the joint machinations of infidels “ and sectaries, assisted by the indiscretion of shortsighted piety,”—difficulties almost too great to be surmounted by human powers, but for such support as they are thus to make for themselves,—is not this the sort of image, which,—in the character of a faithful sketch of the situation of a Church of England Clergyman on the one hand—and, on the other hand, of the character of a parish, peopled by a Church of England laity,—it is his Lordship’s object, in this part of his discourse, to set before men’s eyes, and engage them to accept of?—To accept of such a picture as a true one!—as if that which is clear to every one else could be otherwise than clear to the author and publisher of this Charge, viz. that, except by the merest accident, in perhaps one parish out of fifty or a hundred—every thing that savours of labour—of contention, of difficulty—every thing of this sort,—not only if regarded as existing in any considerable quantity, but if regarded as exemplified in any the minutest particle,—is purely imaginary and fictitious. In the recital either of the periodical or the occasional formularies—in the saying of his part in the Morning or Evening Common Prayer—with or without the additional twenty minutes labour of reading his sermon—in the performing of his part in the burying, christening, marrying, or married-woman-churching service,—what opposition—what difficulty in any shape—does or can any Church of England Minister ever experience?—In all this reading out of a book, what is there that, by any such ill-assorted cause as he brings to view, or by any other cause whatsoever, could, in any, the smallest degree, be rendered smoother or easier than it is? If every child without exception, that lives to the schooling age, were educated in these schools, could the performance of this reading task be by any possibility, in any degree, rendered smoother or easier to the Minister, or the Curate, by whom it is performed?

By any such consummation,—seriously as, on so many other accounts, it is to be wished for,—how is it that, towards the removal of any of the asperities or difficulties thus alluded to—the only asperities or difficulties which (unless it be now and then the getting in of their tithes) the holy persons in question stand exposed to—any the smallest advance would be made? In all these formularies, where is the paragraph that would be cancelled by such a consummation? where is the paragraph that would be so much as shortened by it?

No :—so far is the thus assigned cause from being capable of contributing any thing towards the production of its assigned effect—viz. the diminution of the only sort of labour, which, unless by mere accident, and in the character of a work of supererogation, is ever performed, or so much as pretended to be performed,—the result of any such supposed increase in the piety and populousness of Church of England congregations, would be the exactly opposite effect :—increase, not diminution, of all labour really performed by a Church of England Ministry. The greater the number of those who, in the language of the Howleys and Chateaubriants “crowd with pious affection to the altar of their Mother Church”—in plain English, after the sermon, repair to the Communion Table, to join in taking what is called the sacrament,—the greater the number of the individuals, to each of whom his portion of the flesh-producing bread, and afterwards another of the blood-producing wine, would have to be distributed : yea, and moreover the greater the number of times, during which the appointed ghostly formulary, short as it happily is, would have to be repeated. At the time of the millennium thus prophesied, suppose the number of communicants to be double what it is at present, would not this part of the duty—the part thus, as above, particularized—be doubled? Then, in the only quality of it, viz. length, which is susceptible of care and difficulty, instead of being made twice as “smooth and easy,” would it not be twice as rough and difficult?

In the article of surplice fees, true it is, that, from the conversion of all dissenters into zealous and assiduous Church-of-Englandists, some advantage might accrue to some of the holy persons to whom this Charge was preached: viz. to such of them as, in the character of Curates, or in their bargains with their respective Curates, take to themselves the whole, or a part, of that mass of the mammon of unrighteousness, from which the hand of a Clergyman of the Church of Scotland would recoil with disdain—or, in his Lordship’s language, with “contempt and horror.” But, howsoever, by any such accession, the course which his Lordship speaks of—“the course of the Ministry” (p. 23) of his Reverend auditors—would be rendered pleasant, and in that sense “smooth,”—it would still,—in respect of the only sort of labour—and, in that sense, of difficulty—which is attached to it in the character of a duty,—be rendered—not the more “easy,” but the more difficult.

When,—stript of the veil of mystery and imposture in which, according to custom, they are bedizened,—they are presented in the garb of simple truth, such, it has been seen, is the substance of these episcopal effusions, with which the understandings of mankind, on the supposition of their having been reduced to a state sufficiently “prostrate” viz. by the help of the old instrument of confusion—the Catechism, with its et ceteras,—and the Articles and their et ceteras,—though before the invention, and consequently without the help of the new instrument of instruction,—are endeavoured to be impregnated.

In one way, then, and one way only,—viz. the way above hinted at,—could the universally wished for multiplication, of schools and well-reading scholars, be rendered in any degree conducive, to the causing the “course of the “ministry” in question to be smoother and easier than it is. This is—the placing the scholars in the reading desks, to read the Ministers’ part in the Liturgy, and in the pulpits to read the sermons; or, instead of these modern effusions, which at best are liable to be tainted with the “corruption” (p. 23) of the times, those venerable, and, by His said Lordship, in this very Charge, bepraised and lauded productions of good Queen Elizabeth’s days—the Homilies,*—to which these modern effusions, (Oracles of God as they are, p. 23) are but inadequate, and not altogether undangerous, substitutes. This source of relief has been already proposed, and it will be seen to have the rarely exemplified merit of being a sure one.

What Church of England layman is there, whose ears

* P. 21, in a Note. “The several HOMILIES on Salvation, on Faith, “and on Good Works, are earnestly recommended to the repeated personal and serious consideration of all Clergymen, as admirable specimens and models of this wise and salutary caution: viz. In touching on “doctrines which are liable to perversion, to preclude” (says the text, p. 21) “the possibility of misconception by clear and precise statements, and distinct explanations and cautions: and to frame your expressions with such scrupulous accuracy, that they may neither be wrested “by the unstable, nor misunderstood by the ignorant and unwary.”

have not been wounded with the groans of the Reverend Ministers of God's word, labouring under a load of duty, composed of services to be performed every seventh day, of the length of an hour, an hour and a half, or two hours each, once, twice, thrice, or—(for in one instance out of a hundred or two, such things have been known, incredible as it may seem) even as many as four times—nay, as five times, with rides or even walks between the sittings and the standings, and no more than six days out of the seven for repose! Call in but those little ones, to each of whom the labour might by division be reduced to any degree of minuteness,—do but this, and, for the relief of the, at present so heavily-worked and heavily-groaning labourers in that spiritual vineyard, a seventh day of repose might be added to the six. Of the “course of the ministry,” the smoothness and easiness would, by this relief, be raised to its maximum. The interest of the Church—that is, of the paid part of it—would thus in the highest degree be served: and the interest of the Church—that is, of the paying part of it, in what way would it be injured or disserved?—Let him who thinks he knows of any such way declare it.

The more seriously and thoroughly this proposal is considered, the more clearly it will be seen—that, except the novelty of it, the case affords no argument, capable of being set in opposition to it.

As to the above-acknowledged works of supererogation,—the performance of which in here and there an instance, is not meant to be denied—but which are not, nor in their nature, to any good purpose, ever can be, works of perfect obligation, and as such caused to be exacted to any thing like a sufficient extent,—they might and would, after the proposed arrangement, continue to be performed as at present; and the same motives, which, in the present state of things, suffice for the production of them, would, in the proposed state of things, exercise themselves with equal efficiency in the production of the same effect.

Such is the incontestable result and state of things, in so far as use is made of a once-for-all composed and for ever-established formulary:—by any person who is able to read out in such manner as to be intelligible, every thing that, in the situation in question, any man can be made to do, is capable of being done: the art of reading—in that one art the one thing needful is concentrated: every thing else, to which any such name as art, or science, or knowledge, is wont to be applied, is needless and superfluous: all money employed in the supposed or pretended purchase of the fruit of any such accomplishment, so much money bestowed in waste: in waste, even if any security were to be had for the possession of what is thus paid for:—a supposition, which, in this present state of things, is notoriously an imaginary one.

Nay, but is there no difference between good reading and bad reading?—O yes—difference, much more than is to be wished. But when all forms—in both senses and pronunciations of the word—all form and forms have been gone through, all degrees taken, all examinations passed, what reason is there for expecting, that, on the side of the ordained Minister, as compared with the Bell-taught and well-taught school-boy, any advantage will, in this particular, be found?—The Holy Ghost, who, at the word of command, so regularly passes from the hand of the Bishop into the head of the new Minister—with power to keep out of hell or let drop into it whom he pleases*—this

* Extract from that part of the Church of England Liturgy, which is intituled, The Form and Manner of ordaining of Priests. “The Bishop, Ghost, with all his holiness, is he a Reading-master?* If he be, it is more than ever he professed to be : and, from Mr. Thelwall, by whom the teaching of this art is professed,—and whose professions in this way are performed, it is said, to the satisfaction of those who trust in them,—the art would be much more likely to be learnt. Among all the arts, and all the sciences, which, in the whole course of the career,—the literary, scientific, and spiritual career,—from the petty form at Eton or Westminster, up to the examining Chaplain's study,—the younger son, of a family that has a living in its gift, has been dragged through, and is supposed to be impregnated with,—is the art of reading—(meaning always the art of reading with propriety—the art which Mr. Thelwall teaches)—is any such art to be found?—Well then, in this art, the ordained and full-ripe Minister, with the Holy Ghost in his head, has never been instructed at all. The unfledged school-boy has been (suppose) instructed in it :—which of the two stands the best chance of being found well instructed in it?

So much for the smoothness and easiness, thus professed

“ with the Priests present, shall lay their hands severally upon the head of “ every one that receiveth the order of Priesthood; the Receivers humbly “ kneeling upon their knees, and the Bishop saying,

“ Receive the Holy Ghost for the Office and Work of a Priest in the “ Church of God, now committed unto thee by the imposition of our “ hands.”—“ Whose sins thou dost forgive, they are forgiven; and whose “ sins thou dost retain, they are retained.”

* A Reading-master? No :—a Speaking-master? Yes. So say the Methodist, the Quaker, yea, and the Minister of that Scottish Church, equally established with, and so much better established than, the English? A Speaking-master, all these men, how different soever in other things, do concur in beholding in their Holy Ghost. And by whom, and from whence shall this their pretension be contested with success? Not by the Church of Englandists, either from observation or from Scripture.

to be looked for, in the character of a new and hitherto unexperienced blessing, from the new schools.

Meantime, is it not a lamentable spectacle—would it not be a lamented, if it were not so perpetual an one—to see the ruler of a Christian Church, in the face of a whole congregation, to every individual of which it is known that there is not a syllable of — in what he is thus saying,—thus, with a continual appeal to the Almighty in his mouth,—holding up, in a solemn and deliberate discourse, an image,—of which, to his own perfect knowledge, as well as that of every body else, the very reverse is the —? exhibiting it in audible signs, and thus, face to face, to his Church,—preaching thus to his Church, in one sense of the word Church, viz. to the wolfish part of the community in question; and then, in visible and permanent signs, to his Church in the other sense, viz. to the sheepish part?

But, such is the effect of that — to —, which, through the medium of this Catechism, a Church-of-Englandist sucks in with his earliest breath: and which, by Subscription after Subscription, and oath after oath, at his entrance into the University, and thereafter at every graduation, is confirmed. A few pages back may be seen the Catechism, and here may be seen one of its fruits.—Sowing thistle-seed, can you expect figs, or any thing better than thistles?

Over a Church thus constituted, no wonder if, in the view, and by the confession of those who are so well paid for propping it, there should be impending dangers.—“We are indeed exposed to dangers,” (says his Lordship, p. 13), “and those of no ordinary magnitude.”—“We”—viz. his reverend subordinates, to whom this Charge was preached: for, Church being, according to the convenience of the person and the moment incressantly used, sometimes in one, sometimes in another of two opposite senses, viz. for the designation of one or other, sometimes even of both, of two opposite classes, viz. the rulers and the ruled—the plunderers and the plundered—hence it is, that, to every one who wishes to know what it is he means, interpretation is, on each occasion, necessary.

Exposed to dangers these rulers?—O yes:—so far as concerns the possession of their rule, strange it would be, if it were otherwise.—“Those dangers of no ordinary magnitude?”—not quite so clear, what the extraordinary magnitude may be which is thus hinted at.

The Church in danger?—O yes: if by the Church be meant either its system, in regard to doctrine, or its system, in regard to discipline, its system which gives a man from 20*l.* to 20,000*l.* a year for professing to believe what he does not believe, and turns him out to starve for confessing himself to believe what he does believe.—Constituted as it is, without danger it never can be, until it is without existence.

The cause—the cause of the danger—about this alone, between one eye and another, if they be in any degree observant ones, can there be any difference?

“The opposite extremes of defect, or excess of religious belief and feeling,” (says his Lordship thereupon) “prevail among us, in a variety of modifications and degrees, to an alarming extent. The partizans of these several errors,” (continues he), “disjoined in all other respects, by discordancy of principle, sentiment, and ultimate views, are not the less disposed to unite in offensive alliance against the object of their common aversion, the Established Church.”

Thus far his Lordship. Still the old story—always the same portion of truth—always the same portion of fiction—always the same inconsistency.

The Established Church the object of common aversion, to the partizans, of all the opinions, thus, as of course, lumped together by the name of “errors?”—O yes: true enough:—and how should it be otherwise? A nuisance of any kind, how should it be otherwise than an object of aversion to any one to whom it is a nuisance?

Those to whom this Church is an object of this common aversion, disposed to unite in offensive alliance against it?—In this may be seen the fiction, and that not only a stale, but even a self-refuted calumny.

Self-refuted? Yes, and in this same paragraph. Discordant one with another are all these different classes—discordant, as he himself observes, and as they necessarily are, or they would not be what they are, and are thus stated as being—“discordant in principle, sentiment, and “ultimate views.”

Such being the discordance—and that a discordance which has had place from the beginning, from the time when they respectively began to be what they are,—and which, in the nature of the case, is destined to continue to the end, i.e. to the time when they shall respectively cease to be in existence,—where then is the union, or so much as the disposition to an union? where is the alliance?

In this fiction of an union and alliance may be seen the exemplification of one of those vulgar fallacies,—expressive tokens of a bad cause, and of the consciousness of its badness,—those fallacies, in the use of which these hirelings never tire: a fallacy, having for its object the kindling by a false imputation a flame of resentment,—and thus, besides affording a gratification to the dissocial appetite, creating a diversion, by which men's minds may be led astray from the original and proper object of consideration.

By alliance and union, the design is that the reader shall understand concert, and from this concert infer sympathy : and that thus these several persuasions,—amongst which the differences and disagreement is as wide as possible,—these several persuasions, and the men by whom they are respectively entertained, shall be confounded under one common and indiscriminating term of reproach and odium.

Atheists, Deists, Unitarian Christians, Independents, Baptists, Quakers, Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, Whitfieldian Methodists, Catholics, not to mention any others,—by all these several names, so many persuasions in respect of religious matters are expressed—all of them as decidedly distinct from one another, as is that of the regular members of the Established Church from any of them. Of all these, to the multitude of Church of Englandists, of whom the majority of the population are still composed, (not to speak of Jews, who, unbelievers as they are, are on these occasions out of the question,—and, as they write not much, either to attack the establishment or to defend themselves, are comparatively inobnoxious), the Atheists are the most obnoxious, next to them the Deists, next to them the Unitarian Christians,—next to them, if not before them, the Catholics. Now, of this fallacy, and the misrepresentation couched in it, what is the object? To cause, as far as possible, all these different persuasions to be taken for one and the same, in the hope that, whatsoever aversion may, in any mind, happen to be entertained towards the least obnoxious, may, by the blessing of God, be thus refined and improved, into the hatred entertained towards the most obnoxious :—that the Unitarian Chris- tian, for example, may be taken for a Deist in disguise, and as such hated ;—that so the Unitarian Christian and the Deist, thus tied together, may be taken, both of them, for Atheists in disguise, and as such execrated.

“ Union ? alliance ?” to what imaginable end should any such junction take place ?—To give any increased effect to “ the common aversion towards the Established Church ? ”—to the production of any such effect, no such union or alliance is necessary : by no such union or alliance could any such effect be promoted.

In the whole system may be seen,—and if not seen already, shall, by every eye that has courage to endure the sight, be, ere long, seen,—one vast mass of corruption, of the existence of which, no small number of its own rulers have, of late days, shewn themselves in no inconsiderable degree sensible. From the whole together, there exists not that human being in the kingdom (to go no further) that is not, in a more or less direct way, a sufferer. Of those mischiefs, which, to his own observation and feelings, happen to be most obvious, this or that individual,—to which soever of those persuasions it may happen to him to belong,—gives, upon occasion, indication of this or that exemplification. But, to perform this useful office, what need has any such person, or any one person whatsoever, to join with any other ? Assuredly with no one person of any one of all these persuasions, or any persuasion, has the matter of these pages been concerted.

So much for fictions :—now for realities.

Of these dangers,—the reality of which is not meant to be here contested, but on the contrary is meant to be subscribed to,—real sources, three in number, may without much difficulty be descried :—three sources, of no one of which any indication could indeed be reasonably expected from any such Right Reverend hand :—viz. the doctrine and discipline of the Church itself;—the view taken of it by the thinking part of those who have not yet separated from it;—and the mode of defence employed—and therein the sort of design manifested—the temper displayed, and the sort of language used—by its hired and worldlily-interested advocates.

Three distinguishable enough sources of danger; but the grand source of sources, the source from which all others flow—the source not only of danger but of destruction—sure and inevitable destruction—may be seen in itself—in its very essence: in its own original sin, for which no means of redemption were, or were meant to be, or are or ever can be, provided.

1. In its formularies, of which this Catechism—the most extended in its application, and the most operative in its effect, is a specimen:—a specimen, to which all its other formularies are well matched.

2. In its 39 Articles, to which,—with an ever unpunishable, and even unprovable, mendacity,—all, who in that Church engage to apply and enforce the precepts and instructions of Jesus, are so needlessly and uselessly, without the shadow of a warrant from Jesus, at once hired and forced, to profess an assent, recorded under their hands.*

* Increasing to any required amount the quantity of real guilt, in the hope of doing away the appearance of it, with asseverations as vehement as were ever employed by Saint Peter to obtain credence for his denials of his Master, they will protest and protest, that there is not, in the whole mass of that substitute to the Bible, one word they do not believe. Of the credence due to any such declaration, would you form a judgment? Carry your eye over the mass, if your patience will serve you so far—note with Paley the multitude—not forgetting the extent—of the propositions contained in it—note the essential and utterly indispellable obscurity of the subjects themselves—note the obscurity of the manner in which they are handled

3. In its setting up, in defiance of the most express commands of that Jesus whom it professes to serve—in its setting up one class, of these pretended teachers of that religion, to exercise dominion over the rest, and at the same time to take, in the seat of temporal legislation that ruling part, for which their utter and universal incompetence is effectually manifested, by a prudential and almost universal silence: while the needlessness of any such anti-christian practice, is all along demonstrated by the example of that equally Established Church, in which all useful regulations are as strictly and universally obeyed and conformed to, as they are manifestly trampled upon by the Rome-begotten and Rome-resembling Church.

4. In the plain proof, which, to every eye that could endure to look at it, has all along been afforded—that, of the object looked to in the continuance given, along with as much as could, with worldly profit, be preserved of the Romish doctrine, to as much as could, with like profit, be preserved of the Romish discipline, neither the present nor handled—note the position and character of the age in which it was put together—learn and note the characters of the individuals under whom, and the individuals by whom, it was put together—note the vengeance, denounced and executed, upon all, by whom any such love, as that which, in his Lordship's eyes, (p. 16), is so hateful—the “love rather to question than learn”—was presumed to be manifested in relation to it—note the looseness, attached to the style of that generation, and even of so many less immature generations by which it has been succeeded—join with Paley in pronouncing unmendacious assent to be in such circumstances impossible; and then, instead of recommending the abolition of the obligation to declare assent, join, if you can, with that defender of fashionable Christianity, and preacher of loose morality and corrupt government, in recommending perseverance in the prescription and practice of the mendacity,—on condition of substituting in idea, to the declaration subscribed to, a totally different one, invented by himself, and cloathed in vague generalities for the purpose.

the future well-being of the subject many ever formed a part: nor any thing, so much as the service, thereby rendered in appearance to the Monarchy, in reality to the private, personal, exclusive, and thereby sinister interest of the Monarch of that day, in conjunction with his terror-struck and ever prostrate and prostitute instruments—the other members of the unseen and invisible, but not less severely felt, corporation of the ruling few.—Afforded? and by what?—By all the particulars, by which the discipline of the Church of England is distinguished from that which is common to all non-established Churches,—particulars, by which, even among established Churches, it is, with few exceptions, not less disadvantageously distinguished from the Church of Scotland:—afforded—1. by the monstrous inequality of the allotted salaries; (as if, upon being made an Archbishop, a man's stomach grew some hundred times as large as that of a Priest),—2. by the abundance of sine-cure salaries, allotted where there exists not so much as the pretence of service,—3. by the multitude of Pluralities, for no one of which can so much as the shadow of a justification be pleaded, on any other supposition than that the same person is constantly existing and serving at the same moment in divers distant places,—4. by the establishment of so vast a mass of remuneration, in a state of utter independency on service,—undeniable as it is, that it is only in so far as it is dependent on service, that service can reasonably be looked for as the fruit of it:—abominations all of them unknown not only in all Non-established Churches, but in the equally Established Church on the other side of the Tweed.

5. In the proof afforded—that,—under a system of unvarying and everlasting formularies, the matter of which is, in respect of the task of utterance, divided between a functionary called a Parish Minister and a functionary called a Parish Clerk,—every penny in the way of pay, over and above that which suffices to engage the service of the lowest-paid Clerk, has from first to last been worse than simply thrown away ;—and that, by the taxes, imposed to supply the matter of this profusion, that oppression has been produced, the continuance of which is a scandal to the age, and that popular odium, which, in so far as it is pointed against the persons of individuals, who neither have it in their power to contribute to the remedying the abuse, nor take upon themselves to defend it, is misapplied and unjust,—but which, in so far as directed against the system, can never be sufficiently strenuous, so long as any particle of the mischief continues in existence.

6. In the mode, in which these pretended instructors are fastened upon the people who are supposed to be instructed by them, and that upon such terms as afford no relief in the case of the supposed instructor's becoming, or being from the first, what in half the parishes of the kingdom he always is, a nullity, or what in so many of them he is—a nuisance. The money, which, on pretence of the instruction, is exacted, the sole real object of regard ; and that a marketable one :—human beings—the souls, in whose instance the difference between eternal felicity and eternal torment is supposed to depend upon the choice,—not having, so much as in appearance, any the least part in it, nor being so much as thought of, or even pretended to be thought of. The money, if not always the sole, always the main object : the duty or service (for by the courtesy of England such it is called) for which it is given, at the utmost but an accessory :—an accessory,—and that, by all parties, regarded and spoken of, in the character of an incumbrance. Of the direct ratio of the quantity of pay, of the inverse ratio of the quantity of service, is composed the known and universally acknowledged measure of value in a benefice : meaning of that inferior sort, which is here in question:—a benefice, of which it is the hard lot to be incumbered—in name and appearance at least—with the care and charge of the troublesome and worthless articles, called Souls.*

Seats sold like cattle at a fair—Seats—or as, to strengthen the phrase, it is so frequently said—constituents, meaning their suffrages—formed, on a well-known occasion, to a quondam Westminster Scholar, then at that time a Representative of the University of Oxford, the subject of a declamation, in the character of Speaker of the House of Commons: as if corruption were the more mischievous for being open and notorious. What, were such a thesis given to him, would this same orator find to say of souls—immortal souls—sold after the same similitude? For, souls—are they not as truly sold by Messrs. Skinner and Dyke, as ever constituents were, or were meant to be, by Lord Clancarty to Lord Castlereagh? and this, under and by virtue of the constitution, of a Church, of which the Right

* In the Scottish Church, for the most part, true it is that this one incongruity has place. But—such, in that Church, is the organization of the judicial branch of the Ecclesiastical establishment, as to render it plainly impracticable for any Minister who is unfit for the office to continue in it, and therefore as plainly not worth his while to enter into it: and, forasmuch as, where the faculty of choosing the instructor is shared amongst all who share in the benefit of the instruction, the possibility of unfitness on the one part is not excluded, and that of adverse dissent on the other part is let in, the mischief, whatever under that Church it may be, which stands attached to the case where the choice is in the hands of a single person, receives some compensation from the exclusion thereby put upon such dissent, and from those services (viz. superintendence of Schools, and of Poores' Funds) which have no place in a Non-Established Church, a most ample one,—thence it is that, protected by custom and not heavily condemned by experience, the incongruity continues without any considerable complaint. But, under Church of Englandism, the mischief displays itself in all its force: it has neither compensation nor palliative.

Honourable and learned Gentleman, and another Right Honourable and learned Oxonian, his colleague, are in every way such zealous supporters, as well as listed advocates.

Not that, under this part of the Constitution, there appears any clear reason for supposing that, upon the whole, in consequence of this sort of arrangement, souls are, in any the smallest degree, worse served, than they would be if no such thing were ever in existence. But why? only because where descent has such strong motives for choosing ill, and next to none for choosing well, purchase or chance will not choose worse. To form a true judgment of the mischief, ask of a Methodist, of a Baptist, of a Unitarian, of any other of the “guilty” sort of persons called “Schismatics,” (p. 1), what would be his feelings, were the pulpit of his Meeting to become an object of sale, as a Church-of-England pulpit is; and, if any person, weak enough to become a purchaser, could ever be found, how many of the seats beneath it would have occupants?

Upon the Lay part of the Official Establishment (Parliament included) corruption is continually charged, and too surely not without cause. But, were it as corrupt, as by those whose complaints against it are loudest, it is said to be, it would be purity itself, in comparison of the Ecclesiastical. Where would Buonaparte have been at this moment, if, like half the beneficed Clergy,—half the army, half the navy, half the officers of the revenue had been regularly paid for doing nothing?—It is only in the religious part of the Establishment, that neglect of duty—wilful, constant, predetermined neglect of duty—and with it obtainment of money on false pretences—is, by authority of the legislature, and of that Constitution, which, on these and so many other such accounts, can never be enough lauded,—sanctioned and established. That, for which, if done upon a small scale, and without a gown upon his back, a man would be condemned to hard labour on board the Hulks,—that same fraud, wearing on his back a gown, in which for that sole purpose he has clothed himself, he practises—not only without danger, but without shame.

Polluted by imaginary blood, swallowed at an imaginary altar, a layman,—ere he can be admitted to serve in the character of a public functionary, in this or that line of non-ecclesiastical duty,—is required by law to make, upon that same altar, a sacrifice of his sincerity to the Moloch of the Church of England. But, besides that, in sacrificing his cock to Æsculapius, Socrates did not declare his belief concerning the number of persons of which Æsculapius was composed,—the sacrifice which, under the dominion of former blindness, law was forced to require, a mixture of fear and shame keeps government from exacting: and thus, for a great part, the Non-Ecclesiastical part of the establishment remains uncontaminated by a pollution, from which the Ecclesiastical part cannot, without agony, behold it free.

To that part of the Laity,—to which, by the harvest it yields, misrule in all its shapes is, in some way or other, rendered a source of profit, and thence an object of proportionable affection—reform, in all its shapes, an object, though not of “contempt,” of “horror,” equal to the utmost which it has been or can be the endeavour of his Lordship to inspire,—what is it that renders the Ecclesiastical branch of the establishment an object of so much inward affection and outward reverence?—What? but that in that part of the Establishment, they behold sanctified, and by sanctification protected, abuses so much beyond any, of the establishment of which, in their own branch, they durst suffer themselves to entertain so much as a ray of hope.—Sinecures, Pluralities, Sale or

Grant of Reversions—Pay out of all proportion with service—pay without any service—pay without so much as pretence of service—factitious dignity, without merit and without use—shares in the sovereignty, without so much as the pretence of independence—all protected not only from reformation but reproach :—all these abominations not only justified but sanctified.

The Ecclesiastical Establishment—including the Bench of Bishops in the Upper House of Parliament—is necessary to the existence of the Constitution. In this proposition we behold a fundamental axiom or postulate. Obedience, passive and active, to the will of the Monarch, as signified or not signified by the Minister,—or, in default of signification, as guessed at by observations taken of his countenance or of the other signs of the times—obedience on the one part, without so much as trouble of command on the other—is the universal and incontestably constant habit of that holy Bench. Obsequiousness, thus constant and universal, is the fruit and conclusive evidence of equally constant corruption : obsequiousness to corruptive influence on the one part, exertion of it on the other. Therefore constant corruption is a vital and indispensable part of the Constitution of this country. In the series of these propositions behold the argument, so congenial to the understandings, and so dear to the hearts, of the parties to the Grand Alliance : the alliance discovered by Warburton between Church and State.*

* Some thirty years ago, or thereabouts, was published by Dr. Watson, then and still Bishop of Llandaff, a pamphlet, in the form of a letter, to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which, in the character of a specific for this disease, abolition of Translations is recommended : meaning Translations from less opulent to more opulent Bishopricks.—With about as fair a promise,

In the confirmation given in England to the Romish system of Episcopacy, what was the end? the end, not only pursued, but declared to be in view? Was it the establishing of Religion?—of the religion of that Jesus, by whom all inequality among the teachers of his religion was so pointedly and repeatedly forbidden?—No; but the establishing of Monarchy: of that form of government, to the establishment of which the sacrifice thus made of the religion of Jesus was, by the Royal adage, No Bishop no King, declared to be found necessary.—Declared—and with what truth? In Scotland is George less effectually King than in England? Yet still has the cry of “No Bishop no King” been reckoned, deemed, and taken—and still will it continue to be deemed and taken—a sufficient warrant for this rebellion against the King of Heaven. Reckoned? and by whom?—by the most holy among the Saints: and among them by non-receivers of the Holy Ghost, not less than by receivers.

“By their fruits ye shall know them.” With a pencil, furnished by holy writ, are thus pourtrayed the characters of the two Churches.

Turn to those documents, by which the fruits of the two Ecclesiastical Establishments in Great Britain are displayed in so plain a shape, and in such lively colours. Criminal offences in a year—in England, so many; in Scotland, so many. Allowance made for difference of population. Under CHURCH OF ENGLANDISM more than ten times as many as under CHURCH OF SCOTLANDISM!*

With all its vices, even CATHOLICISM yields to CHURCH

mise, might abolition of Translations from Homer and Virgil have been recommended. The remedy might have some effect, if no Bishop had either family or friend,—or any mode of being served or gratified, by Monarch or Minister, other than by a better Bishoprick.

* H. of Commons Returns of Committals, No. 45, 12 Feb. 1812: No. 84, 26 Feb. 1812: No. 240, 22 May, 1812.

OF ENGLANDISM, in its crime-producing virtue. Even in IRELAND,—where four-fifths of the population are under the CHURCH OF ROME,—the Criminal Calendar is not much more loaded, than it is in ENGLAND under the CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Translating, for his Lordship's accommodation, the simple truth into that language, in which his Lordship's eloquence is most at home,—the leprosy of the Mother has cleaved to the Daughter, and in this latter generation, greater is the number of the spots in which it has displayed itself.

To complete the picture of the Daughter,—for the present at least, another picture may suffice.

Who is the good shepherd?—need it be answered?—need it be so much as asked?—He who can say—(John, x. 14.) “I know my sheep, and am known of mine.”

In the Statistical View of Scotland, published by Sir John Sinclair,—of every parish in that kingdom, in number near 900, a description is given by its Minister, and he a constantly resident one. Of late, even of the parishes of Ireland, a like account has been begun to be published, and that an official or demi-official one. In the case of England,—with that challenge, now for more than five-and-twenty years past staring every body in the face,—the utter impracticability of obtaining any such account,—notwithstanding the unavoidable disgrace and reproach, attendant on such impotence,—stands demonstrated. As to the cause, it may be fully seen in those House of Commons Returns,—on the subject of Non-Residence, and other subjects connected with it,—for which the public is indebted to the zeal and industry of the Earl of Harrowby.—What a man knows nothing of, he cannot give an account of.

2. Such as above is the first of the above-mentioned sources, of the danger,—which may be seen, and has been seen, hanging over the head of the Church of England: meaning the opulence, the power, the dignities, and the idleness—of the set of men who, under the notion of their inculcating the precepts of Jesus, are thus employed in trampling on them.

Of these causes the second may be seen in the sentiments and affections, which, in the breasts of the members of the Established Church itself,—meaning the subject many, who, in these their self-appointed, or worse than self-appointed instructors, are, instead of servants, made, in direct contradiction to, and open contempt of, the ordinances of the God worshipped alike by all of them, made to find rulers, entertained in relation to those same rulers.

Whatsoever causes of aversion, actual or legitimate, attach upon the situation of Non-Church of Englandists, of all persuasions as above,—these, when compared with those causes of aversion, which attach upon such of the subject many, whose indigenous weakness, or adoptive weakness, or sinister interest, or interest-begotten prejudice, or indolence, or indifference, continue upon the list of members of that same holy Church, will be seen to be much more considerable. True it is, that to those strangers, as well as to these members, the same extortion, with the exception of such surplice fees as are avoidable, is inevitably extended. True it is, that from those strangers, as well as from Church of Englandists, is extracted their proportion of the annually extorted 100,000*l.*, added to Church benefices,—without any the smallest security, exacted for the rendering of that service, on pretence of which, worthless as it is, the dole is given: and without any the smallest benefit in any shape, other than that which would accrue from the distribution of it among an equal number of helpless mendicants.—But, by these strangers, from the Church-of-England Ministers, or their lordly rulers, no service, in any shape is looked for:—to those strangers, no service, in any shape, is ever by those same functionaries promised or professed to be rendered:—by those strangers, no expectation of good, in any shape, from that quarter, being entertained,—no disappointment is experienced: whereas, with here and there a casual exception, by the Lay Members of the Church, whatsoever expectation of good is expected, has disappointment for its consequence.

3. Remains, as and for the third cause or source of danger to this same holy Church, that which consists in the style and character of those its defences, of which this Charge may be set at the head.

To “proficiency in Christian instruction”—meaning always to the sort of proficiency of which the interpretation has already been given—viz. to that proficiency which (p. 23) consists in the belief that “instructions and exhortations,” delivered to the people by men standing in subjection to the author of this Charge, are the Oracles of God—true, indeed, it may well be, that “humble docility,”—that “prostration of the understanding and the will,”—(pp. 16 and 23)—yes, the humblest docility—yes, the most abject prostration—are “indispensable.”

Sooner or later, however, what may peradventure happen, is—that, of a posture thus awkward, the understandings of men may, in a proportion more or less considerable, grow tired. If, by any cause whatsoever, a change so salutary should ever be accomplished,—then it is, that the spectacle thus exhibited—the open pulling off the mask—the unpalliated insult,—thus offered, to all whose docility may dispose them to meet it and prostrate themselves before it,—cannot surely be altogether without its influence.

By imputing any such Romanism to any Church of Englandist at present dead or living, what disservice could any enemy of this Church have done to it, comparable to that which this protector and friend is doing to it?—Imputed by an enemy, it would have been pronounced mere calumny, and vehemently disavowed. Here it is in black and white : and,—by one whose attachment to the system can no more be doubted of, than the power and opulence he draws from it,—avowed, and over and over again proclaimed.

To such real sources of danger, coupled with such a professed defence,—would it be of any use—would it afford any material addition in the way of instruction—to add the mention, of any of those other danger-increasing defences, with which, at present, by the inscrutable decrees of the Almighty, the Church is encompassed?—of a Dr. Burgess, Bishop of St. David's, who,—emulating the anatomist of antiquity, by whom the difficulty experienced, in finding living human bodies for dissection, was lamented as a proof of the hardness of the times,—expresses a regret, the sincerity of which cannot be doubted of, at the thoughts of having it no longer in his power, to consign to forfeiture of livelihood, with etceteras,—followed, in case of constancy, by a three years' imprisonment,—those, whose optics fail them, in their endeavours to behold in the one God as many God-persons as he does.*

Would it be of use to add the mention?—Oh yes—to save labour, take the composition—of a Dr. Kipling, Dean of Peterborough, who—to make a Priest of the Church of Rome hold his pen and tongue, and thus promote (as it seems to him) the interest of the Church of England, assures him in black and white, that if he will not, by a certain day, prove what, according to this his statement, is unprovable, he will prosecute him, and have him punished, for saying of the Church of England that it or she is a new one: punished, for saying of the daughter that she is younger than the mother from whom she sprung, and whom, in the worst of her features, to the best of her power, she has ever strived to imitate.*

* See the Bishop's late miscellaneous pamphlet, (title not at this moment accessible) in which he performs one more "Demonstration of the Trinity,"—together with other achievements.

“Conventional symbol of union, (p. 14). Union of unbelievers, as a regular and ostensible party, (p. 14). Fac-

* The following is a paragraph copied from the Monthly Magazine for July, 1815, p. 580. In no subsequent number has any place been found, in which the document has been pronounced a forgery.

“The following letter was sent lately by Dr. Kipling, Dean of Peterborough, to the Rev. John Lingard, a Roman Catholic Priest:”—

Rev. Sir,

In your strictures on Professor Marsh's Comparative View, occur these words once, “new Church of England,” and these oftener, “the modern Church of England;” that for both these expressions you are amenable to a court of justice, I infer from this extract, “seditious words in derogation of the established Religion, are indictable as tending to a breach of the peace; as where a person said, Your religion is a new religion; preaching is but prating, and prayer once a day is more edifying.” Hawk. 7. Besides, the Church by law established in this country is so inseparably interwoven with the British Constitution, that whatever is calumny upon the former must be calumny upon the latter. If, however, you shall assure me, in the course of a few days, that within a reasonable time you will publish a vindication of this defamatory language, I will defer to prosecute you, not only until sufficient time has been granted you for that purpose, but also till an opportunity has been allowed the public to peruse my reply to it. By a vindication is here meant, complete proof of this position, that the structure of the Church of England, and the materials of which it is composed, are new and modern. Should it appear to be the general opinion, when the reasonings of us both shall have been maturely considered, that your vindication is complete, I will then make a recantation, and cease to be a member of the established Church. If by the generality of our readers it shall be thought defective, you will be summoned to answer for your offensive demeanour in “tion again embodied, (p. 15). Infidelity in the garb of “Christianity, (p. 16). Machinations of this enemy, (p. 16).

 “Joint machinations of infidels and sectaries,” (p. 18).—
 O horrible conspiracy! O miscreant enemies!—Among the Howleys, the Burgesses, the Kiplings, and their et- cæteras—among all these unnatural enemies of their common Mother—the dear and “kind Mother” which gave them birth—has there been any such concert?—Enquire—Yea, let him enquire, who has much time and little work, for it.—Without any the smallest need of conspiracy or concert,—by the same interest, afflicted by the same congenial blindness,—similar wounds may, with the same pious and kind intentions, be, at any time, and in any numbers inflicted. That, among these two Right Reverend Defenders of the faith and so forth, their Right Reverend Colleagues, and their Most Reverend Superiors,—in the arrangement, by means of which this same Catechism has already been to so great an extent, and is intended to be to the greatest possible extent, forced into the mouths, and if possible into the heads and hearts, of the rising generation,—not only co-operation but concert has had place, is proved by the so often published Advertisement, garnished and sanctified by their respective signatures.

In this their advertisement, for money to buy and breed proselytes with,—excellent is the title conferred by these same Bishops, on their Church.—Excellent? in what sense? in what eyes?—

in Westminster Hall. It may justly be presumed, that before you ventured to issue forth your detractions, arguments to establish the position above mentioned, had been prepared with sedulity, and judiciously arranged. I therefore shall add, that by “a reasonable time” you must understand a few months only.

T. KIPLING,

Peterborough, March 23, 1815.

In certain senses—in certain eyes—the excellence of it will be found to be above dispute.

“Our Church?”—wherein shall we behold our Church?—

1. In our Archbishops and Bishops, and their Spiritual Proxies the Archdeacons?—2. In our Deans, Canons, Prebendaries, and Precentors?—3. In the Parish Ministers and Parish Clerks—joint readers of the substance of this Catechism, with the tenor or substance of Creeds, Articles, and other Formularies, and all and singular other the established substitutes to God’s word, thereunto appertaining,—the said Ministers, whether Rectors, Vicars, or Curates, being by the courtesy of England styled Ministers of the said God’s word?—4. In the “humbly docile” and “prostrate” laity, by whom all these living receptacles of the Holy Ghost are fed and pampered?—5. In the system of Ordinances and powers,—established for the extraction of the matter with which they are so pampered,—and for the securing that semblance of service which serves as the pretence for the extraction of that precious matter?—6. In the edifices in which this semblance of service is performed?

I. As to our Archbishops and our Bishops. That in their own and one another’s excellent eyes, these holy persons neither do nor ever will cease to be sufficiently excellent,—never will the most “malicious” of all those enemies, with whom his Lordship has been wrestling in spirit, have the “malice” to dispute.

Correspondently excellent will the whole species be, in the eyes of those inferior dignitaries, and moreover of such other of the Ministers of God’s word, dumb and speaking, whose hope is to become partakers of that same excellence.

In like manner will the excellence of each individual

Dives be an object of faith, in the eyes of all those, to whom any of the crumbs expected to fall from his holy table are an object of hope.

Correspondently excellent will each individual of those Most and Right Reverend and holy persons be—in the eyes of the Monarch and the Minister, who from their Hope, christened by the name of Gratitude, receives, in the House of Lords, the fruits of that “humble docility” and “prostration of understanding and will,” which they would not have had to preach, if they had not learnt to practise.

II. Deans, Canons, and Prebends!—These receptacles of the matter of consecrated opulence,—and of that dignity which is the fruit of that holy opulence, and which, when hard pressed, takes refuge from reproach under the name of decency,—how can these—to any eye avoid exhibiting in a variety of shapes, the image of excellence?—they, to each of whom belongs an excellent stall, in which he might any or every afternoon take an excellent nap,—and peradventure would, were it not that excellent wine, and the hope of excellent good fortune, in the excellent card-room of some excellent watering place,—or some other similar occupation,—or the absence of all occupation,—is still more excellent; and, forasmuch as smoothness and easiness—the qualities, which by his Lordship, as hath been seen, are held up to the view of amateurs, as constituting the summum bonum of a Church-of-England Ministry—are in this instance, in their persons, and for their benefit, smoothed up to the highest imaginable pitch of excellence.

III. Parish Ministers—be they Rectors, Vicars, or Curates—so they are but as Church-of-England Priests, in what eyes can they fail to display the lustre of excellence— they, the least of whom is Reverend—they, who at no time are more full of wine, than (witness their own testimony as above) they are at all times of the Holy Ghost—they, who share with the Almighty in the prerogative of pardon—that prerogative, to the assumption of which by Jesus, the Pharisees could not be reconciled by all his miracles—that prerogative, in comparison of which the correspondent prerogative of the earthly Monarch is but as one to infinity—they, to whose forbearance Satan is indebted for whatsoever portion of the population of his kingdom is received by him from the Church of England—they, who sharing indeed with the profane laity the art and act of eating God, share only with one another and their Roman and Lutheran colleagues, the art and act of making him:—they who, while such of them as are not altogether equal to Deans, Canons, and Prebends, as touching their repose, are—all of them—equal to their respective Parish Clerks as touching their duties,—and who, while by God's justice they are, some of them, rendered inferior to those same Parish Clerks as touching their benefices, are—others of them—by God's bounty, rendered, as touching their benefices, superior to Bishops;—exhibiting in their glory, like the stars of heaven, such excellent variety, in what eyes can they, or any of them, fail or cease to display the lustre of excellence?

IV. The Laity?—who,—in the eyes of Archbishops, Bishops, and Archdeacons,—Deans, Canons, Prebends, and Precentors, possessors of benefices of all sorts and sizes,—and moreover in the eyes of the patrons of the same,—are so excellently well taught, as well as quite sufficiently well fed,—in what eyes, other than their own, can they ever fail or cease—all of them except the said patrons—to be excellently well fleeced and squeezed, and no less excellently gulled and duped.

V. The Church?—the system of ordinances and powers sanctified by that holy name—the purposes for which these were so plainly established are now in view:—was ever any system of ordinances and powers more excellently well adapted to its purposes?—Of the Church of Rome, by the excess of that zeal, with which it laboured to shine forth before men, a portion of the excellence has been sunk behind a cloud: of the Church of England the excellence shines as yet (but how much longer will it shine?) with undiminished lustre. The Church of England—so long however as she continues to be what she is, in what eyes can the attribute of excellence ever cease to be her due,—due to her excellent prudence,—or, at any rate, to her excellent good fortune?

VI. The Edifices?—It is, in so far as it is composed of edifices—those edifices of stone, or brick and mortar—those compounds of stone or brick and mortar raised aloft—and containing, each of them, an altar—each of them, not less truly than the temple of Jupiter Ammon, a seat of sacrifice—all of them by Episcopal consecration, many of them by their antiquity, and some of them by their vastness and magnificence, fitted to be receptacles and sources of sanctity—by that mixture of magnificence and antiquity, of which, in the eye of the architect, venerableness is composed,—do they not serve excellently well, for the infusion of that element of sanctity into the breasts of those holy men, to whom they are respectively the seats of empire, and for bearing witness thereby to the authenticity of that charter, by which the keys of heaven and hell are vested in those excellent and holy hands?

Of the proof thus afforded, the probative force, is it not in the compound ratio of the length, the breadth, the height, the splendor, and the antiquity of the edifice? Always understood, that the style must be of that sort which is called Gothic: for, of true sanctity what proof can be afforded, by the Pagan gaiety of the architecture of Greece and Rome?

In the same ratio rises the degree of excellence, with which they serve in the character of objects, to travellers on the high roads, and to Country Gentlemen in the parks and gardens of this land: especially in the eyes of such of them as, in the character of patrons, are partakers of the sanctity thus composed.

In a correspondent ratio rises the degree of excellence, with which,—in virtue of their capacity of undergoing ruin, destruction, downfall, desolation, and subversion,—they serve, by those bonds of affection, which are to be found upon their altars, to bind the hearts of the laity to the Church in all its senses,—to call forth the ties of foreboding sympathy,—and to raise the flame of holy indignation, against all persons, by whom any such profanation is compassed, or, otherwise than for the prevention of it, imagined.

Of the features of excellence, perceptible in the face and frame of this excellent Church, behold here the catalogue. His Lordship of London, by whom understandings and wills are prostrated—his Lordship of Lincoln, by whom Calvinism is annihilated—his Lordship of St. David's, by whom the Trinity is demonstrated—the Very Reverend the Dean, in whose eyes the antiquity of a fictitious entity receives so satisfactory a proof from the threat of indictment in the King's Bench—know they of any other item in the catalogue of the Church's excellences?—Know they of any other precise, distinct, intelligible feature or property in it, susceptible of the name of excellence?—if so, let them declare it.

Now—and now perhaps for the first time, it depends upon themselves, and each of them, to have a distinct view of the danger with which all this excellence is menaced:—this danger, let them avert it. Yea by all means in their power let them encounter it, saving always the ultima ratio regum et sacerdotum—the last and favourite logic of priests as well as kings—the logic, by which all deficiencies in other logic are supplied—the logic, by which any one thing as well as any other is proved—the logic, with which opulence confutes poverty, foolishness wisdom, orthodoxy heterodoxy, and improbity virtue—the logic, with which Daniel Isaac Eaton was so recently and so effectually confuted, and reduced to silence—the logic, which is so much better suited than that of Aristotle to their understanding as well as their taste—to wit, information or indictment, as aforesaid.

Speaking of the American war—"Disapproving this "civil war," (says the Edinburgh Review for June, 1815, p. 176), "Lord Barrington, for four years supported it by "his vote, and by his official co-operation. And this ex"ample is now recommended to the imitation of the Bri"tish youth by a venerable Prelate (his brother the "Bishop of Durham) with the weight that belongs to his "station and his age....

"In the very worst times of Roman slavery," (continues the Reviewer), "the great historian (Tacitus) has "imagined a speech for one of the sycophants and accom"plices of Sejanus, which many readers have considered "as an exaggeration of the base principles of that gang of "miscreants.—Non est nostrum æstimare quem suprâ cæte-
"ros, et quibus de causis, extollas. Tibi summum rerum
"judicium Dii dedere: nobis obsequii gloria relictæ est."
" 'It belongs not to us to sit in judgment on persons pre"ferred by you, or on the causes of that preference. To "you the Gods have given supreme power: to us is left
"the glory of obedience.'

“ If such maxims were confined to grossly profligate “ persons, they would excite no surprise, and they would “ produce comparatively little evil. But the mischief of “ the case is, that they are the natural growth of a de“ ceived conscience, in men otherwise moral, who have “ lived in courts, and who have long been accustomed to “ exercise authority. A strong tendency towards such “ principles is the necessary result of their situation; and “ they find their way into the conviction of many, who “ have the discretion not to publish them to the world,
 “ and who have not perhaps the boldness to avow them “ distinctly to their own minds. In this respect the cause “ of the people is more unfortunate than that of autho“ rity. The extravagances of demagogues are necessarily “ public. They are instantly spread through every part “ of a country. They are quoted from generation to ge“ neration, by all those whose vocation it is to render “ liberty odious or contemptible. It is otherwise with “ the equally extravagant opinions of courtiers and states“ men. They conceal their obnoxious singularities; and “ it is very seldom that we catch so clear a glimpse of the “ interior of their minds, as in this volume, which shews us
 “ a man who, if consistent with himself, must have been a “ partizan of despotism; though, during his whole life, he “ must have employed the language of the British consti“ tution, and often extolled its transcendent excellency.
 “ The favourers of absolute monarchy, indeed, must gene“ rally dissemble their opinions. Those of a more popular “ government must seek to publish and to disseminate
 “ them. The latter, therefore, can never be more nume“ rous than they seem. The former always are: and it is “ extremely probable that those who incline towards regal “ despotism, and whose measures would terminate in its “ establishment, are more numerous in England than the “ partizans of a mere democratical government; as it is “ quite certain, that in all ordinary times, they are far “ more dangerous from their rank, their wealth, their ta“ lents, and their influence.”

Taking credit, and not altogether without cause, for the sagacity which has brought to light the unwarily betrayed secret of the veteran votary of despotism, the Reviewer could never at that time have laid his hands on this Ecclesiastical Manifesto, in which, drunk with new promotion as with new wine, the newly-enthroned brandisher of the crosier, throwing off not only all “veils,” and “masks,” and “disguises,” but even those coverings which common decency would have joined with common prudence in keeping on, stalks forth,—with his mind at the end of his fingers, in puris naturalibus,—the avowed instrument, of the most rampant despotism that words can describe, or heart conceive,—and, together with his own secrets, betrays those of the Associated Bench, of whose association the real and ultimate objects cannot now be dubious.

It assuredly cannot be, without turning the ear of disbelief, to whatsoever testimony this modern Sacheverel has been pleased to deliver, concerning his own principles—his own feelings—his own wishes—his own endeavours,—if any other man can succeed in persuading himself, that any thing,—short of that system of passive obedience and non-resistance, which, till the Revolution came, and for so long afterwards, formed the part of the solemnly proclaimed creed of that University of which his Lordship is so worthy a member,—would be capable of satisfying the holy zeal which flames in his Lordship’s breast.—It is to the Puritans, mostly if not exclusively, that, by the acknowledgment of David Hume,—much as the philosopher hated those religionists, and in great measure for this very reason,—we stand indebted, for whatsoever of those things called liberties are still, in practice, left to us, and for the advantage of having gold for a covering to the rods by which we are ruled. Even to David Hume, those enthusiasts—those sectaries—those schismatics—those men of guilt,—(for, according to the present as well as the late Lord of London (p. 1), all schism is guilt)—were known by the liberties which they gained for us, and left to us:—to his Lordship they are known only by “the troubles they excited.” for, to his Lordship, and those who think and act with him, every breast which presumes (p. 16) to “question” what it should “learn,” to harbour any such “guilt” as that of “schism,” or so much as (p. 2) any “opinion which, even by remote consequences, might unsettle the faith of the inexperienced,” is a fit object of “exposure,” and a declared source of “trouble.”

The Puritans, exciters of troubles!—exciters only! as if, so far as they have had power, they have not been composers of troubles likewise!—as if it were not by the composing of those troubles, which to that end they contributed to the excitement of, (for how else could any thing good have been done?) that in Scotland they succeeded at length in establishing that system of Church Government, which,—if the absence of all Church management, daubed with the untempered mortar of temporal power, be not still better,—will, the more it is looked into, be the more universally and clearly seen to want little indeed of being a model of perfection:—which, to the most useful and important—and those really performed duties—unknown to the Church of England,—such as inspection of Schools and management of Poors’ funds,—adds the merit of self-purification, and the blessing of purity, from all the abuses, such as Creeds, Unchangeable Formularies, Reading without thinking, Sinecures, Non-Residence, Pluralities, Surplice fees, Palaces,—sanctified seats of princely opulence, close by the side of the abodes of destitute penury:—penury so destitute, that not so much as the shadow of an excuse could be found for the continuance of it, if the uselessness of the service thus equipped and remunerated had not superseded the need of all excuse for the neglect of it:—the system (I say) of that Church (for now I am come back to Scotland) which now, for more than a century has scorned to endure, within its bosom, a set of puppets, invested each of them with a portion of the sovereignty, to no other purpose than that of giving, to a notoriously dependent assembly, a mendacious colour of independence, covering interested servility with the cloak of gratitude.

Such were the Puritans—those “schismatics”—those men of “guilt”—those exciters of troubles;—such, in both kingdoms, the object,—and such in Scotland the result—of the troubles they excited:—such in England then, and alas! still, the demand for troubles; for troubles having the like object, and, by like favour of Almighty beneficence, the like result.

Yes: could a similar consummation be here secured, might not a moderate portion of some of those things, reprobated by this prostrator of understandings and wills, under the name of troubles,—might not some of these troubles, suited to the improved character of the times—troubles, if composed of reasoning alone, and without slaughtering,—be well employed? Let any one, to whom either pure religion, pure morals, or pure government is an object of affection, think and judge.

A mask forsooth—a mask necessary (so his Lordship, p. 14, would persuade us) for the “adversaries” of his Church?

The Quaker, the Baptist, the Methodist, the Independent, the Presbyterian, the Unitarian Christian, the Deist, the Atheist—as if any of all these had any the smallest need of, or use for, any such thing as a mask, for bringing to view the corruptions, as above, by which the Church of England remains assimilated to the Church of Rome,—distinguished above all other established Churches, and from all non-established ones?

Still the same endeavour to cause men to be condemned for opinions not their own! The Christian Unitarian—what support can he look to give to his Christian opinions by Anti-Christian arguments?—the Atheist—what support can he look to give to his Atheistical opinions by Theistical arguments?—by what can either of them defend his own opinions, but by arguments corresponding and adapted to these same opinions?—On the subject of religion, each of these—unless the Atheist be an exception—has some opinions in common with every other. Is it a fraud in him to bring to view the reasons by which his own opinions have been recommended to him?—is this a fraud in him, merely because, in minds that entertain other opinions not entertained by himself, these reasons may happen to stand approved?

The Quaker, the Baptist, the Methodist, the Independent, the Presbyterian, the Unitarian Christian, the Deist, the Atheist, the Church-of-England layman—all these,—but, above all, this layman—find, in the shapes just mentioned, oppressors, and as such adversaries, in the Church-of-England Clergy, headed by the Church-of-England Hierarchy:—yes: all these; but, for the causes already brought to view, most of all the great body of Church-of-England-ists.—Without any endeavour at relief, am I to submit for ever to oppression, for no other reason, than that if I were to obtain relief, it might be shared with me by this or that other man, who, though he feels, happens not to think, as I do?

A mask indeed!—The Church-of-England receiver of the Holy Ghost—be he Church-ruler—Minister—or consecrated idler—to him, and to him alone, can any such implement be of use:—and, on his part, constant and incontestable is the demand for it.

The poisons, which it is the sure effect of that formula, so far as it has any, to infuse—poisons to the intellectual, poisons to the moral, poisons to the sensitive part of man's frame,—these poisons—not to speak of the remainder of that set of lengthened bead-rolls, of which it forms a part—have here in part been brought to view. To preserve his Lordship, for example, from the awkwardness of being seen to see these fruits of Church-of-England doctrine and discipline, or of being forced to shut his eyes against them, to save himself from seeing them—to such purposes a mask might perhaps be not altogether without its use.

The Creeds—all of them at war with reason, with Scripture, and with one another;—the everlasting and lengthened bead-rolls, heard or not heard, between sleeping and waking, while they are mumbled over without thinking;—the Sinecures, the Pluralities, the Non-Residences, the outrageously-paid Benefices, the fornication-compelling, and birth and death-embittering Surplice-fees;—the gorgeous opulence by the side of the useless pittance, indiscriminately attached in the shape of purchase money, to the same useless, if not unrendered, service;—the intestine war, so anxiously perpetuated in the hearts of the respective parishes, by the perpetuation of a mode of payment, established by the Church of Rome, when the barbarism combined with the superstition of the times, in giving to the most oppressive of taxes the character of an unavoidable one;—Yes, for the countenance, which can look in the face abuses such as these, with a determination to deny either the existence or the mischievousness of them—for a countenance of such a complexion a mask may well be necessary!

Yes—necessary for any course of warfare in which abuses such as these are undertaken to be defended, will be not only a mask, or rather a head-piece,—but the whole armour of those fallacies, which Aristotle never dreamt of, and which by the ingenuity of succeeding Sophists have been invented: fallacies, of which he who thinks it worth his while, may in the works of Court-and-Church-of-England polemics, and in particular in this Charge, find as many exemplifications as he need desire.

As for trade, so for religion,—different as they are in other respects, whatsoever may have been the case in the days of primæval barbarism,—the best thing that a government could now do, would be not to meddle with it, always excepted the purifying it from whatsoever portions of the matter of wealth, power, or dignity, in the shape of the matter of corruption, superstition has ever daubed it with. Revenue forces government to meddle with trade: but (witness America else), neither revenue nor any thing else forces government to meddle with religion. The perfection of all Church management is the absence of all Church government. Witness all the sects: witness every sectary in the kingdom. In what sect, in the breast of what sectary, is religion a matter of indifference? In what sect does a man declare himself to believe any thing he does not believe? In what sect does a Minister extort money for doing nothing? In what sect is the service, taken by itself, spoken of as a hardship,—as matter of complaint,—and by the pay, and that alone, rendered just endurable? In what sect is a Minister paid for his service, the value of a penny more than by those to whom it is rendered it is thought worth? In what sect does the Minister insult the indigent, by the display of an opulence, wrung out of the bowels of indigence? Where is the sect that furnishes puppets, to act the part of free agents, for the benefit of the Monarch, in the farce of legislation? Where is the sect that furnishes inhabitants to the Jails, to the Hulks, or to the Penal Colonies? Where would Penal Colonies, Hulks, or Jails, find inhabitants, but for the Church of England?

When to each of these several questions an answer has been given,—go then, ye hypocrites, take trumpet in hand, sound forth the guilt of schism, and command all men to fall prostrate before your Golden Image, and its unrivalled “excellence.”

Before this paper is brought to a close, one thing yet remains to be presented to the consideration of those whom it may concern.

By this Bishop of London, the Clergy of his diocese are, in this his address to them, spoken of as so many persons whose “instructions” ought with “humble docility,” and “prostration of the understanding and will,” to be received as the oracles of God: and this without condition or limitation annexed, such as that of their being conformable to the holy scriptures.

But this same Right Reverend person,—not only in this his address, exhibits himself as one having authority, in matters of doctrine and discipline, over these same spiritual persons and every of them,—and prepared (p. 4) for “asserting the rights of that authority against factious opposition or contumacious negligence,”—but, in point of law, as well as in fact, is actually so, beyond dispute or doubt, and knows himself so to be.

Hereupon comes a question or two, the title of which to consideration will not, it is believed, be found altogether easy to dispute.

1. Whether a Church-of-England Bishop,—who thus publicly and deliberately gives himself out as superior to those whose instructions are the Oracles of God, and to whom he thereby,—in the language noted by Jesus (John, x. 34) for its extravagance, when applied to men,—says, “Ye are Gods,” ought to be suffered, on any terms, or at any rate without public recantation, to retain either that purely ecclesiastical situation, the authority of which he has thus abused, or his temporal seat on the Bishop’s Bench in the Upper House of the Legislature?

2. Whether, from such a quarter, such discourse be altogether consistent with mental sanity? whether the imputation of insanity be not the most lenient interpretation that can be put upon it? and, let sanity or insanity be the state of mind ascribed to him, whether by the text—“his Bishoprick let another take”—a course proper to be pursued be not pointed out?

In what light—especially now that the matter has in this public manner been held up to notice—if those, to whom belongs the power of correcting such enormities, should leave them uncorrected,—and thus, by connivance, render themselves participators in those same enormities,—in what light will they merit to be regarded by the other members of the Church of England? and,—if by the whole body of the members of that Church such connivance should be left unremonstrated against and uncomplained of,—in what light will they merit, and in what light will they be likely, to be regarded, by all other Christian Churches—established and non-established?

Daniel Isaac Eaton was imprisoned and set in the pillory t’other day,—for no other offence, than the publication of a book, in which the title of Jesus to the character of God, and that of the Holy Scriptures to the title of true histories, was denied and argued against. But, neither did Daniel Isaac Eaton, nor the writer whose work he was thus punished for publishing, ever give himself out as superior to the Oracles of God: nor was either of them furnished with a seat in the Upper House of the legislature, with a 10,000*l.* a year salary, or any salary at all, in reward for, and in condition, and in consideration of his undertaking to do his utmost to cause the Holy Scriptures, and them alone, to be received as the Oracles of God. By Daniel Isaac Eaton no breach of trust was committed: his sin, whatever else it was, was the sin of ignorance.

The ribaldry of Daniel Isaac Eaton passed but for what it was worth: for, in his situation there was not any thing that could enable it, or tend to cause it, to pass for any thing more. Daniel Isaac Eaton was not of the number of those, who hold themselves as successors, and sole legitimate successors, to the distinguished few, of whom Jesus said, “Ye are the salt of the earth.” Daniel Isaac Eaton was not, at that time, like them, “set upon a hill,”—or at any time after, upon any typical hill, other than the hill of always intended disgrace, but not unfrequently eventual honour,—the pillory.

Meantime, were it only that the Court and its “prostrate” Ministry may be known for what they are, this their new-raised favourite cannot be too perfectly or extensively known for what he is.

It is no secret, in how high a degree, any impression produced by those arbitrarily designative characters of which spoken and written discourse is composed, is capable of being strengthened and deepened by those naturally imitative and representative ones, which it is the work of the pencil or the graver to delineate.

In a moderate compass, and without breach of unity, in one picture might be exhibited a view of the two opposite religions—the religion of Jesus, and the religion of the Church of England, as delineated by this its Bishop.

In the back ground, on one hand might stand Jesus, washing the feet of his disciples, as related in John, xiii.

1 to 17. In the fore ground, on the right hand, one group in Charity-School Uniform, in the prescribed attitude of prostration,—his Lordship, in his palace, seated on his throne, showering down, with dignified negligence, upon these little ones, his benedictions:—on the left hand, in costumes and postures indicative of various occupations,—but most of them with Bibles in their hands, or under their arms, and all of them with serious and reflecting countenances, another group,—his said Lordship spitting down upon them, through the magnificently Gothic palace window, labels inscribed with the words “contempt and horror.”

Thus much,—it being,—with the exception of the Scriptural, and surely not inappropriate, part of the subject,—nothing more than his Lordship’s own discourse, expressed by the pencil instead of the pen,—has in it nothing more than what might be painted by the grave pencil of Mr. West:—and, for the window of some Cathedral, eternized in glass by Mr. Pearson.

An addition and exposition, to any such effect as the following,—Hogarth being, alas! no more—could scarcely be added from any other than the Holland School: and would require the graver, for giving expression to it.

At his Lordship’s elbow, the Spirit,—who is so much better known to his Lordship than to the writer of these pages,—busy in supplying the Episcopal writing-table with “laws of interpretation.” On the remaining side of the back ground, Dives,—in that costume of his which has been taken for an uniform by the Episcopal Bench—viz. his purple and his fine linen,—his eyes directed to his Lordship,—the finger of one hand pointing to his own parched tongue, on which the demand for water remains still unsatisfied,—his other hand pointing to a cushion of asbestos velvet, left vacant for the Right Reverend sitting-part, by his side.

APPENDIX, No. II.

LORD'S SUPPER—NOT DESIGNED BY JESUS FOR GENERAL IMITATION—ITS UTTER UNFITNESS FOR THAT PURPOSE.

IN the body of this work, the ceremony commonly called The Lord's Supper came necessarily under review. On that occasion its unfitness to be employed in that character was touched upon. Incidental and cursory was the consideration then given to it, and the mention accordingly then made of it. After a more thorough consideration—on the one hand, so convincing appeared the proof of its being completely destitute of all warrant from Scripture,—on the other hand, so deplorably mischievous in respect of the application made of it,—so great consequently the benefit, if at length the religion of Jesus could be cleared of so morbid an excrescence,—that in this volume a few more pages could not be refused—to the hope, however faint, of contributing something towards the rendering to the interests of religion, morality, and general happiness, so salutary a service.

On this occasion,—that nothing may be wanting, either to the solidity or to the clearness of the ground on which the opinion of the sincere reader is called for,—all that relates to that other scene, viz. the feet-washing scene, having for illustration been already brought under his eye

(viz. in pages 62, 63),—what belongs to the bread-eating and wine-drinking scene will now be found in like manner brought to view.* And here, before he proceeds any fur-

* Account of what passed at the Lord's Supper, as delivered by three of the four Evangelists:—John, silent.

Luke xxii.	Matt. xxvi.	Mark xiv.
7. Then came the day of unleavened bread, when the passover must be killed. And he sent Peter and John, saying, Go, and prepare us the passover that we may eat. And they said unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare? And he said unto them, Behold, when ye are entered into the city, there shall a man meet you, bearing a pitcher of water; follow him into the house, where he entereth in. And ye shall say unto the good man of the house, The master saith unto thee, Where is the guest chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples?	17. Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, the disciples came to Jesus, saying unto him, Where wilt thou that we prepare for thee to eat the passover? And he said, Go into the city to such a man, and say unto him; The Master saith, My time is at hand, I will keep the passover at thy house with my disciples. 19. And the disciples did as Jesus had appointed them, and they made ready the passover. Now when the even was come, he sat down with the twelve. And as they were eating, Jesus took bread and blessed it, and brake it, and gave it to the disciples, and said, Take, eat; this is my body. And	12. And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover, his disciples said unto him, Where wilt thou that we go and prepare, that thou mayest eat the passover? And he sendeth forth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, Go ye into the city, and there shall meet you a man bearing a pitcher of water: follow him. And whosoever he shall go in, say ye to the good man of the house, The Master saith, Where is the guest chamber, where I shall eat the passover with my disciples? And he will shew you a large upper room, furnished and prepared: there make ready for us. And his disciples went forth ther, he may perhaps find a convenience in bestowing a second glance on what has been said on the two subjects there make ready.

 13. And they went, and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the
 14. passover. And when the hour was come, he sat down, and the twelve Apostles with
 15. him. And he said unto them, With desire, I have desired to eat this passover with you before I
 16. suffer: For I say unto you, I will not any more eat thereof, until it be fulfilled in the kingdom
 17. of God. And he took the cup, and gave thanks, and said, Take this, and divide it among your-
 18. selves: For I say unto you, I will not drink of the fruit of the vine until the kingdom of God
 19. shall come. And he took bread, and gave thanks, and brake it, and gave unto them, saying, This is my body, which is given for you: this do in remembrance of me.
 [20.] Likewise also the cup after supper, saying, This cup is the New Testament in my blood, which is shed for you.
 he took the cup, and gave thanks, and gave it to them, saying, Drink ye all
 28. of it; For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many for the remission of sins.
 29. But I say unto you, I will not drink henceforth of the fruit of the vine, until that day when I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom.
 and came into the city; and found as he had said unto them: and they made ready the passover.
 17. And in the evening he cometh with the
 22. twelve. And as they did eat, Jesus took bread and blessed and brake it, and gave to them, and said, Take, eat; this
 23. is my body. And he took the cup, and when he had given thanks, he gave it unto them, and they
 24. all drank of it. And he said unto them, This is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for 25. many. Verily I say unto you, I will drink no more of the fruit of the vine, until that day that I drink it new in the kingdom of God.

in the place just mentioned: viz. in pages from 60 to 64 inclusive.

First, then, as to the applicability of the bread-eating and wine-drinking scene to the condition of mankind at large.

The sort of commemoration, suggested by Jesus to the Apostles, was it intended—could it have been intended—to be practised by any persons other than those belonging to the company then and there present? Answer. Not it indeed: under the circumstances of the case it could not have been. In favour of the affirmative, in no one of the three histories is so much as a particle of evidence to be found. On the opposite side may be seen the most convincing evidence. From this last meeting—for such it was expected to be—all but the select twelve had by a necessary anxiety been excluded: from all but them it had been concealed: and even among them there was one too many. The crisis was at hand. The fatal order had been issued, the endeavour was—on the one part to effect, on the other to avoid, the execution of it. Of this last endeavour the accomplishment had already become hopeless. The plan of the traitor had been settled.

In the mind of Jesus had any such design been entertained, as that of instituting a ceremony to be performed by his followers in all places and all times, would he in his address to these twelve have been so completely silent as to any such intention? Would he have abstained from giving any the slightest intimation of any such wish, as that by any one person in the company, communication of the matter should be made to any one person out of it?

When, by the same Jesus, those lessons of real and practical importance were delivered, the observance of which lies equally within the competence of all mankind, did he

on that occasion shut himself up with his confidential servants in a private chamber?—On the contrary, it was on an eminence that on that occasion he lifted up his voice: an eminence on which he was seen, and from which he was heard, by thousands.

When it was really his intention, that those things, which in the first instance he had communicated to the select few, should by them be communicated to all, did he not say so?—did he not express himself in the most explicit terms? “Go ye therefore and teach all nations:” these, as reported in Matthew (xxviii. 19.)—“Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature”... these, as reported by Mark (xvi. 15.) on that same occasion, were his words.

To “all nations,”—supposing it his intention (though he said no such thing) that it should be communicated to all nations,—would the exhibition of the Supper scene, any more than of the Church-of-England imitation of it, have been possible?—Not it indeed.

On that sad and deeply affecting occasion,—even to the select company then present, what is it then that was in reality commanded? Remembrance, and nothing more.—Commanded, shall we say? Say rather solicited. Sympathy—genuine sympathy—is it a subject for command? No. False expressions of it, yes: these may be extorted by fear: but the affection itself is not to be thus gained.

If on that occasion any thing was commanded, what is it then that was commanded? Is it a system of stated meetings, with a ceremony to be performed at each? No: not so much as any thing like so much as one single stated meeting. At that time, nothing more was called for to be done by them—nothing more, than the doing what they came fully prepared to do—taking with one accord that repast, for the taking of which they were come. For any suc-

feeding point of time, what was at that same time called for? Remembrance, and nothing more. "Do this" . . . were his words. Do what? Do what had just been done by all: viz. eating bread and drinking wine. But in this what was there that would not have been done by them of course, though no intimation to any such effect had been received by them? thus much they would have done of course for sustenance. "Do this in remembrance of me:"—i. e. when, for a convivial purpose, at any future time, you meet any of you together, keep me in your remembrance—think and speak of me. In a wish so natural—so simple—so completely devoid of mystery, behold the true and only meaning of this discourse, which by so sad a perversion of language—by so deplorable an exercise given to a disordered imagination—has been sublimated into a mystery; and, in an endless train, inferences no less replete with mischief than with absurdity deduced from it!

The bread—was that intended and commanded by him thus to be eaten—eaten in ceremony by all nations?—was that intended by him to be eaten by "every living creature?" The wine—was it thus intended and commanded by him to be drunken?—drunken in ceremony by all nations?—drunken in ceremony by every creature?

There was indeed moreover the "giving thanks;" nor in this was there any thing but what might be done "by all nations:"—by "every living creature," that on this occasion could have been in view. But neither in this is there any thing that could, on that occasion, have entered into the composition of the subject of the special command.

Among the people of that nation, this was an already established custom:* just as the saying grace before and

* Mark, vii. 6, 14, 23.—He (Jesus) took the seven loaves and gave thanks . . . John, vi. 11.—When he (Jesus) had given thanks he distributed after meat (in imitation probably of that same custom) has come to be among us. Accordingly, in no established form of the Christian Religion has this giving of thanks been regarded as either constituting the essence, or so much as entering into the composition of the essence, of what is called the sacrament: let any one so regard it,—and, in his view of the matter, the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is eaten, as often as grace is said before or after a meal.

Breaking bread and eating it—putting wine into a cup and drinking it—to those to whom what is above was spoken,—oh, yes: both these performances were possible enough. But to all nations? How great the multitude—not to speak of “creatures,”—but of whole nations—to which neither of these performances has ever yet been possible.

Hunters and fishers—shepherds—husbandmen—by these names, taken in the three distinguishable degrees, which it has successively occupied in the scale of civilization, is the whole human race brought to view. Hunters—fishers—shepherds:—to how many nations thus denominated has not only the taste, but even the name, of both those fruits of husbandry been utterly unknown?

Even in the husbandman state, in how many nations, to the vast majority of the population, has not bread—this first of the two supposed necessary instruments of salvation—been at all times inaccessible? In the tropical countries—in five-and-forty graduated portions of the earth's surface—and those the best inhabited—out of the about a hundred and twenty habitable ones, either some unmanufactured grain, such as rice,—or some root, such as the yam or

... ib. 23.—They did eat bread after the Lord had given thanks . . . Acts, xxvii. 35.—Paul took bread and gave thanks to God . . . Romans, xiv. 6.—He that eateth, eateth to the Lord, for he giveth God thanks.

cassavi,—has all along occupied the place of this elaborated article of manufacture.

Still narrower are the limits of the climate which affords the fruit of which wine is made. Vain would be the observation, that, under the name of wine, any fermented liquor, affording an ardent spirit, may be comprized. The “vine,” and that alone, is the plant, “the fruit of” which was on this occasion mentioned by Jesus, as the material of which the wine he was there speaking of—viz. wine of the sort of that which then and there stood before him—was made. The Apostles were not Chemists. Jesus himself was not a Chemist. Under the name of wine, no liquor, other than the fermented juice of grapes, was at that time and in that place known. Unless by a forced extension—and that of comparatively modern date—to no liquor, other than the fermented juice of grapes, is the name of wine applicable even now.

By hosts of missionaries—vying, yet harmonizing with each other—(delightful thought!) the religion of Jesus has, of late years, been carried to the remotest south and to the remotest east. Heaven prosper their benevolent and pious labours! Heaven preserve them from the despotism that threatens to nip in the bud their precious fruits! This ceremony, what will they do with it? What indeed have they done with it? The new-created Lord Spiritual of Calcutta, who, armed with power, riches, opulence, and factitious dignity, is sent out to condemn by his example the equality preached by Jesus—this newly commissioned Antichrist with his three Sub-Antichrists, what will they do with it? Engrafting on the religion of Jesus the more acceptable religion of Bacchus, will they re-instate in his former conquests this their favourite God? The pay granted for these intruders, is it not burthen enough for those already over-loaded heathens? To furnish out the working subalterns of this company of Sinecurists with these exotic and costly implements of salvation, will not the pressure of that burthen receive yet further increase? Or will the discovery be made, that the religion of Jesus changes with the climate: and that the inebriating liquor, necessary as it is to salvation in England, may be dispensed with in Hindostan?

This ceremony—the performance of it, is it then really necessary to salvation? If yes, then,—knowing or not knowing (choose ye which) that to millions upon millions of human creatures the performance of it would not be possible,—Jesus prescribed it notwithstanding: foreseeing and intending, that, for want of their having performed this impossibility, they would and should continue, to all eternity, in a state of unutterable torment:—and this merely for want of their having performed this one impossibility, while of no other precept of his had the observance been thus placed out of their reach.

“No:—not indeed absolutely necessary, but however highly conducive . . .” will this then be the answer? Slender indeed will be the support, which from any such answer the credit of the ceremony will receive. Instead of the absolute certainty of infinite torment, what we gain by the amendment is the substitution of a chance—a certain degree of probability. But here then the question still recoils upon us—what chance?—tell us what chance? and be the chance what it may, by the difference between that and certainty, if the certainty be unreasonable, and as such inadmissible, will the unreasonableness be varied any otherwise than in degree?

Yes to be sure—if such was really the pleasure of the potter, submission is all that is left to the “clay.” But that such was really his pleasure, on what ground is it that we are called upon to believe? Exactly on none at all; or rather—as an algebraist would say—less than none: for while there are no reasons for any such supposition, we have seen what reasons there are against it.

But, on all such occasions as the present, the resolve in the first place determined upon is, that the practice of man—of man in power—shall be justified: and, to give effect to this resolve, how great the dishonour thus cast upon God may be, they care not. They, they are the potters: God, the clay: to compass their end, Him they make what they please. And this end, what is it? Only that the “understandings and wills,” which they have laid “prostrate,” may in reality be as clay in these same impious hands.

Again.—If it were necessary to salvation, this same ceremony—to produce such its effect, with what degree of frequency—how many times, for example, in the compass of a twelvemonth—must it have been repeated?—What? is a man to be tormented to all eternity,—or though it were but for so much as a single moment,—only for having fallen short of the necessary number of times by no more than one? and this only because he knew not that which nobody ever told him of,—and which, without his being told of by somebody, it was impossible he should know?

Well then—if it be neither necessary, nor so much as conducive to salvation, why so determined, so persevering, and so vehement in your endeavours to force men to declare that they believe it is so, and if possible, actually to believe that it is so? On the one side stands the absurdity—on the other, the insincerity—on both sides the mischievousness—of this your practice:—take your choice.

Not only to these two out of the three great divisions of the human species, have both these pretendedly necessary instruments of salvation been at all times inaccessible,—but even in the remaining division, one of those two elements, and that the one to which the greatest degree of importance has been attached,—has,—to a large part of the population, not to say the largest,—been in practice equally inaccessible. Throughout this region the liquid element,—such is the price to which by taxes it has been raised in every country, and, by the expense of carriage, in these in which it is an imported article,—it would, if permitted to be partaken of by as many as the solid element is partaken of, thus, by the extent of the demand, have been raised above the reach of the poorest, and thereby of the most numerous classes. In Catholic countries, this indeterminate cause of exclusion is indeed itself excluded. But how? even by a determinate and altogether invincible one: viz. by that, next to universal, exclusion,—by which the use of this more costly article is, on each occasion, confined to the officiating priest. Moreover, by this way of settling the matter,—of the command thus ascribed to Jesus—and the application of it supposed, or pretended to be supposed, to have been designed by him to be extended to all mankind—one half is openly set at nought. Whatsoever persons he commanded to become partakers of the bread, exactly the same persons did he command to become partakers of the wine. Yet such was the effrontery, or the blindness, of those, whoever they were, by whom the form given to the ceremony in those days of darkness was devised—their disobedience to one part of the supposed ordinance is as direct and palpable as disobedience can be, while their obedience to the other part is no less so in effect.

In Protestant countries indeed no such direct exclusion has place: but here steps in the indirect exclusion, produced by the dearness of the article.

In England, true it is, that,—according to the code of ceremonial law, which, under the name of the Rubrick, is interwoven with the Liturgy,—wine for this purpose is to be provided at the expense of the Parish: and by this arrangement, so completely of a piece with the whole system of pay for ecclesiastical service, those by whom the partaking of it would be regarded as a sin, as well as those by whom it is regarded as a means of committing sin with impunity,—high and low, rich and poor,—are forced to be contributors to the melancholy repast:—those who regard sin as annihilated by it, and those who regard sin as created by it.

By these oppressive means it is, that the costly and foreign liquor of inebriation and salvation is procured, and in words promised and held out to all: to the poorest (who are always the greater number) as well as to the richest: to paupers, as well as to the rateable inhabitants by whom they are supported.

But the poor—those whose poverty is certified by the state of their clothing and other tokens—are they really admitted to the altar—are they admitted to a sip of the precious liquor, thus metamorphosed into the still more precious blood?—Ah no: it cannot be: this would be incompatible with all notions of Church-of-England decency. If they were, this repast—this spiritual repast—so much would it in that case have of carnal annoyance in it—would not be partaken of even by that comparatively small number of the rich, to whom it is not an object of complete and constant disregard. No: in the practice of that Church, among the distinguishing characters of which is the inexorable exclusion so copiously bestowed upon those, whose stock of the elements of Church-of-England decency does not enable them to pay for a seat in any one of its places of worship,—well may any one be assured, that whatsoever encouragement, or even permission, is given for the drinking of rich wine at public expense, is, by some means or other, confined to those who can afford to pay for it.

In favour of the exclusion thus put upon the majority of Christians, an argument might even be urged, to which on satisfactory answer might be very easy to be found. Of the quantity of real faith really lodged in the region of the heart, no very exact measure can be seen stamped on the countenance, or any where else. By the sensual love of the inebriating liquor, or by the love of profane laughter, a reprobate might at any time have been sent to the holy altar,—there to empty, at one draught, that cup, which had been prepared for as many sips as there had been guests expected at this ambiguous feast : and thus, to the words of the poetically inspired heathen,—(pleno se prouit auro)—little as he ever dreamt of any such fulfilment—might be given—and with as much propriety as to so many other universally applicable passages—the character of a special prophecy.

All this while, against the assumed doctrine, by which the universal and habitual drinking of an inebriating liquor is numbered among the means of salvation, has the impossibility of any thing like universal performance ever presented itself to either Church—to Holy Mother, or to her still more Holy Daughter—in any such character as that of a conclusive argument? Never : no, never. Never in the thoughts of either Church has the condition of the poor—never in the thoughts of either of these self-styled Christian Churches has the condition of the great majority of those, who either are, or, if so it had pleased these holy phantoms, would have been Christians—had in reality the honour of a place : if it had, no such ceremony as this could possibly have been established. No :—for the great bulk of mankind, no more has salvation been ever intended by the Church-of-England Priest, than justice, or so much as the shew of it, by the English Lawyers. By the founders of Church-of-England Religion, had salvation been designed for any but the rich, Bacchus would never have thus been seated by the side of Jesus. By the founders of English law (not to speak of the upholders of it) had justice been designed for any but the rich, no such abomination would have been known as either *Law-Taxes or Law-Fees.†

Is there after all no road to Heaven but through ceremonies?—Must we at any price have a ceremony? Well then, let feet-washing—let mutual feet-washing—be that ceremony. To save it from that contempt which is the too natural companion of familiarity, let us deal by it as the ceremony of Dipping—in Greek, Baptism—and for that same reason—has been dealt by. Instead of our own vulgar tongue, let the name of it be taken from a dead language, and—what may be still better—from that same consecrated language. Instead of feet-washing, let it be—as with the Latins—Pediluvium, or—as with the Greeks, Podolusis. Thus then, for the commencement of the career of ceremony, we should have Dipping, alias Baptism; for the continuance of it, Feet-washing, alias Podolusis.

Compare, in this point of view, the Pediluvium with the Sacramental Supper,—and behold, on all points taken together, how greatly the aqueous ceremony has the advantage.

1. As to the source. The same in the one case as in the other is the source to which they are traceable.

2. From that same sacred source, for the bread-eating and wine-drinking ceremony, there is nothing stronger (it has been seen) than solicitation or recommendation: no expression of desire, to which with propriety can be given the

* See Bentham's Defence of Usury, and Protest against Law-Taxes, † See Bentham's Scotch Reform,

appellation of a command. For the feet-washing—for the mutual feet-washing ceremony, there is not only a positive command,—but, of the operation prescribed, one exemplification, and that a most striking one,—exhibited, and the command accompanied with words by which it is anxiously enforced. “If I then your Lord and master have washed “ your feet; ye also ought to wash one another’s feet.
“ For I have given you an example that ye should do as “ I have done to you.” (John, xiii. 14, 15.)

3. In the source from which the bread-eating and wine-drinking ceremony has been deduced, no morally useful lesson could (it has been seen) have been meant to be delivered. In the source from which the feet-washing ceremony would be to be deduced, a moral lesson of the utmost practical importance—viz. abstinence from ambitious contention—or, in one word, humility—was meant to be—was most explicitly declared to be—delivered.

4. From the source from which the bread-eating and wine-drinking ceremony has been deduced, no special morally useful lesson has ever been so much as attempted to be deduced. Immoral lessons, yes: and those in abundance:—the efficacy of an inebriating liquor either in washing away sin,—or in causing it, after it has been committed, not to have been committed:—the encouragement thereby given to sin: the power assumed upon the strength of it, by the most egregious of sinners, in the character of a priest, to consign to heaven or hell whom he pleases; by means of that same power, the further power to prostrate men’s understandings and wills at his feet: to render them subjects to his will, and instruments to his lusts. From the source from which the mutual feet-washing ceremony would be to be deduced, which of all those immoral inferences could ever be deduced? What but the purest morality would ever be deducible?

5. From the source from which the bread-eating and wine-drinking ceremony has been deduced, were any morally useful lessons deducible, narrow at best in its application would be the virtue of that ceremony. The bread and wine, no lesson. Were the lesson ever so useful, to none but wine-drinkers would the benefit of it be extended or extendible. Excluded from it would be—not only the whole population of the whole torrid zone, but in the two temperate zones all that abject class of human beings, whose souls, in the eyes of the Holy Mother and Daughter Churches, have never been worth a thought,—and in whose instance,—in pursuance of a recent discovery, announced by the so deliberately declared judgment of a well-fed dignitary of the English Church,—as declared, in a confidential and efficacious address, to the congenial mind of a Bible-distributing Chancellor of the Exchequer,—it has been found that neither health nor life have any greater claim to regard,—and who, that on all occasions they may be dealt with according to their deserts, have been marked out by him for constant and condign contempt under the name of ale-drinkers.*

* See, in "Further Papers relating to Excise Prosecutions," printed for the House of Commons, by Order, dated 28th March, 1816. No. 179, 2. in p. 5,—Letter "From the very Reverend the Dean of Canterbury to "S. R. Lushington, Esq. Secretary to the Treasury, dated Rectory House, "Piccadilly, February 6, 1815;" this very Reverend person, adding to that his rich sinecure, the rich and Court-embracing Rectory of St. James's. This letter has been communicated to the public at large in the Monthly Magazine for 1 July, 1816, together with one of several Representations from the Commissioners of Excise, (six in number,) which this, followed by five other extra-judicial intercessions from that same number of individuals, had the effect of setting at nought: in the judgment of these same Commissioners, this being "an ex parte representation, totally false and groundless." For an offence committed by a Brewing Magistrate—a neighbour of this very Reverend person's—an offence whereby, in the judgment of these Commissioners, delivered on the ground of legal evidence, not merely the revenue is "defrauded, but the health of his Majesty's subjects highly endangered . . . an offence of which it is utterly impossible for a moment to believe he could be ignorant,"—the offender was under prosecution. In this letter, after a confession that the writer "does not understand the nature of the business, the grounds of intercession are stated to be—that the offender has appeared to him to be a useful magistrate,—that the prosecution had (he fears) its source in malice,"—that "the matter concerns only ale-drinkers: and that to lessen the influence of a useful man unnecessarily is a great evil." Influence—usefulness—the import of these words in the vocabulary of the Treasury is no secret, and may be seen abundantly illustrated in the collection of cases of which this is one. Whom to apply to for impunity—through what channel—and on what grounds;—these are points on which, after perusal of these papers, a defrauder of the Revenue, whether he be or be not moreover a poisoner of his own customers, need not be much at a loss: at any rate, if, being a Magistrate to boot, he be, in the Treasury sense, a "useful" one. On the text Render to Cæsar the things which are Cæsar's, may moreover be seen the interpretation put at the Rectory of St. James's.

From the source from which the feet-washing ceremony would be to be deduced, co-extensive with the whole

So much for the Minister of religion: a word or two more as to the guardian of the Revenue.—House of Commons Papers—"Further Papers relative to Excise Prosecution," &c. Date of Order for printing, 28th March, 1816. Nos. 2 and 179. 1. Treasury to Excise, 23d November, 1814. "Insanity and revengeful malice on the part of Mr. B." (the erroneously supposed prosecutor), sole alleged cause, for directions "to suspend all Law Proceedings, until," &c.—2. Treasury Minute, 10th Feb. 1815. Penalties incurred £3,252; remitted, with the exception of £500 and the Crown's costs. Without specific evidence, and in the teeth of specific evidence, the delinquent's conduct pronounced, "honourable to himself, and beneficial to the community."—"Extortionate demands and malignant motives of the parties originally concerned in the prosecution," again recognized as the sole ground, and that a sufficient one, for the remission of the penalty in question. viz. £2,732, minus costs of suit.—3. Letter thereupon, viz. Treasury to Excise, 25th Feb. 1815, signed, N. Vansittart, B. Paget, C. Grant, junior, "requiring" the Excise Board to "stay"—i. e. put an end to—"the prosecution," upon payment as above.

So much for the individual proceeding in the individual case. Now as to the general grounds of it, in respect of reason, justice, policy, and probity:

human race is the moral lesson that would be deducible. Monstrosities and casualties excepted, every man has feet,

1. Here a portion of punishment is remitted: for justification of this remission, a circumstance brought forward as the ground—and that a sufficient one—is the alleged nature of the motive, by which the prosecutor was engaged to act in that capacity: the alleged motive being enmity. But a more completely and palpably irrelevant one, heart cannot conceive. On the supposition of guiltiness, the propriety of inflicting the punishment has been determined by the law: in case of not-guiltiness, the danger of conviction, and thence of undue punishment, can it in any the smallest degree be influenced by the motives by which the prosecutor was set to work?—Even in the situation of a witness, in no case has enmity been admitted as a ground of exclusion: Yet, so far as concerns matter of fact, on what has been said by the witness or witnesses depends altogether the fate of the defendant: but for that, let the prosecutor (i. e. his lawyer) have said what he will, it goes for nothing.

The motive or motives of the prosecutor being nothing to the purpose, an observation, which may alone seem almost superfluous, is—that, were it not for this motive, or for another motive, which, when any objection at all applies, viz. in the case of a witness, is regarded by the law as an objection of a still stronger stamp,—viz. desire and eventual expectation of pecuniary gain,—no delinquent could ever be convicted—no penal law be productive of any effect. Yet this still more objectionable motive is the very motive which the law itself sets to work, to obtain prosecutors (not to speak of witnesses) and on which, on that occasion, it places its sole dependence.

Oh, but (say perhaps the Right Honourable Guardian of the Revenue, and the Very Reverend Guardian of Religion and Morality—for, even from benches has an absurdity, which thus lays an axe to the root of all government been heard)—punishment (say they) ought not to be inflicted upon a delinquent, if the prosecutor has been actuated by any other than the purest motives: pure philanthropy—public spirit, disinterested love of justice—call them what you please: by that which it calls upon him to do in the capacity of a prosecutor, or any other,—whatsoever be the service which he renders to the public,—by these motives, and no others, ought he ever to be engaged to render it.—Well then, if so it be,—if in so disreputable, so irksome, and so expensive, a situation as that of prosecutor in a penal action, these heroic motives are not only extensively enough prevalent, but strong enough to procure a supply of public servants sufficient for public use,—how much more surely will they be so, for procuring it for the right honourable, and honoured situation of a Chancellor of the Exchequer,—or the reverend and every man has hands : water, or he will not live, must be within the reach of every man. Howsoever unworthy, no revered situation of a Rector of St. James's? But if so,—then, whatever pay is annexed to either of these exalted situations, is it not so much thrown away?

As for enmity to the delinquent—if, for giving impunity to that same delinquent, the existence of an affection of that sort in the breast of the prosecutor be admitted as a sufficient ground, never for the exercise of so God-like a prerogative can a Chancellor of the Exchequer be at a loss. How should he?—for, if any thing can be, the very act of prosecuting, is it not of itself a sufficient proof of enmity?

Suppose then that, for the impunity given by this Guardian of the Revenue to those who defraud it, the sole ground thus alleged will be uniformly and impartially acted upon,—no such defrauder will be punished, the revenue will be extinct, and the government along with it. But, let all this talk be the genuine fruit of the Catechism,—let all this purity be hypocrisy,—let impunity be hopeless to all but the comparatively few, who have it in their power to make themselves, in the Treasury sense, useful,—the constitution is indeed poisoned, but the government remains.—Which was to be demonstrated.

Note that, having been begun by former Chancellors of the Exchequer, this scheme for selling impunity for electioneering interest was completed to-day by the present one.—See the Debates of the Day on this subject, and the Acts of Parliament there spoken of.

Note, lastly, that—so badly are Acts of Parliament penned—and will continue to be penned, till the style used in this country be changed for the style in use in every other—in revenue cases as in others, unless a power of remission be lodged somewhere, persons not guilty against the spirit, will but too frequently be punished under the letter, of the law. But, by leaving the power in the hands of the subordinate Boards, the object of corrupt influence could not have been accomplished. Of those Boards, on the one hand, the members are in a situation of independence : their seats are theirs during good behaviour;—bating legal conviction of delinquency, for life :—on the other hand, they can and do hear evidence—special and appropriate evidence. The members of the superior board are such (need it be said?) so long as they do as they are bid, and no longer : as to evidence,—on any such subject, had they inclination, they have not so much as time enough to hear any :—unless proof of usefulness on the part of the offender be evidence ; and of this evidence the whole is contained in the names of the intercessors. Being impossible to be put to, is it possible the power should have been designed for, any other than a bad use?

less number of feet—no nor yet of hands—has by the unsearchable decrees of Providence been given to the paupers than to the Dean—no, nor than to the Archbishop.

One circumstance, which has been proved to belong to the bread-eating and wine-drinking source, cannot but be admitted to belong to the feet-washing scene,—and that is its not being particularly intended to receive any application, beyond the select company in which it was exhibited.

Not that that human being has ever existed, in whose instance, on this or that occasion, the demand for a lesson of humility might not have had place. But, for the planting and propagating of this virtue, lessons addressed to the boundless multitude had already been given by Jesus. On the occasion on which this feet-washing scene was exhibited, all that was needed was accordingly all that was given:—viz. a lesson having for its object the keeping down that spirit of ambitious contention, from which on so many occasions, the peace, even of this select society in particular, had unhappily received disturbance.

All the excellences above ascribed to the feet-washing ceremony being admitted to belong to it,—still it is only in the character of an indispensable institution, and on the supposition that—such being the hardness of men's hearts—the appetite for ceremonies is too keen to be left altogether ungratified,—it is only on this supposition, that at this time of day the establishment of any such ceremony can be seriously proposed. In a country such as this, for the institution of new ceremonies—especially religious ceremonies—the time is pretty well over. The ceremonies that are preserved and observed—it is rather because they are old established, than for any other cause, that they are preserved. Proposed now for the first time, scarcely would the self-same ceremonies be endured. By the hand of power, scarcely with any better effect than deception—scarcely for any better purpose than the production of that effect—can a ceremony, in the character of a religious ceremony, have ever been instituted, or kept on foot.

Not that in any human society—not that in this country more especially—not that on the rulers of the Church-of-England most especially—a lesson of humility, supposing the effect in any degree correspondent to the design, could ever be altogether without its use. The misfortune is—that in this country,—in the instance of that class of men in which instance the use of it is most urgent,—the greater the demand for this virtue, the more hopeless would be the prospect of a supply:—oh yes! the more hopeless—howsoever impressive in its lesson, and whatsoever were the source from which it came!—Have they not the Sermon on the Mount? Do they not feed with it their pauper children?—Have they not the parable of the Camel and the Needle? Have they not always had before them the mutually feet-washing scene? Have they not Lazarus? Have they not Dives?—Yes:—but with what fruit? Lazarus—Yes: to them it is Lazarus that is the object of scorn; Dives the object of imitation: universal, yea, and openly ostentatious imitation.—Yea: though with the other Lazarus in his hand this Lazarus were to rise from the dead, still would they cleave to their Mammon, so long as any the least remnant of it remained to them.

Suppose, however, for argument sake, that the reverse of all this is true: suppose that the times admit of such a ceremony.—On a periodical appointed day, in public view—in the view of the largest multitude, to which a simultaneous view of the same object can be afforded—suppose the Archbishop of Canterbury repairing to one of the Hulks, and then and there, with his own super-consecrated hands, washing the feet of a dozen of the inhabitants. On a scene of this sort, could any want of proportion—could impropriety in any shape—be charged? Between the Archbishop and the vilest inhabitant of those receptacles, is the distance in point of worth so great as was that between Jesus—whether God or not God—and the best of his Apostles?—Answer, ye Athanasians! Answer, ye Arians! Cease your groans! Cease your exclamations! Lay your hands upon your hearts, and answer if you can, with simplicity and truth!—By his own confession—his own most public confession, as often as he acts his part in the Liturgy portion of his Bead-roll—the Archbishop, is he not a “miserable sinner?”—If (what will but too frequently be true) the convict, be he who he may—the man on whom a stone from the tower of Siloam fell—is also a miserable sinner,—is it altogether so clear that he is a more efficiently, a more extensively mischievous sinner,—in how much greater degree soever a more miserable one,—than the Archbishop?—Unless it be the quantity of the mammon of unrighteousness—of the matter of the renounced pomps and vanities,—possessed by the Lord of the Palace, not possessed by the inmate of the Hulk,—exists there any scale of sinnerness—exists there any scale of miserableness—by which the sinnerness and the miserableness of the Archbishop can be measured, and shewn to be less—and by how much less—than that of the convict?

For four years last past and more, by means of the tissue of imposture which has here been brought to view, has not the Archbishop been engaged in the carrying on the scheme of anti-christian exclusion which has here been also brought to view? At any rate, in no such course of cool and persevering wickedness has the convict been engaged. Removed as he has been by his penal situation from so many of the temptations to sin,—perhaps penitent, and pure even in thought,—at any rate, pure in deed,—perhaps neither in all this time has he been actively engaged in any fresh sin. In the Archbishop on the one hand, and in the Convict on the other, who shall say that the parable of the Pharisee and the Publican may not already have found its exemplification?—Who shall say that in the same poor miserable sinner, that other parable, the parable of Dives and Lazarus will not find its exemplification, at another time and in another place? The costume of Dives, is it not the costume of the Archbishop, yea, even of his menial servants?

Let all this be said,—let it even be admitted for true;—and let it moreover be admitted, that never in any case—supposing it accompanied with any promise of efficiency—a lesson of humility could be more needed,—still recurs the question—whether supposing it administered, to and in the person of any such exalted sinners, and in any such shape,—it really would afford any adequate promise of being productive of so desirable an effect. Unhappily to this question no answer presents itself in any other than a negative shape.

In some eyes, the effect would be—not so much humiliation as exaltation. So prodigious the distance between the point of extreme depression occupied for the moment, and the exalted position occupied the whole remainder of the year,—the humiliation of the extraordinary state would but serve as a foil to the splendor of the ordinary state. Condescension—is it not one of the forms, in which pride manifests itself and magnifies itself?

To give to the scene its full stage effect, the principal actor would of course be furnished out with all the several appropriate articles belonging to the property of the theatre to which he belongs:—the lawn-sleeves, the crozier, the mitre, and the throne:—in a word, (with the exception of the palace), the whole apparatus of the renounced “pomps and vanities.” The other actors—or rather the patients—on whom the operation would be to be performed—would of course be the most comely individuals that could be selected out of the whole crew: and, for the occasion, that no infringement of the laws of Church-of-England decency might be discernible, would be new clothed; and the feet,—by way of preparation for this sacramental and solemn purification by the holy and most Reverend hands,—made as clean as unhallowed hands could make them.

In other eyes—(and not improbably of this number would be the greater multitude)—the ceremony being a novel one, and the imposing gloom of antiquity being wanting to it,—the idea of ridicule would obtrude itself, and shut the door against those moral ideas, for the calling up of which the ceremony was instituted. The representative of Jesus—(and could there be a more dissimilar one?)—this false Christ—would be quizzed, in and by the surrounding and staring multitude: quizzed, and by none more rudely and jovially than by his counterfeit Apostles.

In a word, in an exhibition thus theatrical,—acted the virtue would indeed be—but it would not be practised. What would be exhibited is—not the reality of it, only the appearance.

That the picture here brought to view is far from being altogether the work of imagination, is known to all who are in any way conversant with the ceremonies of the Holy Mother, whose good works in that kind, her revolted, though still on so many points obsequious, and sincerely sympathizing Daughter, has always been so well disposed to imitate. At Rome, on an appointed day, the Holy Father performs, in public view, and with no small solemnity, on the feet of his Cardinals (is it? or upon some less hallowed feet?) this emblematic ceremony. Perhaps, in the account thus given, the quality—either of the passive feet or of the operating hands—is not exactly represented. Settle the point with greater exactness let those eyes, which have more strength and patience than those by which the present account has been guided. What is certain is—that, among the ceremonies of the Church of Rome, this proud lesson of humility possesses a not altogether unobscured place.

To this scene, which in the original had the purest morality for its undoubted object, how minute, however, is the importance now attached, in comparison of what is attached to that other scene, which even at the first had no moral lesson for its object, and which from first to last has had such and so much mischievous morality for its effect? But of this neglect is there any difficulty in discovering the cause? Oh no, it is visible enough. Of the lesson which in the original scene was intended to be given, suppose but the imitation to have had its proper and full effect—its proper and full effect upon every body—upon spectators as well as actors,—equality would long ago have been the result, and hierarchy no where visible but in history.

The real purpose—the purpose which, as thus acted, the scene was really designed to have—was therefore that of increasing, as above, not diminishing, the distance between the hierarchy on the one hand and the profane multitude on the other. As to ridicule, laughter would not there be unpunishable as here.*

* Since what is above was written, the following passage has been observed in the Evangelical Magazine for May, 1816, p. 189.

FRENCH FANATICISM.—The ceremonies of the Last Supper being too painful for his Majesty, who would have been obliged to remain long standing, it was Monsieur who filled the place of the King in this act of piety, practised by our Monarchs from time immemorial on Holy Thurs-

Let us return to and conclude with the main subject—the bread-eating and wine-drinking scene.—Bible in hand, thus manifestly has the inapplicability of it to any general purpose—thus manifestly has the groundlessness and mischievousness of the Church of England ceremony deduced from it—as well as, in a greater or less degree, of any other ceremony deduced or deducible from it—been made apparent. Well, then—will condemnation—will so much as disuse of it be the consequence? Yes: if to established Churches—if even to any Churches, to whose tenets practice, howsoever blind and unreflecting, has given a certain degree of fixedness—the Bible were really the standard of opinion and practice. But to what established Church is the Bible the standard of opinion and practice? No: it is the very essential character of an established Church,—in so far as a written declaration of opinions is joined in by its members, and that declaration an unalterable one,—there exists in it a standard of opinion and practice, by which, as to every part to which that standard extends, the Bible has been turned into a dead letter, the modern composition in question being thus far established in the character of a substitute to it.

day. Thirteen children of poor, but honest parents, were admitted to the honour of representing the Apostles. They were all in red tunics, and placed on benches sufficiently raised to enable the Princes, without stooping, to wash their feet, wipe them, and kiss them. Every child received from the hands of Monsieur a loaf, a small cruise of wine, thirteen plates, and thirteen five-franc pieces. The Dukes D'Angouleme and Berry performed the functions of waiters, and brought the bread and wine and the meats. All these ceremonies were gone through with a piety and collectedness worthy the descendants of St. Louis.

Times, April 17.

APPENDIX, No. III.

REMEDIES TO THE MISCHIEFS OF THE EXCLUSIONARY SYSTEM AS APPLIED TO INSTRUCTION.

A WHOLE volume of condemnation—and what (says somebody) is the practical inference?—What is it you would wish to see done?—By what you have been saying, if there be any truth in it, mischief, to an enormous amount, has been brought to view.—Have you then any thing, and what, to propose in the character of a remedy?

Yes, verily: or of all that has been written for the exposure of the supposed mischief, not a syllable would by this hand have ever been penned. Of whatever wounds it may have happened to it to inflict, not one has ever been inflicted to any other end, than that which in the wounds he makes the Surgeon has in view.

In the course of the above pages, in the character of sources of the mischiefs brought to view, two systems have been pointed out: 1. The exclusionary system, as applied to the business of general instruction; and 2. That system of Church discipline, which at present has place in the Established Church of England.

In the prosecution of this remedial design, the first mentioned, least extensive, and more easily remediable of the two masses of mischief, will come under consideration in the present paper: the other, in the next No. of this Appendix.

1. As to what concerns the exclusionary system:—according to the hands, by which if applied they will be applied, two very different remedies present themselves.

Supposition the first.—As far as can be done without passing condemnation on any part of the doctrine or discipline of the established Church, the present rulers of the Society, self-styled the National Society—or, (what would be incomparably better), Parliament itself—(for thus all-comprehensive is the prospect that has already begun to open upon the subject) are ready and willing to throw open the seats and sources of instruction, to all whose parents, &c. shall be willing to send them in.

Supposition the second.—Persevering in the support given to the exclusionary system, the powers in question refuse to give their hands to any measures, the effect of which may be to diminish in any degree the efficiency of it.

On the first supposition,—of the course to be taken, the steps are already in some measure marked out by the National Society itself.—Among its lesson books, some there are, to which, for any thing that appears, no person, professing any of the known modifications of the religion of Jesus, could consistently object. These are—those which, in the list printed in Report II. p. 193, and, without alteration, reprinted in Report III. p. 172, are in the following order, respectively designated by the four appellations following; viz.

1. Sermon on the Mount.
2. Parables of our Blessed Saviour.
3. Miracles of Ditto.
4. Discourses of Ditto.

The Lesson-Books which, on this same plan of conciliation, would (it is supposed) be to be omitted, are those which, in those same places, are in the order in which they are here copied, designated by the four other appellations following: viz.

1. Broken Catechism.
2. Ostervald's Abridgment.
3. Chief Truths.
4. Mrs. Trimmer's Teacher's Assistant.

In addition to the above four last-mentioned, three other articles (being the only remaining ones) might perhaps—to judge of them by their titles in the above list—be found to require revision, for the purpose of expunging out of them all passages to which any denomination of Christians would by their known tenets stand engaged to object:—

1. National Society Central School-Book, No. 1.
2. National Society Central School-Book, No. 2.
3. National Society Central School-Book, No. 3.

This done, every discourse, which is not either among the Discourses ascribed to Jesus by one or more of his four biographers, or among the accounts respectively delivered by them on the subject of his Miracles, would be discarded: and thus the exclusionary system would be done away in so far as regards the children of all parents, &c. professing the religion of Jesus: always understood, that to the lesson-books discarded, no such others as would stand exposed to the like objections, shall be substituted.

To give completeness to this remedy, what would further be requisite would be—the abrogation or alteration of the instrument which has for its objects the shutting the doors of all these seats of instruction against all persons who, not being Members of the Church of England, would be desirous of serving in them in the character of School- masters. This is that which, in the Society's Report II., p. 197, is printed under the title of Form of Certificate for Masters, (No. IX.) and again, in Report III., p. 176., under that same title, (No. VII.)

Abrogation or rather alteration:—for, for the purpose here in question, after the slight alteration necessary to the exclusion of the exclusion, what remains would not remain open to objection.*

The misfortune is—that, supposing the door of the system of instruction to have been opened thus wide, still there remains in this country a native class of religionists—nor that in number an inconsiderable one—for the admission of which the opening is not yet wide enough,—and this is—that of the Jews.

In regard to these, on this particular occasion, small is the number of words that will be necessary to bring to mind two observations which elsewhere have been enlarged upon, in speaking of the exclusionary system, considered in respect of all the applications that can be made of it. One is—that these are human creatures. The other is—that, by any mischief, which, having been committed by a Jew, had its origin in a deficiency of intellectual instruction on the part of such Jew, the suffering produced in the breast of a Christian, will not be less than it would have been had the transgressor been of Christian, or any other non-Jewish, race.

* In Report III. p. 126. Omit 1.—“is a Member of the United Church of England and Ireland, as by law established.”

2. “and into the regularity of attendance on the service of the Church.”

To make the other requisite amendment in the description of the class of persons, whose attestation to the good character of the proposed Schoolmaster is required, to the words, “Rector, Vicar, or Curate,” add or “Minister of the Place of worship, at (here describe its local situation.) and by the society of Christians, calling themselves whereupon could follow the name of such Society: with an additional form of words, adapted to the purpose of giving admission to the people called Quakers, by whom, in their intercourse with the Holy Ghost, no official or professional person, under any such name as Minister, is employed.

Thus far as to the principle.—As to the mode—that for the giving admission to this, or any other class of men,—the use of these records of the religion of Jesus, should, in a course of instruction, applied to those who otherwise would have none, under a government professing the religion of Jesus, be, in the framing of a set of lesson-books, omitted,—can scarcely be a proposable expedient. But—what, in case of a system of really national education established by the Legislature, may without scruple be proposed, is—a declaration, having for its object the affording to religionists of that profession a full assurance,—that, by sending their children to any one of these seats and sources of intellectual instruction, it will depend altogether upon themselves to continue or not continue them in the profession of the religion of their ancestors: for example, a clause inhibiting schoolmasters, and all other persons, from holding, in any such National School, any discourse tending to engage any scholar brought up in the Jewish persuasion, to relinquish the profession of the Jewish religion. Remain still the professors of other religions, and non-religionists at large. But, for the extending to their case the application of this security, a very few words—such as the words, or any other persuasion on the subject of religion—might assuredly be made to suffice.

In the security thus proposed to be afforded, a precaution to the following effect is, however, necessarily comprehended.—In the whole scheme of instruction, written as well as oral, whatsoever discourses in any way relative to the subject of religion are employed, matters must be so ordered, that by no scholar, in and by any of the words put into his mouth, shall any thing be said, as to what he himself believes, but only as to what,—under the name of the Church or the Government, or whatever other name may be regarded as more apposite,—those, by whose authority the instruction is administered to him, believe.

Not less necessary is this expedient to the exclusion of insincerity out of the mouths and bosoms of the children of Church-of-Englandists themselves, than to the avoiding to exclude from the benefit of the instruction the children of heretics and unbelievers.

Nor, by the care thus taken to avoid inculcating immorality, will religion be divested of any part of her salutary influence. Be the discourse in question what it may, if upon understanding that you yourselves believe it, the scholar believes it likewise, you have what you wish: but, if not, will you, by forcing him to say he believes it, cause him really to believe it? No:—of the words employed in that endeavour the only effect will be—the inculcating in him the habit of lying, and adding to the number of his duties the daily practice of that vice:—of that vice, which is the pander to all other vices and to all crimes.

In your classical schools you cause him to read what Cæsar has related of his victories over the Gauls.—Nothing of all this do you ever force the child to say he believes: yet is it not, as of course,—and without any such certificate from Church or State in favour of it,—received by him as true?

Even where the narration has for its subject this or that act or discourse ascribed to Jesus himself, bad would still be the example, if—believing it or not believing it—(and to whom else could it be known that he did believe it?)—the child were forced to say he believed it. But, how much worse the example, where the act or discourse to which the declaration of belief is forced to be attached, is—not any discourse or act ascribed to Jesus, but this or that inference deduced from it—deduced from it by a set of presumptuous and tyrannical men,—while, by other men, in much greater numbers, inferences have been deduced to an effect directly opposite?

Cease to employ religion to eradicate morality—put but this bridle upon your passions—and all difficulties are at an end.

What is it that on this subject (naming it) the Church of England teaches?—Every thing that follows, being introduced by a question to some such effect as this,—thus while religion is planted, falsehood may, out of this part of the instruction at least, be eradicated.

What? shall we then suffer ourselves thus to be led by an enemy?—By no means: but thus led you could be—and blindly so, and by any enemy of yours at his pleasure, and that in every thing—in so far as any such determination were known to have been taken by you, as that of acting in contrariety to his declared wishes. Thus to lead you blindfold would cost him but a word: to the description of whatever course he would wish you to pursue, all he would have to do would be to attach a negative.

No:—for a warrant for turning away from the wickedness of the exclusionary system, of no such being as this apostate need ye know the existence. Look but to the Bishop of Norwich—look but to Sir Thomas Bernard. For a warrant for turning away from the wickedness of teaching children to tell lies, look into any one of your Bibles,—if, while distributing them to others, you can bear to look into them yourselves.

That in situations so far superior to all effectual responsibility, salutary impression should be made,—on hearts so effectually preserved by their numbers from all sense of shame,—is almost beyond hope. By a clergyman of unblemished character—a Member of their own Church—the Rev. Vicesimus Knox—in seventeen successive editions—now for some forty years, or thereabouts—the rulers of the University of Oxford have they not stood charged with keeping the whole body of their subjects—including all such Archbishops and Bishops as have passed through that school of corruption—constantly plunged—not in the indictable crime indeed, but not the less incontestably in the sin, of perjury? In all this time, any one of them, has he had the front to deny it? any one of them, has he ever manifested any desire of being cleansed from it? any one of them, for any thing that has ever appeared, has he ever had the heart to suffer any uneasiness at the thoughts of it? The sin is not an indictable one: and, with whatsoever justice stones from offended heaven might be showered down upon each guilty head, the hand by which upon earth the first stone will be cast is never to be found.

When, under the conscious guilt of perjury, and subornation of perjury, symptoms of contrition shall appear,—then, if ever, may be the time, when, in the shape here pourtrayed, Tyranny, with Hypocrisy and Imposture for its supports, may be expected to relax its gripe.

Meantime one remedy there is—which, happily for the cause of religion and morality, is, and can never cease to be, in the hands of the very persons, who, though so far from being the only sufferers, are, in the most immediate and certain way, the sufferers, from this tyranny.

Hard indeed would be the condition of mankind, if, while Vice had all power at command, Virtue should be without resource. Hard indeed—if, by interested tyranny, instead of being a means of salvation, conscience were, at pleasure; and without power of resistance, convertible into an instrument of mischief. No. By any such means as that of a promise to perform it, can an act, which is in itself pernicious, be converted into a duty?—A promise extorted by force from an agent altogether incapable of resistance? If, with a pistol to my throat, I have promised to murder my father or my mother, does conscience require at my hands the performance of any such promise? No: if, in the vigour of full age, a promise to act wickedly is essentially void, how much more clearly so at an age, at which whatsoever words the ear has been filled with, are made to come out at the mouth without any power of resistance.

Thus much as to promises. So in regard to assertions. By those fears of immediate and unendurable suffering, by which the child has been made to say, I believe this or I believe that—he at the same time not believing any such thing,—can it be made matter of duty—of moral or religious duty—to believe any such thing, or so much as to endeavour to believe it? If, by the fear of man, he has been made to persevere for years in the utterance of this untruth,—after his escape from this fear, would the fear of God be worthily employed, in continuing him in the utterance of this same untruth?

Thus much as to the child itself. Now as to its parents. A benefit of unspeakable value,—a benefit to which every member of the community has, for the sake of every other member, as well as his own sake, an equal claim,—is seized into the hands of interested tyranny, and participation of it is refused to all children, whose parents will not purchase it for them, at the price, which,—for the purpose of continuing all understandings and all wills in a state of prostration under this same tyranny,—is set upon it. This price consists in the utterance of a set of words expressive of the above-mentioned void promises, or of words expressive of the above-mentioned untrue assertions. By the utterance of no such void promises—by the utterance of no such untrue assertions do the mouths and the breasts from which they are thus forcibly and tyrannically extracted, contract—if when free they do but purge themselves of it, (for thus much has just been proved)—any such taint as that of sin or moral blame. By refusing to suffer it to give utterance to those empty sounds, shall the parent deprive his child—and by so doing deprive the whole community—of so unspeakable a benefit? By such refusal not only will he do this mischief, but by contributing to give effect to this same tyranny, he will have rendered himself an accomplice to it:—he will have been an instrument in its hands.

In the breast either of child or parent,—at that time, or at any succeeding point of time,—any such affection as gratitude, ought it to be excited by any such benefit, administered or proffered by such hands, and on such terms?

Indignation, on the contrary, should it not rather be the emotion of the moment? and this emotion, followed throughout life by the determination, by every practicable and moral means, to contribute to the rescue of the public mind from the gripe of this corruptive tyranny.

Happily the means are as simple and sure as they are obvious. Deny not to your children the proffered instruction: deny it not to them, even though these are the terms on which it is proffered. Poisonous, it is true, is the drug which has been purposely mixt up with it: but, to extract the poison, and leave the instruction pure, depends upon yourselves.

Day by day, as the course of instruction proceeds, as the enemies of morality and religion proceed in administering the pestiferous compound, let a salutary counter-instruction be given to them :—an instruction how to separate from the poison the wholesome food, and “ feed on it in their “ hearts”—feed on it, “ with thanksgiving” indeed,—but with a thanksgiving, of which a person very different from those their intended corrupters shall be the object.

From first to last, in speaking to your children concerning the instruction thus administered to them, let your discourse be to some such effect as this.—“ The arts themselves which you are learning—(the arts of reading and writing), are in themselves pure, and they are useful beyond all price. Among the notions which they are employed to infuse into your minds,—and but for which they would never have been thus taught,—are many which (as you will see in proportion as you see any thing in them), teem with immorality added to absurdity, in a variety of shapes. As the stock of your knowledge, and the strength of your judgment receive their increase, judge—and let the judgment be your own—whether among the assertions, of which these men force you to declare your belief, there be not, in more or less abundance, such as are false—among the opinions, such as are absurd—among the precepts, such as, in proportion to the obedience paid to them, would be productive—not of good but mischief.”

“ Whatever, then, under the name of a Catechism or any other they give you to say, say it—since so it must be : if, among the words thus forced into your mouths, the words I believe should meet your eyes or ears, say I believe accordingly. To the words with which they are accompanied, be they what they may, add (since there is no remedy) these inevitable words, as under the like pressure you would add them to a history of the Arabian Genii, or of the Grecian Gods. After this warning, it will not be matter of much difficulty to you to observe how different the sense of these much-abused words is, when thus applied, compared with what it is when employed in saying I believe sugar is sweet, and vinegar sour—I believe my father and my mother love me, and that it is a pleasure to me to love them. And above all—think not that,—because, under this compulsion, you are justified in saying I believe, where you do not believe,—you would be justified in the utterance of any such untruth where you are free.”

“As to your Master, by whose hand this compound of lies and nonsense is thus forced into your mouth, be sorry for him as you are for yourself. He, like you, is under a force. To yourself, unless with the unwholesome mixture, the wholesome instruction would never have been administered: to him, unless on condition of offering it thus defiled, the faculty of administering the wholesome food would never have been imparted. In him behold, therefore, not only a friend, but a fellow sufferer. In those, by whom this force is put upon him—in those high-seated and irresistible enemies of virtue, happiness, and of whatsoever in religion there is that is true—in those men, be they who they may, behold his as well as your enemies—his as well as your oppressors.”

“Take then, in these arts, the arms, which,—in the hope of seeing you employ them, in conjunction with these your oppressors, against the cause of virtue, happiness, and true religion,—will be put into your hands. Take them, but with the determination of employing them—employing them on every favourable opportunity—and to the utmost of your power—not to any such wicked purpose as that for which they are given to you, but for the generous and virtuous purpose of the rescuing your fellow countrymen from the chains to which you were thus forced to submit your infant hands; to rescue them and yourselves from the shame and thralldom by which you and they are thus oppressed. Serve them—yes : since thus to serve them you will be compelled. Serve them? yes. But how?—even as Baal, as you have heard, or anon will hear,—was served by Jehu.”*

Prepared by timely, and sufficiently repeated warning, to some such effect as above,—the juvenile ear will receive with due distinction the wholesome part of the instruction,—and neither will the head be weakened, nor the heart corrupted, by any poison that shall have been mixt up with it.

And thus too it is—that, at length, in the toils which they have spread for the innocent, the guilty, and none but the guilty, will be caught :—the mischief which they had imagined to do, will remain undone :—the good, which,—till the hope of converting it into an instrument of mischief opened to them, they beheld with no other eyes than those of contempt,—or, if not of contempt of fear,—the good which, but for that hope, they would have been the last to think of doing—this alone will continue to be done.

* To some such effect as the above, by some Clergyman, or other leading Member of each non-established Church—in that particular form which in his eyes shall be best and fittest for the purpose, might not a short warning be drawn up, and delivered to every member of such Church, who, at any one of those Church-of-England Schools has already a child labouring under this yoke, as well as to every other such member, who has a child, by whom in future he might wish to see the benefit of the useful part of the instruction shared?

Let it not pass unobserved—that to the adoption and use of the remedy thus proposed in the present work, it is not necessary that, by him who adopts the remedy, any other part of this same work—no—not that so much as any one other opinion advanced in it—or any one word in it—should be approved. All that is necessary is—that, approving of his own opinions, he disapprove at the same time, in a sufficient degree, the opinions and practices, inculcated in and by any of the Church-of-England formularies.

APPENDIX, No. IV.

REMEDY TO ALL RELIGIOUS AND MUCH POLITICAL MISCHIEF—EUTHANASIA OF THE CHURCH.

INTRODUCTION.—Under the religion of Mahomet, an auspicious prophecy has long been current—a prophecy by which its downfall is predicted, and can scarce fail to be accelerated.

Under that other adversary, and too successful rival, of the religion of Jesus*—the religion of the Church of England—a similarly foreboding voice has for some time been heard.

In the Quarterly Review has now, for some years past, been seen an instrument of defence—not to speak of offence—set up and kept up by the votaries of corruption in all its forms, for the defence of the system, against whatsoever attacks shall peradventure be made on it: made on it from any quarter, but more especially from the sometimes prudently generous, but always calculating and balancing, policy of the Edinburgh Review.

In the Quarterly Review, for March, 1816, may be seen a portrait of the Church, in her present convulsed

* Supra. Introd. Part I. § 9.

state: the patient in almost her last agony: powder-of-post the best remedy, which the resources of the Doctor can supply him with.

A picture of disease—of disease radical, mortal, and remediless—is a prophecy of death.

Well then, Messieurs Quarterly Reviewers,—uncrowned, but not unpaid “Defenders of the faith, and so forth,”—come and see,—and that a little more clearly than as yet you seem to have seen,—on what substantial ground this prophecy of yours is built.

Service—Pay—Discipline.—Under one or other of these heads may be condensed the most practical part of what presents itself in support of the demand for this innovation:—for this crowning super-innovation,—for which the system is quite sufficiently rotten, and for which the times will soon be ripe,—upon the innovation which, under the name of the Reformation, was, about 250 years ago, definitively made in the Church-of-England, by the Crown of England, upon the Church of Rome:—made—half with, half against, the good liking of whatever was good among the people of England: who, looking to see corruption extirpated in England, as it was extirpated or extirpating in Scotland, saw it only shifted in part from hand to hand, and shared between the Mitre, the Crown, and the two Houses.

§ I.—Plan of this Paper.

Throughout the whole course of this Volume, and in particular in the body of it, viz. in pages from 113 to 148, there has been but too much occasion to bring and hold up to view, this or that particular exemplification of the worthlessness of the system of Church Government of which the formulary in question is one of the principal instruments and supports. In further proof of the utter rottenness of this same system—of its complete ripeness for dissolution—the following recapitulation,—with here and there, for the sake of regularity and roundness, a word or two of addition,—may perhaps, in the eyes of a sincere lover of his country and mankind, appear not altogether ill-bestowed.

The system may be considered either in an absolute, or in a comparative point of view: i. e. by itself, without referring to any object other than the ends to which it is supposed to be directed,—or in comparison with other systems, that may be seen professing to be directed to the same ends.

In an absolute point of view it may be considered, 1. in respect of the ends or objects, to the attainment of which it professes to be directed. 2. In respect of its actual structure, by means of which it professes to direct itself to the attainment of those same objects or ends. 3. In respect of the effects actually produced by it, with reference to these same objects or ends.

The objects, to the attainment of which it may be seen, or, without injustice, presumed, to profess itself to be directed, may be comprehended under the following heads,—viz. 1. Advancement of Piety. 2. Advancement of Truth in Doctrine. 3. Melioration of the state of the intellectual part of the human frame. 4. Melioration of the moral part of the human frame, in the instance of the people taken at large. 5. Melioration, or at any rate preservation, of that same part in the particular instance of the Clergy. 6. Melioration of the state of education in all classes. 7. Increase or preservation of inward peace and comfort in the breasts on which it operates. 8. Preservation of the actual composition and disposition of the Government.

Service—Pay—Discipline.—Under these heads, for the purpose of the present brief review, will be comprised the arrangements, by means of which it professes to aim at the accomplishment of these same objects.

As to the effects actually produced by the system, they will need no other nomenclature or arrangement than that which has already been given to the objects or ends above stated as professed to be aimed at. Of these effects a brief sketch has been drawn up, but, for the present, the limits prescribed by necessity to the present work forbid the insertion of it.

As to those other systems which, in comparison with, and for the illustration of, the system principally in question, will all along be held up to view, they are—1. The equally Established Church of Scotland. 2. In one body (for, in relation to the three above-mentioned heads, viz. service, pay, and discipline,—they will be found to stand on all material points—all of them—on the same footing) in one body, accordingly, the several Non-Established Churches; understand of course Protestant Churches: for as to the original, and Universal Mother Church—the Church of Rome—no scrutiny into the particulars of her internal structure affords, to the present purpose, any promise of practical use.

For the mass of mischief here brought to view, nothing, in the character of a remedy, could present itself as affording any tolerable promise, but dissolution. Cacothanasia, bad death,—or Euthanasia, good death (to borrow a word from David Hume)*—under one or other of these names will the end of the system, whenever it takes place, be found characterizable.

* By Hume, in one of his Essays, the death of the existing constitution

The object here being of course to recommend that which presents itself as the good or happy death, in preference to the bad and afflictive one, the following section may serve to give an idea of the characteristic circumstance, by which the two modes of dissolution may be distinguished.

The mode and body of instruction and guidance, by means of the existing Liturgy, with the addition of Sermons,—is it by Church-of-Englandists generally approved of?—Assuming that it is so, it will be shewn—that, for the administering of this instruction and guidance, a distinct order of men, under the name of Priests,—according to the principles at present established in regard to doctrine, being completely useless,—and, for the keeping of this order of men to their duty, another distinct rank of men, under the name of Bishops and Archbishops,—of course equally useless,—thereupon, if both these classes of men were suffered to empty themselves by death without replenishment, the administering of instruction in this self-same doctrine, throughout the kingdom, without any variation, and with at least as much effect as at present, might be secured, so long as the government lasts;—secured, and that with a degree of plenitude and uniformity at present unknown,—and, so far as depends upon Sermons, with a degree of improvement altogether unquestionable, even by the most zealous Church-of-Englandists:—and that, thereupon, with increased security for the identity, and being considered as not far distant, absolute monarchy is stated as the form likely to be worn by it at its resurrection, and it is in contemplation of this result that the supposed approaching death is characterized by the name of a happy one.

with increase, moreover, to the efficiency, of the body of instruction at present administered by the Clerical to the Lay portion of the Church, the whole of the Ecclesiastical income of England, with the exception of a portion altogether inconsiderable, might be applied in diminution of those intolerable burthens under which the nation sinks.

§ 2.—Euthanasia—, in Contradistinction to Cacothanasia, what?—UTI POSSIDETIS Principle—Its Application to this case.

Before any thing further is said, either of the demand for, or of the mode and means of, reformation,—sound policy joins with humanity in paying homage to the saving grace of the uti possidetis principle.* In those international arrangements, by which war is terminated, uti possidetis—keep what each of you has got at present—forms but one out of a number of principles of pacification, among which the acting powers have to choose. In arrangements of internal national reform, in so far as concerns money and factitious dignity—in a word, as to every object of desire,—power excepted, which in this case can never be considered any otherwise than as held in trust,—the principle of uti possidetis admits of no other to stand in competition with it.

The case supposed to call for the application of this principle is this.—The Church of England system is ripe

* Uti possidetis—i. e. as you possess:—understand as added, though not expressed—so, you shall continue—after the peace in question, you shall continue to possess:—uti possidetis, possidebitis.

See Bentham, par Dumont Legislat. civ. et penale ii. Ch. vii. p. 31. For the principle there laid down, the present appellative is here ventured to be proposed.

for dissolution. The service provided by it is of a bad sort: inefficient with respect to the ends or objects professed to be aimed at by it: efficient with relation to divers effects, which, being pernicious, are too flagrantly so to be professed to be aimed at. Taken in the aggregate, the pay allotted for that service is excessive: the distribution of it being unequal in the extreme, it is,—while in the higher parts of the scale excessive to a degree altogether monstrous,—in the lowest, though in no instance perhaps deficient with reference to what would be necessary for the purchase of such inefficient service, yet enormously so with reference to what would be necessary for the purchase of good and efficient service from the class of hands proposed and supposed to be engaged. The discipline,—having for its professed object the securing, in consideration of the pay given and received, the rendering of the service professed to be rendered,—is, with reference to that end, eminently, not to say utterly, inefficient; but with reference to divers bad effects—and that to a vast extent—eminently efficient:—such are the propositions,—proofs of which will here be brought to view: such are the grounds on which,—on the supposition that the service must be preserved, the dissolution of the whole remainder of the system is called for,—including whatsoever regards the topics of pay or discipline.

On the supposition that,—taken in the aggregate, or at any rate, in a number of instances covering in the whole a great extent, it contains a portion of excess,—what, in respect of this excess, shall be the lot of the actual occupants?—Shall it be the same with that of the clerks, who, under the name of Supernumeraries, have, without compensation, been discharged from the service of the several Boards?—or, without taking any thing from the individual comfort of any of the actual possessors, shall it be carried into effect, as far as possible, upon the uti possidetis principle: that is, at the charge of none but the unknown and unascertained individuals, who, but for the change, would have become their successors?—The answer here proposed is—upon the uti possidetis principle.

By the uti possidetis principle, as applied to the subject here in question, what is required is—that, on the occasion of the change in question, every individual interested be, as far as may be, saved from the sensation of loss. It is by the nature of the tenure in question, on which the possessions in question are held, viz. in respect of its non-hereditariness, that room is afforded for a reduction of pay—and that to a very ample amount—without any violation of this tutelary principle.

Immediately on resignation, amotion, or decease, of any and every possessor of a share of and in the mass of emolument in question, let that share fall in, into the hands of government: to be applied, in alleviation of the public burthens, or to any other more beneficial purpose, if any such purpose can be found. It will thus take the destination that ordinary property in immovables takes on failure of heirs: escheat, from the old French, escheoir, to fall in, is, in this latter case, the word.*

To patrons of benefices—of such benefices, the patronage of which is in private hands—compensation must, however, be made: made it must be, or the uti possidetis principle will in so far be violated. But in this there will be no difficulty. The income of a benefice given, the marketable value of it, as ascertained by sales, and even by auctions—is no less well known, than that of a head of “cattle at a fair," and even rather more generally known than that of a seat in either House.

* On the occasion of the pretended reform, by stat. 53 G. 3. ch. 149. § 13. so far as concerns the interest of patrons, this dictate of justice was set at nought. See App. No. V.

On this plan, whatsoever unavoidable evil, in the shape of immediate suffering, is liable to result from change, is reduced to its minimum.

On this same plan, the provocation to resistance is, in like manner, minimized: and by this means, probability of success is so far maximized.

On the other hand, the good promised by the change is, it must be confessed, not maximized: it cannot come in otherwise than gradually, as possessors die off:—nor completely, till the longest continued possession has ceased.

But even taking into account the interests of piety and morality,—in respect of certainty—(viz. apparent certainty, with reference to human optics)—the good promised by the change, in all shapes taken together, cannot, it must be acknowledged, be with propriety placed, by any well-regulated imagination, on a level with the evil, which, in case of a violation of the uti possidetis principle, would be produced in all shapes taken together: the injury,—which, by the change would be done to the interests of piety and morality,—being, on this side also, taken into the account. This latter is not, like the pecuniary part of the benefit, capable of being expressed in figures: and sanguine indeed must be the estimate formed of the good expected, in this shape, if, under the convulsion that could not but be produced in that case by the enterprize, the gain to piety and morality would amount to an equivalent for the loss sustained in both those precious shapes.

At the Restoration, when, in conjunction with despotism, impiety and immorality were re-seated on the throne, true it is, that two thousand Church-of-England Parish Ministers of that day, were without compensation in any shape or degree, expelled—expelled at the instance and to the use of so many Priests, belonging to the Church which is now the Church of England. But, unless it be that of the Church of Rome, where are any examples to be found so bad—so unfit to be taken for a pattern—as that of the Church of England?—No: not a pattern was that, but a beacon: not a pattern to be pursued, but a beacon to be avoided.

Only to value, however, and not to form,—either according to reason or to custom,—can the uti possidetis principle be, in this case, understood to apply. When, for a public purpose of real or supposed utility, property belonging to individuals is deemed requisite to be employed, no scruple is ever entertained of causing it to change hands, so as what is regarded as being equal in value be given for it.

Accordingly, in what shape soever the income finds its way into the hands of the present possessor, whether, for example, in the shape of tithes or rent, no scruple need be made of selling it on public account, provided a government annuity to the full value be given for it. Income,—paid with a degree of regularity far short of that with which government annuities, granted for valuable consideration, are paid,—is regarded as a mode of remuneration sufficiently secure, in the case of the most necessary and incontestable service: sufficiently for those who risk life and limb, and health, for the purchase of it. To those to whose piety this security suffices not, give a draught upon Melchisedec.

In the case of tithes in kind, the form, independently of the value, being an inexhaustible source of vexation and ill-will,—property in this form should never pass out of the hands of the present possessors, without being extinguished for the benefit of the productive hands, on which at present this burthen rests; and for enabling those, and all other persons interested, to purchase this relief, all such legal facilities as are either already in use, or without injustice can be added to them, will of course be to be afforded.

On this occasion, the uti possidetis principle cannot, however, be fully carried into effect, unless due regard be paid to the pretium affectionis—the value of affection: that source of enjoyment and suffering, to the importance of which the Roman lawyers have been duly sensible,—the English as insensible as so many stocks or stones. Say pretium affectionis: not because for English use Latin is better than English; but because an expression,—which, being borrowed from any foreign, is stuck into the vernacular language,—affords a better chance, than can be presented by any correspondent expression taken from the vernacular language itself, for laying hold of the attention and fixing itself on the memory. Of articles susceptible of the pretium affectionis, instances are—a house, that, for any considerable length of time, has continued in the occupation of the present possessors,—especially if money of his has been laid out upon it,—together with any garden or nearly adjacent field:—but, in addition to these, scarcely among immovable ones will any other articles be found.

Subject to the above restrictions, so far as public economy would not be disserved by the anticipation, no reason can be assigned why the sale of a source of ecclesiastical income,—sinecure or not sinecure,—need wait for a vacancy.

As to tithes, in so far as a commutation of property from that into this or that other shape is regarded simply as a measure of political economy,—having for its object the diminution of vexation and the increase of produce—what is manifest enough is—that to the benefit, of relief from

in any shape or degree, expelled—expelled at the instance and to the use of so many Priests, belonging to the Church which is now the Church of England. But, unless it be that of the Church of Rome, where are any examples to be found so bad—so unfit to be taken for a pattern—as that of the Church of England?—No: not a pattern was that, but a beacon: not a pattern to be pursued, but a beacon to be avoided.

Only to value, however, and not to form,—either according to reason or to custom,—can the uti possidetis principle be, in this case, understood to apply. When, for a public purpose of real or supposed utility, property belonging to individuals is deemed requisite to be employed, no scruple is ever entertained of causing it to change hands, so as what is regarded as being equal in value be given for it.

Accordingly, in what shape soever the income finds its way into the hands of the present possessor, whether, for example, in the shape of tithes or rent, no scruple need be made of selling it on public account, provided a government annuity to the full value be given for it. Income,—paid with a degree of regularity far short of that with which government annuities, granted for valuable consideration, are paid,—is regarded as a mode of remuneration sufficiently secure, in the case of the most necessary and incontestable service: sufficiently for those who risk life and limb, and health, for the purchase of it. To those to whose piety this security suffices not, give a draught upon Melchisedec.

In the case of tithes in kind, the form, independently of the value, being an inexhaustible source of vexation and ill-will,—property in this form should never pass out of the hands of the present possessors, without being extinguished for the benefit of the productive hands, on which at present this burthen rests; and for enabling those, and all other persons interested, to purchase this relief, all such legal facilities as are either already in use, or without injustice can be added to them, will of course be to be afforded.

On this occasion, the uti possidetis principle cannot, however, be fully carried into effect, unless due regard be paid to the pretium affectionis—the value of affection: that source of enjoyment and suffering, to the importance of which the Roman lawyers have been duly sensible,—the English as insensible as so many stocks or stones. Say pretium affectionis: not because for English use Latin is better than English; but because an expression,—which, being borrowed from any foreign, is stuck into the vernacular language,—affords a better chance, than can be presented by any correspondent expression taken from the vernacular language itself, for laying hold of the attention and fixing itself on the memory. Of articles susceptible of the pretium affectionis, instances are—a house, that, for any considerable length of time, has continued in the occupation of the present possessors,—especially if money of his has been laid out upon it,—together with any garden or nearly adjacent field:—but, in addition to these, scarcely among immovable ones will any other articles be found.

Subject to the above restrictions, so far as public economy would not be disserved by the anticipation, no reason can be assigned why the sale of a source of ecclesiastical income,—sinecure or not sinecure,—need wait for a vacancy.

As to tithes, in so far as a commutation of property from that into this or that other shape is regarded simply as a measure of political economy,—having for its object the diminution of vexation and the increase of produce—what is manifest enough is—that to the benefit, of relief from

in any shape or degree, expelled—expelled at the instance and to the use of so many Priests, belonging to the Church which is now the Church of England. But, unless it be that of the Church of Rome, where are any examples to be found so bad—so unfit to be taken for a pattern—as that of the Church of England?—No: not a pattern was that, but a beacon: not a pattern to be pursued, but a beacon to be avoided.

Only to value, however, and not to form,—either according to reason or to custom,—can the uti possidetis principle be, in this case, understood to apply. When, for a public purpose of real or supposed utility, property belonging to individuals is deemed requisite to be employed, no scruple is ever entertained of causing it to change hands, so as what is regarded as being equal in value be given for it.

Accordingly, in what shape soever the income finds its way into the hands of the present possessor, whether, for example, in the shape of tithes or rent, no scruple need be made of selling it on public account, provided a government annuity to the full value be given for it. Income,—paid with a degree of regularity far short of that with which government annuities, granted for valuable consideration, are paid,—is regarded as a mode of remuneration sufficiently secure, in the case of the most necessary and incontestable service: sufficiently for those who risk life and limb, and health, for the purchase of it. To those to whose piety this security suffices not, give a draught upon Melchisedec.

In the case of tithes in kind, the form, independently of the value, being an inexhaustible source of vexation and ill-will,—property in this form should never pass out of the hands of the present possessors, without being extinguished for the benefit of the productive hands, on which at present this burthen rests; and for enabling those, and all other persons interested, to purchase this relief, all such legal facilities as are either already in use, or without injustice can be added to them, will of course be to be afforded.

On this occasion, the uti possidetis principle cannot, however, be fully carried into effect, unless due regard be paid to the pretium affectionis—the value of affection: that source of enjoyment and suffering, to the importance of which the Roman lawyers have been duly sensible,—the English as insensible as so many stocks or stones. Say pretium affectionis: not because for English use Latin is better than English; but because an expression,—which, being borrowed from any foreign, is stuck into the vernacular language,—affords a better chance, than can be presented by any correspondent expression taken from the vernacular language itself, for laying hold of the attention and fixing itself on the memory. Of articles susceptible of the pretium affectionis, instances are—a house, that, for any considerable length of time, has continued in the occupation of the present possessors,—especially if money of his has been laid out upon it,—together with any garden or nearly adjacent field:—but, in addition to these, scarcely among immovable ones will any other articles be found.

Subject to the above restrictions, so far as public economy would not be disserved by the anticipation, no reason can be assigned why the sale of a source of ecclesiastical income,—sinecure or not sinecure,—need wait for a vacancy.

As to tithes, in so far as a commutation of property from that into this or that other shape is regarded simply as a measure of political economy,—having for its object the diminution of vexation and the increase of produce—what is manifest enough is—that to the benefit, of relief from pressure in that peculiarly inconvenient shape, consummation could not be given, without extending it to such tithes as are in lay hands. But, compared with that benefit, the benefit here in question stands on ground, though in some part coincident, yet, on the whole, much more ample:—for, to all the benefit which has place in that case, the measure here in question will be seen to add others, which in that instance have no place. Hence it is, that, between the one and the other measure, no sort of connexion in any degree necessary has place: without the other, either of them is capable of being carried into effect.

§ 3.—1. Service.

Taking in hand the Church-of-England system in the character of the alleged cause, let us now, under the above several heads, viz. service, pay, and discipline—observe what sort of tendencies it exhibits with respect to the production of what is desirable in relation to the also above-mentioned ends: what loss, if any, in relation to those ends respectively, would be produced by the abolition of the system,—and, to the making up of any such loss, what measures promise to be best adapted.

1. First as to service. By service, understand service in all shapes, in which, in relation to the above ends, or any of them, may be reasonably expected at the hands of a beneficed Clergyman, in return for the benefit which in the shape of the matter of wealth, or in any other shape, it may happen to the benefice to put into his hands.

Considered as that, of which, by the exercise of lawful power, the performance may in some degree or other, by some means or other, be rendered more or less probable,—service takes the name of duty.

Professional and extra-professional—to one or other of these heads may all services, expectable at the hands of a Clergyman, be referred. Professional duties, those for the performance of which, the character with which the clerical person has been invested, is supposed to have rendered him apt, to the exclusion of, or at the least in preference to, any person not invested with that character: extra-professional, those of which it is understood that they might with no less propriety be performed by any other person, taken at large.*

Services or duties of perfect obligation—services or duties of imperfect obligation—to one or other of these heads may be referred all professional duties. The distinction is already in use: it may be seen in Puffendorf and elsewhere.

By duties of perfect obligation, understand all such duties, to the performance of which, by punishment or otherwise, a man may be compelled by the hands of law.

On request, or even on any adequate prospect of use, spontaneously contributing, in any shape, by advice and even by assistance, according as power suffices and occasion calls, to the welfare, everlasting and even temporal, of the several individuals committed to his charge—under some such words of general description may be comprehended the multifarious classes of duties, distinguished by the appellation of duties of imperfect obligation, considered by some in England, and by all in Scotland, as being attached to the Clerical office.

Of imperfect obligation they are called—for such is the term in use—in so far as the performance of them, not being

* Instances of Extra-professional duties are afforded by the reading of extracts from Acts of Parliament, Proclamations, or other discourses, the publication of which in this mode is prescribed by Government; also notices respecting marriages, briefs for collecting of alms, &c.

compellable by the hand of law, is no otherwise enforced, than by motives belonging to the religious or to the moral sanction.

Under the Church-of-England system, duties of perfect obligation are not to be found, other than those which are performed by the reading of certain discourses out of a book, unless it be the incidental performance of certain concomitant corporeal acts, in the way of vesture, posture, gesture, and locomotion.

Fixt or variable—to one or other of these two heads may be referred all the discourses thus to be read: fixt, the several portions of the Liturgy: variable, the discourses styled Sermons.

Thus, in the whole mass of the duties of an English Church-of-England Parish-Priest to the performance of all that part which is composed of duties of perfect obligation,—being the whole of what he can be compelled to perform—the whole of what any provision is made for his performing,—the whole of what there is any security for his performing—the whole which there is any reasonable ground for expecting to see him perform—and the whole of what, generally speaking, he does perform,—every human being that can read the discourses in question, is in some sort competent: competent in proportion to the degree of aptitude with which he is able and willing to perform this act.

Of the several portions of the above Liturgy, the reading is divided between the Minister and the Clerk: of the Congregation, such members as are at once able and willing, join and read in unison with the Clerk.

As in the part read by the Clerk, there is not any thing which the Minister would not be equally able to read; so in the part read by the Minister, there is nothing which the Clerk would not be equally able to read:—in both instances the language is the same.

If that part which is now read by the Minister were by the Clerk read in addition to his own, the labour of his lungs would by the whole amount of it receive an increase: but to the quantity occupied of his time no addition would be made.

The whole quantity of time occupied by the whole of the service is not greater than that which, by Ministers of other Churches, established as well as non-established, is commonly employed in preaching and praying,—without intermission or relaxation, unless it be by psalm-singing performed by the congregation, with or without a Clerk to lead them.

In the shape of service of perfect obligation, whatsoever, therefore, under the Church-of-England system, is done by the Parish Minister, might—and that without any addition to the quantity of time expended—be done by the Parish Clerk; or,—if it be regarded as requisite that a sort of drama should be exhibited, with two different classes of persons for the performance of so many different parts,—to any boy, who has been made proficient in the reading of the Bible, the part of the Minister might be transferred: and that without disadvantage in any assignable shape.

No:—for, of the actual Clerk the mode of reading (says somebody) is but too apt to be improper and unexpressive: that of the boy might, with but too much reason, be expected to be still more so.

True: but so likewise—and that by the very nature of the case,—is that of the Minister. By the perpetual habit of reading the self-same portion of discourse, the attention is confined to the sound, and detached from the ideas: the mode of utterance is not, in this case, as in the case of spoken discourse, governed by the sense.

Comparing the Minister with the Clerk—the actual Minister with the actual Clerk, upon a candid consideration there would probably on the whole be found some pre-eminence on the side of the Minister. But this advantage, such as it is, can it be regarded as forming any thing like an adequate compensation for the difference between the average of the pay given to the Clerk and the pay given to the Minister? does it vary and keep pace with the variation in the quantum of the pay, allotted in different parishes for exactly the same quantum of service? Does it vary from the equivalent for 10*l.* to the equivalent for the 7,000*l.* a year, which, in a certain parish in the Isle of Ely, is said to be the amount of pay actually received by the Minister, for which of course nothing is done, and by whom more is done than it might be altogether safe to state?*

True it is, that from instruction the art of apt and appropriate reading might, like other arts, be learnt: and if learnt, might, by an uncommonly strict and anxious attention, even though as here the discourse read were everlastingly the same, be, for a length of time more or less considerable, retained.

True also it is, that for this last half century, or a little more, in all England there have generally been one or two intelligent men, who have made it a profession to be teachers of this art.

But this is not among the arts so much as professed to be taught—much less among the arts actually learnt—at either of those highest seats of learning, from which,—with very few exceptions, and those still less favourable to any chance of instruction in this art,—the Church-of-

* Even by an anonymous writer, this, though not as a fact, may, without impropriety, be mentioned as an object for inquiry.

England pulpits and reading desks are supplied with occupants.

So much for the Clerk. But, transfer now the comparison to the actual and future probable Parish Minister on the one part, and the future probable Bell-taught and ulteriorly teachable Parish School-boy on the other part, the probability of pre-eminence will in every point of view be seen to be on the side of the Parish boy.

Into this boy, if it were worth while, the art of appropriate reading might, by instruction,—supported by premiums, suited in the moderation of their amount to the humility of his situation,—be infused: into the Parish Minister it cannot be infused. Unless it be by some accident too rare to be worth taking into account for any such purpose as the present,—in this shape no instruction has he ever received: if he has received any, soon, by the constantly operating attraction of gravity, as above, will it be pressed out of him: if he has not learnt it, never henceforward will he learn it: the days in which, if in any, any such labour would have been endurable, are long since past.

Thus much as to power. But inducement—possible cause of inclination—where is it? Unless it be in the minute number of those, to whom imagination may present this sort of proficiency as a possible cause of preferment—perhaps out of some score one—exactly no where. Nothing in this situation does a man suffer by the non-possession of this art: nothing would be his gain by the possessing it.

Among the duties of perfect obligation, remains the reading of the variable part of the mass of discourse, viz. the Sermons.

But to the reading of this variable part every person who is competent to the reading of the Bible, is no less competent then to the reading of the first part: the actual Parish Clerk, or the proposed Parish boy, no less than the Parish Minister.

Of the proposed substitution, the result, it will be seen, would be at least as unexceptionable and beneficial in this case as in the other.

In regard to Sermons, two results are desirable: the one positive, the other negative. The positive is—that to every congregation, within any assumed space of time—say a year—shall be administered in this shape such a body of discourse as shall be, in the highest possible degree, conducive to the ends of religious instruction as above particularized.* The negative result is—that to that same assembly, within that same space of time, shall not be administered any portion of discourse that shall, in any respect or any degree be adverse to those same objects: or at any rate, that if, contrary to intention, any such pernicious instruction be administered, it shall in quantity as well as quality be as little pernicious as possible. Say, then, for memory's sake—positive end, useful instruction maximized: negative end, pernicious instruction minimized.

Under the existing system, for the accomplishment of the positive one of these two ends, no security at all is or can, in the nature of the case, be given: for the accomplishment of the negative end, a sort of apparent security, yes: viz. by means of the system of discipline. But of real efficiency, under the Church-of-England system, owing to the inaptness of the system of discipline, this security will be seen to have little more than the appearance. See the section on Discipline.

* Supra, § 2.

Under the proposed system, to both those ends accomplishment might, and in this particular upon Church-of-England principles, be given with the utmost facility, and to a degree of perfection never before imagined, nor ever till now attainable.

At the time of the settlement of the Church under Elizabeth, the number of Sermons as yet published being very small, and moreover proportionably so, the number of such persons, as to the ability added the effectual inclination to compose such as should be at the same time useful to hearers in general, and acceptable to the ruling powers,—discourses, calculated for the conveyance of such instruction as was at that time thought expedient to be conveyed, were composed and printed by authority, under the name of Homilies: and to each Parish Minister a general invitation was given, as often as should be agreeable to him, instead of a sermon of his own composition, to read one of these Homilies.

On three of these Homilies, viz. those “on Salvation, “on Faith, and on Good Works,” much laud and earnest “recommendation” is bestowed by his present Lordship of London, viz. in p. 21 of his Charge so often mentioned. And, considering that by the same authority, by which warrant was given for the substitution of these three to home-made sermons, warrant was given for the like use to be made of all the other Homilies in that same book, there seems little need of apprehension, that in a practice thus authorized any cause for condemnation should, even by so rigid a censor as this Right Reverend prostrater of understandings and wills, be found.

Of these optionally employable discourses the number might receive any degree of extension, which in the eyes of government—whatsoever on this occasion be to be understood by the word government—might seem meet. If the portion of ground which, in the field of religion, was at that time covered by the aggregate mass of these Homilies, was sufficiently ample, much more would be the whole of the ground, covered by the aggregate mass of all the discourses which, under the name of Sermons, have been made public from that time to the present. Rich as is the stock of Church-of-England sermons extant, yet need not Government, whoever on this occasion he would be, confine himself within the bounds within which that stock, ample as it is, is confined. To the whole aggregate mass of all those discourses, which under that name, or of that nature, have at any time seen the light in any part of Christendom,—even the dominion of the Catholic Church not excluded,—this everlastingly orthodox, and everlastingly, as well as in every way “Excellent,” though fictitious person, might, on this occasion, extend his researches: nor,—so well assured as he is of his own excellence, and, in every thing but the name, of his own infallibility,—skilled as he accordingly is in distinguishing, throughout the whole expanse of that field, whatsoever is poisonous from whatsoever is wholesome,—neither the name of Catholic, nor that of Popish, nay, nor even that of Presbyterian, need awaken his apprehension, or disturb his rest. Wide as would be the field which would thus be open to choice, neither within the bounds of this vast field need choice, it being his own choice, remain for ever, no nor at any time, confined. Sermons, rising still higher and higher in the scale of excellence, if possible, than the most excellent of the existing ones, might, from time to time, according to the arbitrage of the same ever excellent Judge, be added to the whole of the first chosen stock, or in equal or greater quantity substituted to the least excellent portion of it.

But if, in quality of a succedaneum to home-made sermons, then present and then future,—a stock of fixt discourses, comparatively speaking, so scanty as is the Book of Homilies, (for in a moderate 8vo. they are all contained), were at that time deemed—and consequently at that time were and still are—fit and sufficient to be employed,—with how much fuller and more incontestable assurance of sufficiency—yea, and of comparative perfection—might a substitute be formed, by a selection made at that time of day, made by hands of acknowledged competency,—out of the entire stock of the discourses of this nature that have been published from the date of those same Homilies down to the present time?—To the collection thus proposed, give then the name of The Collection or Book of Homily Sermons.

By a single notice given, of liberty to employ at pleasure—and rather with praise on the score of canonical obedience, than dispraise on the score of indolence—in lieu of a home-made, or supposed home-made sermon, a sermon taken out of this collection, provision would in some sort be made for the accomplishment of the positive end above-mentioned. But, for the accomplishment of the negative end, an injunction, prescribing the exclusive use of this Collection of Homily Sermons, in lieu of all home-made Sermons, would be necessary: the prohibition of course not applying to the printing or publishing of any discourse of this nature, or in that name.

Nor yet, from the persons so deeply concerned in point of spiritual interest, need all exercise of private judgment, even upon the supposition of an exclusionary ordinance to the effect just mentioned, be taken away. For, in such a case, among jewels, all of them of the first water, the choice might surely, and without much danger, be left to any, even the least skilful hand. Let it be, for example, in the Churchwardens for the time being: each choosing a sermon by turns: in case of an odd one, supposing each to insist on the object of his choice, a precedent of unquestionable authority is at hand: let the one discourse in question be determined by the same arbitrage, by which—in the person of the posthumous Apostle Matthias—popularly elected successor to the traitor Judas,—a living fountain of eloquence, directed to the same ends—was set up.*

To the taste of the rulers of any Established Church, an institution of this sort might naturally be not altogether uncongenial, the power of selection being of course, as it could not but be, lodged in their hands. From the pulpit, at any rate, the two great bugbears, heresy and schism, would thus be most effectually and for ever excluded. Nor yet against the proposed institution could any such imputation be cast, as that of shutting the door against improvement. For,—so long as the choice remained in the same official, and therein ever competent, and unerring, and (if such be their pleasure) infallible hands,—the door to improvement might,—and without any the smallest danger, would—remain as fully open as it ought to be: and whatsoever in this unquestionable wisdom shall, from time to time, come to be deemed improvement, and not innovation, (for at no time will innovation ever be endurable), will from time to time, and for ever, be accordingly made.†

* Acts, i. 19 to 26.

† Note that in this way, by means of this one institution,—in the judgment, and for the use, of the three equally Established and eternally conflicting Churches—the English, the Roman Catholic, and the Scottish,—might be constructed three systems of religious instruction—all different—each excellent, each pure to the utmost degree of purity—and, without

In the days when the Church-of-England Homilies were first published, the time for tacking to the permission any such clause as the here proposed exclusive clause, including a prohibition put upon the reading of home-made sermons, was assuredly not come. But as surely, if it be not by this time come, always remembering the provision for continual addition proposed to be tacked to it, never at any time can it come.

In this as in so many other instances, thus it is that one and the same institution, which at one time would have danger of heresy or schism, each from the first to the last susceptible of ulterior excellence.

The time, at which the selection would, even in the first instance, come to be performed, being, at any rate on all subjects other than that of religious mystery, a time of comparative lucidity,—hence it is, that, even to a judgment by which all fixt forms without exception stood condemned, a Sermon taken out of a collection thus made, might be expected to present no inconsiderable probability, of being superior in value to an average sermon, delivered according to the existing practice, in the character of a home-made discourse. True it is, that, in the case of the home-made discourse, the time of delivery, and thence presumably the time of composition, would on each occasion be the then present time, i. e. on that same occasion the most lucid of all times. But in the judgments in question there seems little danger, that this advantage, such as it is, should be a match for the difference between individual and authoritative choice.

Under the Established Church of Scotland, neither the obligation, it being in this case altogether out of the question, nor so much as the unrestricted permission, to substitute a Homily Sermon to a home-made Sermon, could consistently be given: for of such a permission the effect would be that of an opiate, by which the life of piety, and with it of moral instruction, would be extinguished, and the whole Church reduced to that state of perpetual slumber in which it beholds its neighbour buried. But, for preserving the talent in unimpaired vigour, out of the whole number of sermons in the year, a number considerably short of the whole might suffice: and thus might provision be made for the incidental deficiencies which death, disease, and miscellaneous accidents conspire to render unavoidable.

been in a high degree mischievous, may, by change of circumstances, be rendered at another time clearly and highly beneficial. And yet there are those, who, thinking, or at least professing to have at heart the good of mankind, would, if they could, on the whole field of religion as well as government, shut an everlasting door against all change !

Come we now to the duties of imperfect obligation, as above defined.

Under the Church-of-England system, in here and there an instance,—one out of perhaps a dozen or a score,—a portion of time and labour, more or less considerable, may, in his own parish possibly, or even elsewhere, be seen employed in this walk of beneficence by a Church-of-England Parish Priest. Instances of this sort are even known, and with heartfelt pleasure viewed, and with the most cordial respect and affection requited—by the author of these pages.

But when and where any such good habit obtains, it is only as it were by accident : and, though without the name, the footing on which it stands is exactly that of a work of supererogation :—a work of which, while the non-performance passes altogether without notice, the performance is considered as matter of extraordinary merit : merit so extraordinary, as to make atonement for the eleven or the nineteen instances, in which all those good things, which should have been done, are left undone.

Necessary to the performance of duty in this line is the possession of a correspondent stock of information in that line of appropriate science, which may be termed Pastoral Statistics : an acquaintance with the population of the parish, in respect of all those circumstances in which the faculty of exercising these beneficent and pious acts with advantage depends : and as a part of it, an acquaintance with all the several dwellings in the parish, together with the persons of their respective inhabitants. Inherent in the constitution of the Church of England, may be seen to be the branch of ignorance correspondent and opposite to this science : call it anti-pastoral ignorance.

In so far as it is the necessary consequence of Non-Residence, this ignorance, though in this case not the less vicious, may be referred to the known category of invincible ignorance.

Of the fulness of pastoral statistic knowledge, imagination cannot figure to itself a more complete, a more incontestable, a more honourable proof, than that which has so long been exhibited in and by the work edited by Sir John Sinclair. Parishes in Scotland, 895 : of the state of every one of them an account more or less instructive : and of all these accounts not one but was furnished by the Minister either of the Parish itself,—or in case of accident,—for example, death or temporary infirmity,—by the Minister of some adjacent Parish.

In and for England, whatsoever wishes may, under the influence of envy and shame, have been conceived towards the formation and delivery of any such account, have, by obvious impossibility, ever been rendered abortive.

Of this impossibility, as to a vast proportion of the whole number, the cause may be seen in the Returns made to the House of Commons on the subject of Non-Residence.*

* Among the papers, printed by order of the House of Commons, are to be seen Returns respecting Non-Residence for the three consecutive years, 1809, 1810, and 1811. In those for 1809, 11,194 being given as and for the total number of Incumbents, and 3,836 as and for the total number of Residents,—this leaves, for the total number of Non-Residents in that year, though not summed up, 7,358. In the next year, 1810, the total number of Incumbents is sunk from 11,194 to 10,261 : decrease 933. But while there is this decrease in the total number of Incumbents,—Residents

Of Non-Residence, a necessary consequence is Anti-pastoral Ignorance. Unfortunately, not quite so necesand Non-Residents taken together,—the total number of Residents is increased from 3,836 to 4,421: increase 585: the total number of Non-Residents consequently diminished from 7,358 to 5,840: decrease 1,516. In 1811, the total number of Incumbents rises again: though short of the total number for the first year, 1809, by 393; it rises from 10,261—the number for the second year, 1810—to 10,801: increase 540: but, in this third year, 1811, while the total number of Residents increases no more than from 4,421 to 4,490—increase 69—the total number of Non-Residents increases from the 5,840 to 6,311: increase 471.

In each year, to some purposes, and, amongst the rest, the one here in question, allowance will require to be made for the case, which, in the Return for the year 1809, is, by the Bishop of Norwich, termed the case of virtual residence. This is the case of those who, although the Parsonage House is not the place, or among the places, of their respective residences, are, in the Returns, stated as being persons who “perform the Duties of their Parishes.” Of these, for the year 1809, the number expressly stated as being in this case, is 565: to these add 105, that being the number whose case is stated to be that of “Residence in a Mansion within the Parish, belonging to Incumbent or Relative,”—in which case the performance of duty, though not expressly stated, may (it is supposed) be presumed,—(though in these cases, if it really had place, it seems odd enough that it should not have been so stated)—with this addition, the total number of these Virtual Residents for that year will be 670. For the year 1810, without the addition of the numbers contained in this uninclosed case, it appears to be—what in the Earl of Harrowby’s Speech (pp. 3 and 19) it is stated to be, 970; with the addition, (viz. 62) 1032: for the year 1811, (which year, though the date of that Speech is 18th June, 1812, appears not to have come under his Lordship’s cognizance) it appears to have increased to 1433: with the like addition (added number 68) 1801. The Earl of Harrowby not having numbered among the “DOERS OF THEIR OWN DUTY,”—(to use his Lordship’s words)—those who though “residing in a Mansion within the Parish,” have taken out Licences for Non-Residence,—is it possible, that, after all, by none of the individuals belonging to this omitted class, though residing, all of them, within their Parishes, any part of the duty of it was done?—The question seems not altogether an unnatural one: for any answer to it, no other data are to be found. That, among the Incumbents returned as non-resident, a distinction should be made, in respect and in favour of those who, notwithstanding such their Noncessary is the connexion between the two opposites:—between Residence and Pastoral Knowledge. The drawing-room, the dining-room, the cellar, the stable, the dog-kennel, of the Lord or Squire—with the state of all these agreeable receptacles, under the Church-of-England system, the most perfect acquaintance may, without any over-weening confidence, be expected at the hands of the Resident Minister, where there is any,—whether Rector, Vicar, or Curate: here is comfort in præsenti; here is hope of glory in futuro. But the poor inhabitants and their wants,—not altogether unhonoured are they, if to the man of God as many of their names are known, as of those of his Lordship's hounds.

Compliments and observations on the place and the Residence, “perform,” or “do their own duties,” is undeniable. Unfortunately, altogether vague, however, is the best information which it can afford. As to the duties of perfect obligation,—whether in the parish in question the Incumbent resides or not,—such duties, as by law he is obliged to do, it may be presumed he does: all these in both cases, but not any more in either case. If so, then are the duties of imperfect obligation the only ones, in regard to which Residence or Non-Residence can make any difference. In regard to these, so far as concerns the actual performance of them, very little difference probably has place; but, in regard to physical facility as to the performance of them, it is susceptible of variation upon a very large scale. Many are the cases in which two contiguous livings are held by the same person: in these instances it may happen, that the distance of the Parsonage House from the Church, which it does not belong to, is not so great as from the Church which it does belong to: thus stands the matter at one end of the scale: at the other end, stands the case in which the distance of the officiating Minister's place of residence from the Church of his Parish is so great, that, if not all his powers, all his reasonably expectable exertions, are exhausted by the riding to the Church once every Sunday to do the necessary duty there, and then back again. In any system in which the exigencies of the service constituted the standard of reference, two or three contiguous parishes would, in many instances, be united: and, in these instances, a proportionable number of cases of Non-Residence would thus disappear.

weather omitted, follows a dialogue between a zealous Church-of-England Bishop and the Oxford Graduate.

Zealot.—What? Give a Parish boy the Holy Ghost? Give this urchin the power to remit or retain sins?

Graduate.—Why not? As to the Holy Ghost—whatever he or it is—either he or it is, or is not, at your disposal: if he or it is not, why pretend to dispose of him or it? If he or it is, what should hinder your giving him or it to the boy, as well as to them to whom you are in use to give him or it? As to the power of remitting or retaining sins,—produce this power of yours: shew any such restriction in it, as can prevent your giving it to the boy, or to any one else to whom you would please to give it? “Whose soever sins ye remit, they are remitted to them; and whose soever sins ye retain, they are retained.” Thus said Jesus (John, xx. 23.) to his Apostles. If then ye are the same person, each of you, as one of those same Apostles, ye can, every one of you, remit sins—the sins of any sinning creature: if ye are the same person, each of you, as Jesus, ye can give to any rational creature this same power of remitting sins. In this case, ye can, with exactly as much ease, give this power to the Parish-Boy, as to the Parish-Minister.

Zealot.—Give it to the urchin?—Well:—suppose as much. But if he had it, would he not abuse it?

Graduate.—Not he indeed. If you yourself, for example, are Jesus, that will be your care; and not any the least danger is there of your giving the power to any creature that will abuse it.—But neither will he, if, for argument sake, you are not Jesus. When, by a priest of your making the sins are forgiven, still it is always according to your Rubrick, and your formulary of Absolution. By the Rubrick effectual security is afforded, against all abuse in respect of the occasion on which the operation is performed, and by that means in respect of the persons on whom it is to be performed; and, by the formulary, against any abuse in the mode of performance. If he varies, this holy person, from the formulary, though it be but an iota, the operation is void, and the sins are not forgiven: ask Sir William Scott else, or Mr. Justice Bailey, or Mr. Justice Parke.

Zealot.—Oh, but to give the boy these powers, would be to give him Priest's Orders: and he is not so much as in Deacon's Orders.

Graduate.—Priest's Orders! Deacon's Orders! Where did you get these Orders? From Jesus? Alas! no. From whom then? Even from the Whore of Babylon, alias Holy Mother Church. Why did you ever quit her? Go back to her—get absolution from her and make your peace. From her you may have a whole heap more of Orders, one upon another: all of them under Deacon's, each of them conveying altogether as much inspiration as can be conveyed by Deacon's. Turn to the Acts of the Apostles. What else was a Deacon but a manager of the common funds? Whatsoever a Deacon was then, is not a Churchwarden now?—Well, if you cannot part with your Deacon's Orders, keep them then: it need make no difference. You cumulate Divinity Degrees (in your Universities I mean):—you cumulate the two Divinity Degrees:—what should hinder your cumulating these two Orders?—True it is, that when, on his way to the priesthood, a man is as yet but a Deacon, he has no power of himself (you say) to forgive sins: all he can as yet do is to beg of God Almighty to forgive them,—who, therefore, on this particular occasion, is left to do as he pleases: accordingly, instead of the Absolution, what the Deacon reads is no more than a Prayer: it is only when, by having been made to receive the Holy Ghost, he the Deacon has been transformed into a Priest, that he receives this power: and then and thereafter it is, that, immediately upon his pronouncing the Absolution, the sins vanish off the score, whether God Almighty pleases or not:—or else where is the difference?—The implied confession thus put into the Deacon's mouth—the confession of his own incapacity to pronounce the Absolution—of the incapacity he labours under, as to the forgiving the sins otherwise than with the help of the Almighty—is one of your contrivances—and a more ingenious one could not easily have been hit upon—for satisfying the people, that the incapacity will be changed into power, as soon as the Deacon is ripened into a Priest. The boy, be he ever so young,—if he says, or is supposed to have said his Catechism, you give him Confirmation. What then should hinder your giving him Deacon's, and Priest's, or any other Orders, at the same time?—It will be so much trouble saved: and, generally speaking, you are not overfond of trouble. After all, if it be more agreeable to you to take two ceremonies to do it in than one, so be it.

One word more. The power of forgiving or retaining sins, and thereby of sending any body to heaven or hell at pleasure being given, how came you—aye, and how do ye now continue to be—so barbarous, as to send men in such multitudes to hell—aye, or so much as a single one of them?—Why do you leave any man's sins unforgiven? Why do not you keep on forgiving sins as fast as they are committed, and thus send every body to heaven?

Zealot. Sir, we know better things. Sir, if I were to send to heaven a man who ought to go to hell,—yourself, Sir, for example,—this would be a sin, Sir,—and a most enormous sin,—and God would send me to hell for committing it.

Graduate. Not he, indeed: if you would but manage properly, as you might do without difficulty. Take to yourself, for example, one other man endowed with the same useful powers. At the same instant, each of you forgive, in one breath, all the sins of the whole world,—those of his partner included,—and in particular, for fear of mistakes, this last sin, which consists in the forgiving of all the other sins. This done, what sin is there left, for which God could send you to hell, or do any thing else to you that you would not like? Now then, if hell overflows, and heaven is almost a desert, with none but a few choice Church-of-Englandists to roam about in it, who is it that is to blame?—Who but you and yours?

Zealot. Alas! what is all this but ridicule?—And ridicule—can it, even in your own estimation, be considered as fair argument?—fit to be made use of as a test of truth?

Graduate. That depends upon where it is fetched from—whether from without or from within. If from without, no: as if, for example,—in speaking of your notion about causing a man, by laying your hands upon his head, and speaking certain words to him, to receive the Holy Ghost,—I were to compare you to a juggler, who making as if he had put a ring into a box, gives it to a man to hold, who, upon opening it, finds there is no ring there. Here the way in which ridicule cast upon the serious and important subject is cast, is—by presenting to view along with it another subject, which is in itself a trifling one, and has not any connection with it, material to the purpose in hand.

But if it be by matter taken from the subject itself, and necessarily belonging to it, that the ridicule is reflected upon it, no argument can be fairer: nor can there be in this case a fairer test of truth,—i. e. a surer proof that what is given for true is not so,—than what is applied, when, by the matter thus drawn from the notion itself, the quality of ridiculousness is shewn to belong to it. Such is the case, in so far as any position, which is either a necessary consequence of the one in question, or necessary to be advanced to form a ground for it, is to a certain degree absurd: viz. to such a degree as to appear ridiculous:—the more palpably absurd it is, the more flagrantly ridiculous.

Thus as to this notion of yours—this notion of your having power to give power to other men to remit sins. What ground do you produce for it? What other than the above passage in St. John's Gospel, in which he speaks of Jesus as conferring this power on his Apostles. Now then, (say I), there is only one supposition, on which, by his conferring it upon his Apostles, he has conferred it upon you: and that is—your being the same persons with those his Apostles. Necessary is an assumption to that effect to the proving of your having any such power: or—to take it the other way—assuming that, in consequence of what Jesus thus said to his Apostles, you have this power,—it follows that you are the same persons with those his Apostles. But—this notion of your being the same persons with those Apostles of Jesus—to such a degree, in my view of the matter, I must confess, is it an absurd one, that if it be not a ridiculous one, I know not where any such notion as a ridiculous one is to be found. To come then to the principal notion—viz. that of your having the power to remit sins, or to give to any body else that same power—the cause of the ridicule cast on it, is it any thing external and foreign to the notion itself? No: it is a quality, not only belonging to the notion itself, but inseparable from it: viz. its requiring this other undeniably absurd and ridiculous notion for a necessary support, or including it as a necessary consequence. Exhibit it with its necessary supports and consequences, no otherwise than by misrepresentation can this, or any other notion, which is thus in itself ridiculous, be made to appear not ridiculous.

Let but this be received as law, viz. that nothing that, in the exercise of their power, has on the subject of religion been advanced by men in power, is to be caused to appear ridiculous,—then may every thing which is not only most absurd, but most mischievous as well as absurd, be advanced by them without possibility of contradiction,—and, for want of refutation, assent by force of authority procured to the most pernicious notions, practice altogether governed by them,—and the public mind reduced to the state in which it is already in Spain, and, thanks to those who rule in England, will presently be in France.

Zealot.—Well, Sir, you seem to be talking all this while very much at your ease, but will you find it altogether so easy to exculpate this talk of yours from the charge of blasphemy?

Graduate.—This depends upon what you mean by blasphemy. If it be language intentionally expressive of, or proceeding from, disrespect towards the Almighty,—towards a being believed by myself to exist, and to be Almighty,—neither on this present occasion is any such blasphemy to be found in me, nor on any occasion in any man whatsoever has any such blasphemy been found, unless the man were absolutely and literally mad. Not being mad, no such sentiment towards the Almighty do I entertain,—of no such sentiment is this or any other language of mine intentionally expressive. In this sense then have I as easily as effectually exculpated this my talk from the charge of blasphemy. But, if this be not what you mean by blasphemy,—then, unless you mean by it something that, under that name, is punishable by law, or deserving of disapprobation at the hands of public opinion,—which is what I believe you would not find it very easy to prove,—call it by that name if it be any satisfaction to you, you have my free leave for it.*

* On every part of the field of religion—whether a man be in power or not—but more particularly if he is—this way of thinking, speaking, and acting, is unhappily but too generally prevalent. Whatsoever are the opinions which he entertains, or professes to entertain,—what he all along insists upon is—that they are God's, and as such ought by every man to be deemed and taken to be:—yes, and accordingly spoken of by every man who takes the liberty—a liberty on this hypothesis equally audacious and inconsistent—of contesting them: yes, and this at the very time, and all the time, that he is contesting them: all this on pain of being subjected to the punishment, or at any rate to the reproach, of blasphemy.

Now then if so it be that the man in question—the self-constituted and intolerating censor—is the Almighty, then as above, true it is, that the language, by which any disrespect is cast upon any such opinion of his, is blasphemy: on this supposition, but not otherwise.

History speaks of a man, who, fancying, or pretending to fancy himself, to be Jesus, went about the country declaring himself so to be to every body who would hear him. This man spoke out. For prostration of understanding and will, as towards himself, by this vagabond, supposing him impudent enough to call for obsequiousness in that shape, the ground was explicitly declared. Comes his Lordship of London, and,—addressing himself to the Clergy, his subordinates, and through them by means of the press to the public at large,—informs them of a case, in which obsequiousness in that same abject and unreserved form will be due to, and as such may be called for by, themselves. To these men will it then really be due? Yes: if they be, each of them, Jesus,—but not otherwise. Thus then does he encourage and virtually command them, each of them, to give men to understand that he is Jesus.—Command them? How? in explicit terms as the vagabond did? No: only by necessary implication: nothing more: in that lies the only difference. To be himself the one Jesus, will even that satisfy him? Not it indeed: Jesuses must he have, and by hundreds, for his subordinates.

Dismissing the Bishop, take any controversialist at random, so he be a religious one, this assumption of his being God—every one who on the Zealot.—Oh, but the decencies ? Put this low-bred Parish-boy in the place of the University-bred and points in question agrees with him, a God—each of them the one only God—is but too apt to run through all his discourses, and to be among the postulates, which all his demonstrations take for their ground. Nor will even this satisfy him. For, when you have a dispute with him, you having the boldness to contest this or that one of his tenets,—what he virtually requires of you is—on your part a virtual admission that such is the case. Whatever assertions the tenet contains,—yes, and whatever assertions he comes out with, in defence of them,—they must be, all of them, deemed and taken to be so many assertions made by God, and on that supposition must the language employed by you in speaking of them be grounded. Supposing them then absurd,—and that to such a degree as to be ridiculous,—may you represent them exactly as they are? No. Will he endure that you should?—Not he indeed. For, as by the implied postulate he is God, his assertions are God's assertions, which being true, they cannot be, any of them, ridiculous: and to treat any of them as such is blasphemy; and you, so treating them, are a blasphemer: and blasphemers are such wretches, no treatment can be too bad for them. On every such occasion, all along, in giving expression to these opinions of his, he, on his part, takes care, of course, to employ such language as imports them to be so many just objects of the most prostrate veneration. In any defence he makes of them against any attacks, all along he thus keeps taking for granted that which is in dispute. In all this there is nothing but what, though not altogether logical, is, considering the nature of the subject, natural enough, and at least excusable. But neither will this satisfy him: for, on your part, the language used by you, in relation to these assertions of his, must be of such a sort as to convey an implied confirmation of the grant. In themselves they are so absurd as to be ridiculous. Representing them as venerable, what you would say of them would be a misrepresentation. Yet in this misrepresentation he insists that all along you shall join, or all your arguments are so much blasphemy.

The misfortune is—that if the notion a man has advanced is to a certain degree absurd and ridiculous, and it has fallen in your way to shew it so to be,—in so doing you have unavoidably been testifying towards the man himself a certain degree of disrespect: for in proportion as what, on any occasion, a man says, is seen to be ridiculous, in that same proportion does he become the object of the sort of sentiment called disrespect. Irritated by this disrespect—irritated, and, by the irritation, his judgment to such a degree disturbed, as to cause him, in the view he takes of the regularly ordained Priest, what will become of the de- cencies?

matter, to mistake one person for another—the disrespect thus shewn to him, and this notice of his, he fancies, or pretends to fancy, is disrespect shewn to the Almighty. To the Almighty?—Yes: if he and the Almighty are one and the same person—(a proposition which, by the bye, may as easily be true as that any three persons are but one):—Yes, if he and the Almighty are one and the same person, but not otherwise. But as for you, you for your part do not believe him to be the Almighty: therefore, whatsoever disrespect you may unavoidably have been testifying, it goes no further than your antagonist—it reaches not the Almighty.

That, to whatsoever object or objects applied, three and one are the same number, this, for example, (you say) is a notion so absurd as to be ridiculous: as such you accordingly, if you speak of it without misrepresentation, cannot avoid representing it.—Alas! (cries he) this is blasphemy: this is blaspheming the Trinity: this is blaspheming God: this is treating the Almighty with contempt.—Treat the Almighty with contempt?—not you indeed. With contempt enough indeed, what is but natural, and indeed scarce avoidable, is—that on this occasion something or other should be treated by you: for example, this notion of his—that in that instance, or any instance, applied to the same object (or objects shall we say?) three and one are the same number. After putting on this occasion person for God, as on other occasions he would put person for a man, to say that three God-persons are but one God, is exactly the same absurdity—exactly the same self-contradictory proposition—as to say of three man-persons (three brothers, for instance) that they are but one man: of a proposition thus self-contradictory,—by no evidence, that ever was contained in a book, or ever could be contained in a book,—can the truth be proved.—Away, away! cries he: what is all this but blasphemy!—And so the dispute ends, by his going to a lawyer for advice, whether he cannot give himself the satisfaction of seeing you punished,—and out of the Judge's tender mercy, forced to tell a barefaced lie under the name of recantation, to save yourself from further punishment.

This word blasphemy, in the meaning at present attached to it, for what sort of purpose is it employed? Only to serve as a cloak for some injury, which he, by whom the word is employed, labours thereby to do, to him to whose discourse it is applied: to render him an object—if not of legal punishment, at the least of public hatred, for expression given to this or that notion, opposite to those entertained, or professed to be entertained, by him, by whom the word is thus employed.

Con-

Graduate. Well then, as to the decencies. Unless by the decencies you mean the 10*l.* a year, or the 7,000*l.* a year, or some intermediate sum given for doing something

Considering the use which it has thus been put to, and the mischievous passions of which—and with but too much success—it is, almost as often as employed, endeavoured to be made the instrument,—great would be the service done to mankind, were it possible to extirpate it out of all language.

Next to the extirpation of it, is the laying the root bare. Like almost every other word that has been used with reference to God or Gods, it was of course first used with reference to man. Used with reference to man in the Greek (from which so large a part of the language of technical religion has been derived), compounded, as it were, of two words, one of which signifies injury, the other reputation, it meant neither more nor less than injury to his reputation. Blaspheming against man, was injury done to the reputation of the man. In this the only original sense of the word, blasphemy therefore against God was injury done to the reputation of God. Now then, as to man, by injury done to his reputation, man is indeed liable to be subjected to sufferance :—to sufferance in various shapes, varying in quantity upon a scale of almost indefinite length. But, by injury done to God's reputation, is God exposed to sufferance in those or any other shapes? No, says somebody : but, by notions which are unworthy of him, injury is in your phrase done to his reputation : or, in the more usual and proper phrase, dishonour is done to him, and disrespect shewn to him, and for that disrespect the offender ought to be punished. Such is the answer.—Here then, as above, look into this supposed disrespect towards God, what you will find in it is neither more nor less than disrespect towards some opinion entertained, or pretended to be entertained, concerning God by man : by man with power in his hands.

Take two men of irritable mould—set them a talking about God—and thence necessarily about his attributes,—the moment any difference of opinion has place between them—and that moment will never be far distant—each becomes, in the eyes of the other, a blasphemer :—to each it thereupon becomes clear, that the other ought to be punished : punished in the offending member : the only doubt being, whether, as has been sometimes done, it ought to be bored through with a red-hot iron, or cut out. Inadequate, incorrect notions concerning God, are not they unworthy of him?—Yes. Did that man then ever exist, of whom, if he entertained any notions at all concerning God, it might not with truth be said, that he entertained unworthy notions of him? No : and yet, in the next breath, by or nothing, on which subject something will be said presently—the decencies have already been enumerated: the vestments, the postures, the gestures, and the loco-motions.

As to the vestments, these you might give to the juvenile reader, if you thought it worth the while. Similar vestments—some of them at least—are actually worn at six or seven years old by boys in Cathedrals—in those magnificent,—and, except to the lust of the eye, so completely useless,—edifices, in which for six days out of the seven, the pleasantness of what is sung cannot so far atone for the insipidity of what is said, as to procure upon an average half a dozen voluntary yawners, in addition to the compulsory ones.

Remain the postures, the gestures, and the loco-motions—the marching and counter-marching—from Reading-desk to Altar—from Altar back to Reading-desk—from Reading-desk up to Pulpit: as if when reading his own stuff, or another man's stuff, on pretence of its being his own, it were necessary a man should exhibit himself as a higher man than when, under the name of a lesson—reading the word of God.

Well—keep them there—if you cannot part with them—the postures, the gestures, and the loco-motions. But, in all of them put together, what is there that a boy of fourteen would not serve for as well as a man of forty? Stupid indeed must the boy be, if after a couple of hours' drilling he be not as perfect in this part of the exercise as the man could be if he were fourscore.

Even in your Universities—where, along with perjury, ceremony is taught in such perfection,—immediately as he

the same man who thus says no, will punishment be called for to be inflicted on this or that other man, for the unworthiness, as above, of such his notions!

comes from school, is not a boy made what is called a Bible Clerk? And this Bible Clerk, is it not his peculiar office in the Chapel every day, in the course of the service, to read, under the name of first or second lesson, a chapter or two out of the Bible? Being old enough and in every respect good enough to read the word of God, is he not old enough and in every respect good enough to read your Liturgy?—Whatsoever be propriety or decency in reading, is it of more importance that this Liturgy of your's, than that the word of God, should be read with propriety and decency?

The boy, Chorister boy, wears one sort of vestment: the boy, Bible Clerk, wears another sort of vestment. The Chorister boy's vestment is the exact miniature of your Priest's Surplice. This very gown worn by the boy Bible Clerk—this, or something scarce distinguishable from it, is used by many a Priest to read his sermon in. Thus you have Precedent—Precedent for every thing. Reason—it were in vain to shew her to you: but Precedent—her improved substitute, you and your brother the Lawyer have ever numbered among your Gods.

§ 4.—2. Pay.

In this case, as in others, the use, and only use of pay is the obtaining, in sufficient quantity, service of the requisite quality and degree of goodness.

When, on such an occasion, and for such a purpose, mention is made of pay,—the fund, out of which it is considered as coming, must be understood to be a fund, composed of money extracted from such as,—but for the force of government applied in case of refusal,—would be unwilling contributors: in a word, levied by taxation.

For, in so far as those, out of whose pocket it comes are willing, and for the obtaining of it no misrepresentation is employed, nor by the use thus made of it any injury done to any other person,—no reason can be assigned for wishing to see any limitation set to their expenditure, in this shape more than in any other.

But, for the purchase of service of the sort in question, viz. that which consists in the administering of instruction of the sort in question,—is it fit that, at the expense of the whole population—willing and unwilling taken together—is it fit that money should be taken?

Answer.—If it be only in respect of its effects, in relation to his own welfare, that each man's conduct were considered, perhaps not.

But, to the mischief, which, by the misconduct of any one man, and so in the case of each man, may, for want of such instruction, be produced,—mischief operating in diminution of the happiness of others,*—scarcely can any limits be assigned.

Manifest it seems at any rate, that, if for instruction, in relation to this part of the field of thought and action, money ought not to be levied in the way of taxation, much less ought it for instruction, in relation to any other parts.

In so far as, among those who are in possession of receiving instruction of the sort in question, there are any who desire the continuance of it, this possession affords another reason—and that, it should seem, an irresistible one—for the continuance of it,—and thereby for the continuance of the pay necessary for the obtainment of it.

For the purpose of giving expression to the sort of relation, which ought to have place, between service,—supposed to be rendered, or required, by or on behalf of the public, on the one hand,—and pay, considered as employed, or employable, in the purchase of such service, on the other,—follow, in two corresponding pages, two corresponding sets of maxims: the one set expressive of those by which, in the view taken of the subject by the author of these pages, practice ought to be governed;* the other, expressive of those by which it has been thought that, to an extent more or less considerable, practice has been and continues to be actually governed.

* See Introd. Part II. § Mischiefs of Exclusion.

* The principles from whence these maxims have been deduced, are to be found, mostly, if not completely, as far as recollection serves, in Mr. Bentham's Traité des Peines et des Recompenses, as edited by Mr. Dumont, anno 1812, or thereabouts; but, the work not being at hand, no particular reference can be made to it.

To a student in the art and science of legislation,—if among the thousand official legislators, or thereabouts, with their expectant successors and unofficial critics, any such person there be,—it might be a not altogether unuseful praxis, to take up the principles and maxims thus applied to Clerical, and make application of them to Lay, Offices.—As to the Edinburgh Reviewers, the principles laid down in the above book not being much more favourable to the interests of Placemen in expectancy than of Placemen in possession, they have, in their review of it, very prudently stopped at the subject of punishment, leaving that of reward untouched.

OXFORD GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

1. For the due rendering of service in respect of office, adequate aptitude and adequate inclination—aptitude, including mental power—are both necessary—neither suffices without the other.

2. For proof of the existence of adequate aptitude,—and in particular in the case of a functionary, who by his office is required to pray and preach in public,—examination performed in public is, generally speaking, the only adequate security.

3. To the office, be it what it may, a quantity of pay, to any amount, may be attached, without adding either in quantity or in quality, to the value of the service, if any, which is rendered in respect of it.*

4. Of the pay attached to office, the magnitude affords not of itself any security at all,—much less any adequate security,—for the rendering, in any quantity or of any quality, much less in apt quantity and quality, the service, for the rendering of which the office is professed to have been created and kept on foot.

5. Unless, in so far as adequate superiority, in respect of the value of the service performed, i. e. quantity and quality of it taken together, can be shewn to result from superiority of pay, the less the pay the better.

* See Notes, p. 244.

EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

1. For the rendering of service in respect of an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, neither aptitude nor inclination are necessary. It suffices that the desire of the pay allotted for the purchase of the service is strong enough to cause a man to engage to render it: and this whether he does or does not intend to render it.^{1*}

2. For the possession of an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, neither aptitude nor inclination, with reference to the rendering of the service, for the purchase of which the office is professed to have been instituted and to be kept on foot, being necessary,—it is not necessary that, for the proof of the existence of adequate aptitude, any adequate security should be taken in any shape, nor therefore in the shape of public examination.²

3. The greater the quantity of pay attached to an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, be it what it may, the greater in value,—quality and quantity taken together into the account,—will be the service rendered by the possessor of it.³

4. The magnitude of the pay attached to an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, affords of itself an adequate security for the rendering, in adequate quality and quantity, the service, for the rendering of which the office is professed to have been created and kept on foot.⁴

5. The greater the quantity of pay is, which is attached to an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, the better. No quantity, how great soever, requires for the justification of it any determinate ground for the supposition, that

* See Notes, p. 253.

OXFORD GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

6. Unless, in so far as adequate superiority, in respect of value, i. e. quantity or quality of service performed, as above, can be shewn to result, from the employing of hands, paid at the public expense by money exacted from unwilling hands,—service ought rather to be received from unpaid,—if spontaneously offering,—or otherwise willing hands,—or from hands paid by contributions furnished by willing hands.^b

7. Unless, in case of special and preponderant reason to the contrary, for the purpose of affording pay for the purchase of public service, contributions ought rather to be received from willing, than from unwilling, hands.

8. In no case, in virtue of any office, by the possessor of which as such, no laborious function is performed, nor any service rendered to the public, should money be received or paid at the expense of unwilling hands. In four words, no service, no pay! in two words, no Sinecures.^c
N. B. No public office having ever been created, but under the notion of service to be done in respect of it by the possessor,—every penny, received in virtue of an office, in which no labour regarded as serviceable to the public, is performed by the possessor, is so much received on a false pretence.

9. As the mass of pay, allotted to the office in question, for the purchase of the service attached to it, should not in the whole together be given and received, unless the whole of such service be rendered,—so neither should any particle of such mass of pay be given and received, unless a correspondent portion of service be rendered.

10. In respect of each portion of service required in

EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

extra-magnitude, in any degree, in the value of the service performed by the possessor of it, will be the result of any extra-magnitude in the quantity of the pay.⁵

6. So long as money, exacted by public authority from unwilling hands, can be found for the purchase of an engagement to render the service, it is not good that it be rendered either gratuitously, or for pay received altogether from willing hands.⁶

7. For the furnishing of pay for the purchase of Ecclesiastical service, it is not good that contributions be received from none but willing hands: they ought to be exacted from unwilling ones.⁷

8. By the possessor of an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, in return for pay, be the amount of it ever so great, no service need in any shape be rendered. In three words, Sinecures are necessary! N. B. By the power, the opulence, the dignity, and the high connexion, of the person by whom the money is received, that mode of obtaining it, which on the part of a powerless, indigent, undignified and unconnected person would be justly punishable and accordingly punished, is rendered innoxious, justifiable, and beneficial to the state.⁸

9. By the possessor of an Ecclesiastical (or Lay) office, as, in return for the pay taken on the whole, be the amount of it ever so great, no service need in any shape be rendered, so neither in return for any part of it.⁹

10. If, in respect of any part of the service, so it has

OXFORD GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

virtue of any office, every security necessary to the causing it to be rendered should be taken.^d

11. The classes, whose place in the scale of opulence is lowest, are those to whose exigencies in all shapes the service performed by a Parish Priest, as such, ought to be preferably adapted:—and this on a double account: viz. because it is in this instance that the need of such service,—and in particular of such service as is rendered by the performance of the duties of imperfect obligation,—is most pressing, and because it is of them that the greatest part of the population is composed.

12. In the situation of Parish Priest, the greater the quantity of the pay received by a man, the more powerfully is he drawn from, and set above, the habit of holding, and disposition to hold, intercourse with those persons, by whom, as above, in all respects, and in particular in respect of the duties of imperfect obligation his services are most needed.

13. To the Minister, who, on no occasion uses any fixed form, the talent of discoursing without book, and in a great degree without special premeditation, is necessary.

EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

happened, that payment for it has been made and received by the day,—or, as in the case of services paid for by surplice-fees, by the job,—whereby the rendering of that part has been secured, while every other part has remained unperformed,—it is not necessary that the security thus found to be efficacious in these instances, or that any other efficacious security, should be extended to other instances.¹⁰

11. The classes, whose place in the scale of opulence is lowest, are those by whom it is either not at all necessary, or least necessary, that the service rendered by a Parish Priest, and in particular, that the service rendered by the performance of the duties of imperfect obligation should be rendered.¹¹

12. In the situation of Parish Priest,—though, the greater the quantity of pay is which is received by a man, the more powerfully he is drawn off from, and set above, those classes of persons to whom the performance of his duties promises to be of the greatest use, and in particular in whose instance the need of that service, which is rendered by the performance of his duties of imperfect obligation, is at the highest pitch,—yet the quantity of pay cannot be too great : because to whatever extent it may happen that no service shall in any shape have been received by them at his hands ; yet had such service been rendered to them, the greater the quantity of pay received by him, the greater would have been the quantity of respect paid by them to him, and thence to the religion which he professes to teach.¹²

13. To the Ecclesiastical Minister, who, on no occasion, should use any fixt form,—the talent of discoursing without book, and in a great degree without special premeditation, would be altogether necessary. But, in the instance of a

OXFORD GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

14. To the Minister, the whole of whose exigible duty may be performed by reading out of a book, no talent other than that which consists in reading out of a book is necessary.

15. For the purchase of that service, which consists of nothing more than the reading out of a book,—the least quantity of pay,—in return for which any person who is capable of reading, in an intelligible manner, such matters as, under the system of instruction in question, require to be read out of a book,—is sufficient.

16. Under the Church-of-England System,—for the performance of the duties of imperfect obligation no adequate security being given, or being capable of being given, nor any well-grounded expectation of their being generally and efficiently performed being capable of being afforded,—there remain only the duties of perfect obligation; and, these consisting in nothing but reading out of a book,—the quantum of pay necessary to, and proper to be employed in, the purchase of a stock of service, in each Parish, adequate to the securing the performance of all the clerical duties that can reasonably be expected to be

EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

Church-of-England Ecclesiastical Minister, fixt forms having, by the prudence of the Church, been provided for every thing, no such talent is necessary.¹³

14. To the Ecclesiastical Minister, the whole of whose exigible duty may be performed by reading out of a book, no talent, other than that which consists in reading out of a book, is necessary: and, as at the hands of the sons or other near relations, though they be but the younger children, of noblemen and gentlemen of large fortune, whose chief or only pursuit is worldly and expensive pleasure, no such talent as that which consists in the discoursing without book, and in great measure without special premeditation, can reasonably be expected,—thence so it is that, for this reason of modern times, added to others which had place in former times, no service from any such functionary ought to be required other than such as is rendered by the reading out of a book.¹⁴

15. For the purchase of that Ecclesiastical service which consists of nothing more than the reading out of a book, the greatest quantity of pay that can be found actually employed in the purchase of an engagement to render it, be that engagement fulfilled or not, can never be too great.¹⁵

16. Although, under the Church-of-England system, for the purchase of a stock of service, by the rendering of which will be performed all that mass of duty, the performance of which is exigible, or, in return for any quantity of pay whatsoever, can reasonably be expected; so it may be, that the quantity of pay really necessary, is no more than the least quantity, sufficient to purchase the exercise of that sort and degree of talent, which consists in the reading out of a book,—yet,—the chief if not the only object worth regarding, being to secure a more comfortable performed in it, is no more than the least quantity sufficient to purchase the exercise of that sort and degree of talent, which is exercised by the reading, in an intelligible manner, out of a book.

OXFORD GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

17. For the purchase of instruction, to be administered, throughout the whole country to the poorer classes, for the benefit of the community at large,—whatever money is employed may,—if it be considerable enough to cause the obligation of contributing towards it to be felt as a burthen,—be, with less inconvenience, drawn from the universal than from a local fund: for, in this last case, the greater the amount, the greater the danger, lest in the breast of the forced contributors, the exaction should be considered as an injury, and the person by whom the amount of what is thus exacted is received, as the author of the injury: and, to the feelings,—of any person, in whose eyes the instruction thus administered is either useless, much more if pernicious, or the quantity of money exacted for the purchase of the instruction excessive,—the injury will be the greater, the more plainly useless, or the more highly pernicious the instruction is, and the more enormously excessive the quantity of pay exacted for the purchase of it.^e provision in this world for the higher and richer classes,—thence it is, that any diminution in the quantity of money at any time exacted from all classes, low and high together, to be employed as pay in the purchase of an engagement, fulfilled or not fulfilled, to render this sort of service, would, instead of a benefit, be an intolerable grievance: and every addition, to the quantity of money so exacted and employed, is a public benefit.

EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

17. How great soever, in a large proportion of the whole number of parishes, may be the quantity of money, exacted for the purchase of the service professed to be rendered by the performance of the duties professed to be performed,—and how great soever the number of the persons, in whose eyes either no service at all is rendered, or if any, none but what is useless, or even pernicious; and thence to their feelings in how great a degree soever injurious and afflictive,—yet, being at present taken in each parish out of a local fund, formed by contributions exacted from a certain class of the parishioners, it ought notwithstanding to be for ever drawn out of the local fund so constituted; because,—if Reason,—drawn from the principle of utility, i. e. from the consideration of the feelings of all persons concerned,—Reason, by which such commutation is prescribed—were to be taken for the standard of reference,—whatever is superfluous in the quantity of money exacted on this score, might come to be remitted, and the common interest of the subject many in that particular no longer sacrificed to the separate interest of the ruling few, who, in these masses of excessive pay, behold a source of opulence to themselves.

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

^a To Maxim 2.—Among Non-Ecclesiastical offices of all sorts, Military and Non-Military taken together, to some the security afforded by public examination is afforded already; to many more it might be applied with great advantage; to some it would not be applicable with preponderant, if any, advantage. But, to attempt any such thing as an arrangement of the whole system of offices under these three classes, belongs not to the present purpose.

^b To Maxim 6.—The hands, at the expense of which payment is made, are not to be deemed willing ones, where service,—being, by order of government, appointed to be rendered, in the case in question, to an individual of the description in question,—would, in the event of his not paying what in the name of a fee is required of him, be refused to him.

So,—inasmuch as money paid on account of the public is raised by taxes, imposed on contributors, who, in an indeterminately large proportion, would not, to the amount required of them respectively, if to any amount, be contributors, if they could avoid it,—all money paid on account of the public is, to this purpose, to be considered as received from unwilling hands.

^c To Maxim 8.—1. By every portion of pay thus bestowed a needless and useless burthen is laid upon the contributors.

2. Every portion of pay thus bestowed being so much obtained on false pretences, is obtained by that species of immorality, which,—in so far as it is practised by persons, who, in respect of the profit of it, are not in connexion with the members of the government,—is classed with crimes, and punished as such:—punished with transportation, or hard labour on board the Hulks. The crime called Swindling is a modification of it.

3. By the comparison and the contrast,—in the eyes of those persons by whom, in return for pay, the service is rendered—in all eyes, but more particularly in theirs,—the inequality renders their situation the less eligible. More than I earn so hardly by my labour, that man receives for doing nothing . . . What cause for discontent more natural or more just?

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

4. The persons, to whose profit the matter of reward is thus prostituted, become themselves, in so far as the true principles of government on this behalf are understood, the objects of odium, and that odium just. Being, to the amount of that profit, depredators, preying upon the substance of the people, they are regarded—and not without reason, as so many public enemies, to whose private interest the interest of the subject many is made a needless and useless sacrifice.

5. The persons, by authority from whom, as well as the persons by whom, and to whose use depredation is thus committed, being persons professing to act—to act on this same occasion in the character of trustees for the whole community—the sort of enormity thus committed by them is, on their part, a breach of such their trust. By the whole amount of the money which, after being levied, is thus wasted, and of the vexation produced in the levying it, the government by which it is levied and the waste committed, has the appearance of being—not to say is—a government of extortion, oppression, and tyranny.

6. By the establishment of the practice of trust-breaking in this case,—in the persons of a class of men, set apart for the purpose of affording instruction, and example in the way of religion and morality, to all other classes of the people,—more especially by the enormous extent, to which in this case it is carried,—not only a colour of justification, but a veil of sanctity is thrown over it: and encouragement and support is thus given to it, not only in this case, but in the case where the service, on pretence of which the pay received in virtue of office is of a civil, (meaning a non-ecclesiastical,) in contradistinction to an ecclesiastical nature;—in a word, to all other offices under government.

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

Ecclesiastical, or non-ecclesiastical, by what Church-of-Englandist can any censure be consistently passed on the practice of Sinecurism?

By what man, Non-Churchman or Churchman, can any censure be passed on Sinecurism without passing a proportionate censure on the Excellent Church?

Thus,—not merely by a participation, but by the receipt of an enormously superior sum, in the profit of guilt in this shape,—is the Excellent Church,—with all her sons, by whom any such affection is felt as that of hope—even thus is she bribed, and engaged by the bribery, in the defence of fraud and depredation.

7. In the case of this unpunishable, as in the case of punishable, depredation,—if, to the amount of so much as a single farthing, the levying and application of money to this purpose be to be justified, then, on equally good ground, may the levying and applying to the same purpose money to any amount whatever:—yes, to any amount, up to the last penny, that can by any means be exacted from a starving and sinking people.

8. Even in the non-ecclesiastical part of the field of government, the abundance of sinecure offices—undisguised and disguised together—with the enormity of the aggregate amount of the money thus exacted from the people under false pretences, is among the most prominent of the grievances, under which the people labour. But, if the ratio, of the aggregate of the pay allotted to these sham offices to the aggregate of the pay allotted to efficient offices, be made the object of regard,—in the non-ecclesiastical part of the field this ratio is as nothing, compared with what it is in the ecclesiastical: in the sacred, as it is called.

Where the service undertaken for is that of defending souls against the assaults of the devil, so it is that, in the instance of almost one half of the whole number of these members of the "Church militant," in return for the pay received nothing whatever is done, or so much as endeavoured to be done:—at the post at which the service should be performed, the voluntarily inlisted soldier—the receiver of the pay—is never to be found. Here then, in this sacred army, almost one half of the soldiers are deserters: deserters receiving all the while pay as effectives: the Bishops, officers in this army—and the advisers of the Monarch, the Commander of it—conniving at the desertion, and concurring in exacting the pay, which, with full notion of the desertion, they force the people to give to these notorious deserters: the Bishops—many if not most of them—and, with the connivance of the rest, and the concurrence of the advisers of the Crown—receiving, as will be seen, (see the section on Discipline) in addition to the pay attached to their respective offices, other pay as privates, and in every instance in which they do receive it, acting the part of deserters.

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

Not to speak of those public servants, whose offices are included in the civil (meaning the non-military part) of the civil, (meaning,—for in this state is this part of the language,—the non-ecclesiastical part) of the field of government,—in what situation would the country have been, if, in the Military part, the enormity of the breach of trust committed by sinecurism had been equal to what it is in the Ecclesiastical? If, of the whole number of Officers and Privates, in the land and in the sea service taken together, whose engagement is to defend bodies and goods against the assaults of foreign enemies—enemies made of flesh and blood—almost half the number had been living constantly in a state of desertion, receiving their pay notwithstanding? Under the burthen of the whole of that vast establishment, of which this branch is of course by far the greatest and the most burthensome, the country is already sinking. But, on the supposition here in question, the amount of this part of the burthen would have been nearly double to what it is.

In the attribute Excellent,—thus in a public advertisement, bestowed by the Bench of Bishops upon the Church, of which they are at the head—bestowed in as regular and solemn form as the corresponding abstract term Excellency is bestowed upon a certain rank of Foreign Envoys,—what less can be implied, but that, on the part of these holy persons—some consecrated, all in Holy Orders—morality, and that in a degree over and above any in which it is to be found in the same number of persons, belonging to the profane class,—is constantly to be found: these sacred persons—all in palaces, the Archbishops on thrones, as upon hills topped by mountains—being in profession set up to serve as examples—as so many burning and shining lights—to all profane ones.

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

Such being the pretension, what is the real fact? Over and over again, in every page of this work it has been visible. Pre-eminence? yes: but in what scale?—In the scale of virtue? No. In what scale then?—Alas! of mendacity and insincerity, as proved by subscription—of breach of trust, and depredation, as proved by over-paid places—of obtainment on false pretences, as proved by Non-Residence, Pluralism, and Sinecurism—be vicious,—in the scale of vice: the obtainment on false pretences the vice of the greater part; the mendacity and the insincerity the vice of the whole tribe. Of the two tribes of these domineering Churchmen, who all of them are, by their own confession, so many “miserable sinners,” that by which the exclusive possession of the quality of consecrated holiness is arrogated to itself, the most pre-eminently and notoriously miserable.

Such is the Church—“that Established Church, which” (according to the Earl of Harrowby’s Speech, p. 32) “is the boast and the support of our country.” Such is the system, which, by the mouth and pen of this their spokesman, his fellow saints,—at so heavy an expense to the good people of England—and not only of England but of Scotland—yes, of Scotland, where the burthen is so completely without pretence,—have for so long a course of years been labouring in their way to support—to support, as will be seen, by increase of mere unoperative existence, with increase of pay for the support of it, but without any the slightest endeavour to give increase to profitable service:—to service, profitable or unprofitable.

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

As to the persons to whose situations these maxims are applicable, they will be found to be as follows :

1. All possessors of Sinecures, by whatsoever denomination distinguished : viz.

1. All Deans, Canons, Prebendaries, Proctors :

2. All possessors of Sinecure Rectories, Vicarages, or Donative Curacies :

3. All Rectors, all Vicars, all Curates of Donative Curacies, who, not having more service to perform than they are physically able to perform, employ stipendiary Curates :

4. All possessors of overpaid Rectories, Vicarages, and Donative Curacies, by the amount of the overplus :

5. All Pluralists, by the amount of the pay attached to the whole number of their benefices more than one :

6. All Archbishops, Bishops, and Archdeacons, unless and except in so far as service,—which, without them, would not be rendered with equal aptitude, quality and quantity taken together,—is rendered by them towards the maintenance of discipline : as to which see further under the head of Discipline.

N. B. In the Church of Scotland, Established as it is, no instance of any of the above-mentioned abominations is to be found.

Of course, neither is there, nor can there be, in any Non-Established Protestant Church.

Behold what, on the subject of Sinecures,—at the very commencement of the half-emancipation from the yoke of Popery, of which they are a relick,—was the opinion—the pointedly declared opinion—of Archbishop Cranmer, Martyr and one of the chief heroes of the Established Church of England :—declared in the very face of the bloody tyrant, under whose order a fresh batch of them had just been brought upon the carpet : it is taken from Bishop Burnet, who had the honesty to print it in his History of the Reformation. If by Cranmer, instead of being thus pointedly condemned, the institution had been lauded, it would not have been more useful or justifiable than it is : the observations above called forth would not have been the less justly applicable to it. But many are the minds, by which,—while the most unanswerable reasons, drawn from the principle of general utility and the nature of the case, would be applied to them without effect,—the authority of an Archbishop, especially that Archbishop being a Martyr, and that Martyr Cranmer, may on such an occasion be found decisive.*

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

* From Burnet's History of the Reformation, vol. iii.

“A Letter of Thomas, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, to Cromwell, upon the new foundation of Canterbury.”

AN ORIGINAL.

“My very singular good Lord,

“After my most hearty commendations, these shall be to advertise your Lordship, that I have received your letters, dated the 27th day of November, and therewith a bill concerning the Devise for the New Establishment, to be made in the Metropolitan Church of Canterbury: By which your Lordship requireth my Advice thereupon by writing, for our mutual Consents. Surely, my Lord, as touching the Books drawn, and the Order of the same, I think it will be a very substantial and godly Foundation: Nevertheless in my opinion the PREBENDARIES, which will be allowed 40*l.* a-piece yearly, might be altered to a more expedient use. And this is my consideration; for having Experience both in times past, and also in our Days, how the said Sect of Prebendaries have not only spent their time in much Idleness, and their Substance in superfluous Belly-cheer, I think it not to be a convenient State or Degree to be maintained and established, Considering first that commonly a Prebendary is neither a learner, nor a Teacher, but a good Viander. Then by the same name they look to be chief, and to bear all the whole rule and Preheminence in the College where they be Resident: By means whereof the younger, of their own Nature given more to Pleasure, good Chear, and Pastime, than to Abstinence, Study, and Learning, shall easily be brought from their Books to follow the Appetite and Example of the same Prebendaries, being their Heads and Rulers: And the State of the Prebendaries hath been so excessively abused, that when learned men hath been admitted into such Room, many times they have desisted from their good and godly Studies, and all other virtuous exercise of preaching and teaching. Wherefore, if it may so stand with the King's gracious Pleasure, I

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

^a To Maxim 10.—1. So far as concerns quantity of service, and in particular in so far as that quantity is measured by the quantity of time employed in the rendering of the service,—of the securities capable of being taken for the due rendering of service required in respect of office, the most simple,—and in proportion to the quantity of money at stake the most efficacious,—is that which is afforded, by taking the service in the least parcels or parts into which it stands naturally divided, and so, in the instance of each of those parcels or parts attaching to the act of rendering the service a proportionable parcel of pay.

2. This maxim is conformed to in so far as payment by the day, or by the job or piece, is the mode of payment employed. In so far as he is paid by the fees called surplice fees, a Parish Priest is paid by the job. The indignity may afford a text for Saint Howley, Saint Marsh, or Saint Quarterly Review. But the mode is not the less characteristically and appositely designated.

3. To the duties of imperfect obligation it is altogether inapplicable. For this reason it is not applicable either to the system of the Established Church of Scotland, or to the system of any Non-Established Church. But, neither is there in any one of these systems any demand for it. The object of it is accomplished by the system of discipline. See below the section on Discipline.

4. But, to the Church of England system,—supposing the duties of perfect obligation performed by the juvenile reader instead of would wish that not only the NAME of a PREBENDARY were exiled his Grace's Foundations, but also THE SUPERFLUOUS CONDITIONS OF SUCH PERSONS. I cannot deny but that the beginning of PREBENDARIES was no less proposed for the Maintenance of good learning and good Conversation of living, than RELIGIOUS men were: But forasmuch as both be gone from their first estate and order, and the one is found like offender with the other, it maketh no great matter if they perish both together: For to say the truth, it is an estate which ST. PAUL, reckoning up the degrees and estates allowed in his time, could not find in the Church of Christ."

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

the adult Minister,—it would be perfectly applicable, and the state of the case would require it. See also to this point the section on Discipline.

To Maxim 17.—Note that,—until the abuse, consisting in the exaction of excessive pay instead of least sufficient pay, as above, shall have been removed,—the locality of the fund is in one respect an advantage: viz. by operating as a stimulus, towards engaging the forced contributors to employ their exertions for the removal of the abuse.

Strongly as in this way the sense of injury cannot but operate in England,—where the portion of the population, by which the injury is sustained, is not computed to form as yet more than about one seventh part of the whole,—how much more strongly must it not operate in Ireland, where the portion thus injured—Catholic and Protestant Dissenters together—are computed to form not less than nine tenth parts of the whole?

Lamentable indeed it is—that a religion,—so absurd and mischievous as is the Catholic, compared even with the least good, not to say the only bad, edition of the Protestant religion,—should in any country prevail to any such extent as that in which it prevails in Ireland. But, so long as the people, by whom it is professed, are continued in a state of oppression,—as they will be so long as in respect of any the smallest right whatsoever they are upon a footing inferior to that of any other sect,—so long, unless a system of irresistible compulsion be applied to them, will that pernicious sect continue, without any considerable, if any, diminution in its numbers. Suppose them, on the other hand, standing, as above, upon a footing of equality,—then would Missionaries from all the active sects of Protestants, pour in upon that neighbouring land, and make war upon the Whore of Babylon, as ardently as they do already upon Mahomet and Bramah, and with all the advantage, which comparative appropriate knowledge has over deplorably gross, and to a sad extent the very grossest, ignorance.

But, in that case, the inefficiency of Church-of-Englandism to every useful purpose would be still more glaringly manifest than at present: and the sluggard depredators, who fatten there upon the bread of idleness, would be covered with still more conspicuously just reproach and shame.

NOTES TO THE GRADUATE'S MAXIMS.

Yes: it is for Church-of-Englandism, as well as by Church-of-Englandism, that Catholicism and Popery are kept on foot in Ireland.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

¹ To Maxim 1.—Proofs of the adoption of this maxim in the Ecclesiastical department. 1. That to the rendering of service, so far as it is rendered by the mere possession of office, inclination to perform the duties of it is not regarded as necessary, is proved in and by as many cases as there are instances of Non-Residence.—See above, § 3, p. 217.

2. That, to the rendering of this same service, appropriate and adequate mental power is not regarded as necessary, is proved by the following state of things. In both the English Universities,—viz. in Cambridge time out of mind, and in Oxford of late years,—for securing appropriate and sufficient aptitude with relation to that sort of service, which a man is understood to be rendering—rendering to himself, and eventually to the public—by the taking of an University degree, the act of undergoing examination in public has been deemed requisite, and accordingly has been and is exacted. But, for any such purpose as that of securing aptitude, for the situation in which in the character of Minister of a Parish a man is understood to take upon himself the cure of Souls, no such security is exacted. Nor yet on the occasion of a man's receiving what are called Holy Orders: viz. a sort of degree, the taking of which has been rendered a necessary preparative to the capacity of undertaking any such cure of souls. For, this private degree is sufficiently taken, whenever, out of twenty-six Archbishops and Bishops, a man can find a single one, having out of a number of Chaplains one who, after conversing with him in secret, will, in the accustomed form, cause it to be understood, that in his opinion the candidate in question possesses, with relation to the state and condition of a Church-of-England Priest, a sufficient degree of aptitude.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

True it is—that, in many, and probably in most instances, either before or soon after the receiving of these Holy Orders, a man takes, or has taken, one or more of these University degrees: but equally true is it that to the receiving these Orders no such degree is necessary: and that in an unliquidated number of instances, these Orders are received by men by whom no such degree is ever taken.

True also it may be admitted to be, that,—for the rendering of any service, for the rendering of which any adequate security is afforded, or of the rendering of which any reasonable and sufficiently grounded expectation can be entertained,—the quality and quantity of mental power, of the existence of which adequate assurance may be obtained in the case of the Bell-taught school-boy as above, will, under the fixt forms of the Church-of-England, be sufficient: and that, consequently, any such additional mental power as is evidenced by the taking of any such degree, public or private, as aforesaid, is unnecessary and superfluous. But, on this head, such, as far as appears, has not as yet been the conception generally entertained, or at any rate generally avowed, any where in the Church-of-England: not the conception avowed, nor accordingly the conception acted upon, in the framing of the regulations, or in the establishing of the customs, by which that Excellent Church is governed.

So much as to practice. As to theory, on this as on every other part of the field of Church-of-England discipline (service and pay added or included), the public is fortunate enough to possess a generally received as well as authoritatively established body of doctrine, in the above quoted speech of the Earl of Harrowby, spoken in the House of Lords on the 18th of June, 1812, and afterwards published by his Lordship, on the occasion and in support of one part of his grand system of reform, being the part which on that occasion passed into a law. Along with legal authority already effectually applied to this part, the whole system has for its support, in the shape of intellectual authority, besides that of his Lordship, that of the departed Saint, of pious and most zealous Church-of-England memory—Saint Perceval: in the character of whose “Executor” in this behalf, the noble Earl, on that occasion, acted, (Speech, pp. 1, 2), and still continues to act. Of this abuse, if such it may be called, of this abuse, considered in a general point of view, or at any rate, of the continuance of it,—we have his Lordship’s decidedly declared approbation. And here be it noted, once for all, that to abuse—to abuse in all its shapes—silence, from the mouth of a man, who, with Government at his back, comes out with a system of reform given as complete—silence, as surely as it ever gives consent—gives confirmation.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

As to the particular supposed abuse here in question, after acknowledging with the most engagingly spontaneous candour, (p. 1), that “Pluralities and Non-Residence,” (i. e. obtainment of money on false pretences), are certainly no necessary part of the establishment of a Christian Church; and that “as far as he is aware, they are unknown to the laws of any Church but that of England,” in conclusion, however, his decided opinion is, (p. 21), that “a strict injunction of universal residence would be neither practicable nor desirable.” Yet cases there are in which, speaking of Non-Residence, this practice (he says) is by no means “creditable to the Church.” There are in number (out of the 4,339 cases of effective Non-Residence remaining after deduction of the 1,501 Virtual Residents as per p. 217) according to him

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

600, in which a Curate is employed, the living, (observes his Lordship), "being of small value." How any mischief, which is not produced by Non-Residence, where the living is of great value, should be produced by its being of small value, seems not very easy to discover. If the damnation of souls were an object worthy of regard, the residence of the Incumbent affording at the same time any chance of warding off so undesirable a result,—on any such supposition, forasmuch as the largest living will, generally speaking, contain the largest population, the cases where the living is large would, one should have thought, have rather been taken for the objects of his Lordship's censure. But on the day on which this speech was spoken, the attendance on the Bishops' Bench was (it may well be presumed) not a scanty one. In the Returns for the year 1810—being the year to which, as appears by the Tables printed at the end of it, this speech bears reference—thirty-five stands as the number of "Living held at this time by Bishops:" considerably more than one a-piece for the four-and-twenty Bishops. Of these thirty-five livings, not many, it may well be imagined, could, in respect of its smallness, afford matter for his Lordship's above-mentioned censure. A collection of the cases in which, according to the Latin proverb, censure—and not merely moral but legal censure—spares the crows and fastens exclusively on the doves,—or, in more appropriate language, spares the Diveses and fastens exclusively on the Lazaruses,—would assuredly not be a scanty one, and would form a not unillustrative illustration of the combined excellence of Church and State.

² To Maxim 2.—See Note to Maxim 1.

³ To Maxim 3.—Proof, of the adoption of this maxim in the Ecclesiastical department, general practice and general understanding, as evidenced by the Act obtained and preparatory speech spoken in the House of Lords, and afterwards published by the Earl of Harrowby, as above, 18th June, 1812. In no part of his plan as exhibited in that speech, is any intimation given, that, in any instance, by excess of pay put into ecclesiastical hands,—how enormous soever the pay, and whether any service or none be rendered for it, and if any, how minute soever that service,—mischief in any shape is produced. Deficiency of pay—to the operation of that one cause—of that one and no other,—unless it be absence from the spot on which, if useful service in any shape were by the person in question rendered, it would be rendered,—is every imperfection ascribed, which, in his Lordship's view, presents any demand for remedy. In each of as many Parishes as possible, to cause a Parish Priest, viz. either Incumbent or Curate, to exist, and into the pocket of the Curate, at the expense of every future Incumbent,—and thence at the expense not only of every future, but eventually of the present Patron,—to put a sum of money, over and above that for which the Curate would have been ready and willing to undertake to perform the service—in the accomplishment of these two connected objects—the one of them partly by the means of the other—may be seen the whole texture of that plan of reform or improvement, by which, whatsoever was still wanting to the giving to the excellence of the Church-of-England system the finishing touches, was to be supplied. At the expense of Patrons and Incumbents, money to be put into the pockets of Curates: at the expense of the public at large, money to be put into the pockets of Incumbents, over and above that for which they would respectively have been willing to undertake to perform the service:—more money to be put into the pockets of Architects, to build fine buildings with, under the name of Churches: upon the accomplishment of these two objects, together with another or two, consisting merely in the expenditure of money, without any security for the production of any good effect by means of it, will the whole force of the noble Earl's and his late Right Honourable friend's genius be found expended.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

Money exacted from unwilling hands by force of law—money in such vast sums—and for what? For the advancement of piety and morality?—No: not so much as in profession in any part of this speech. For what then? For “the preservation of the “Church,” (p. 32): “of that Established Church, which is the

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

"boast and the support of our country." For the better accomplishment of this grand and primary if not sole object, the holy Proteus is on this occasion brought forward in its character of a "Citadel." It has "assailants from within and from without." It has "outworks:" it has a "garrison:" but it is in danger of being "betrayed by want of discipline:" and its "garrison" is in danger of being "starved:"—"a system of measures for strengthening the establishment of the Church of England,"—such accordingly, at the very outset of the speech, (p. 1), is the system pursued: such its object—and even in profession its sole object—according to the account given of it by the noble author by whom it is introduced. This being the object—when, in relation to it, any such word as service is employed, of what sort can be the service meant? Answer: That sort of service which consists in contributing to the defence of this Citadel against those its assailants. That, in the expectation of the Noble Engineer, in whose eyes the demand for service in this shape was so urgent, the service thus desired would, in case of the adoption and execution of this his plan, be rendered, and being rendered, would be effectual, cannot be matter of doubt. But, for the causing this service to be rendered, what is the instrument to which he looks? Answer: Unless it be the sort of discipline, such as it is, which will be seen added for the prevention of desertion,—money, and nothing else: money to be put into the pockets of the garrison: money to be put into the pockets of Architects for the erection of more Citadels.

Such then being his plan, and such his own account of it, his maxim, the maxim on which he acts, may it not with truth, as above, be said to be this?—The greater the quantity of pay attached to the office, be it what it may, the greater in value, quantity and quality taken together into the account, will be the service rendered by the possessor of it. In riches, and without any such superfluous care as that about performance of duty—in riches, and with no other than the single exception above mentioned, is, on this occasion at least, the noble Christian's only trust: to his mind's eye, camels galloping through the eye of needles have doubtless been a familiar spectacle. On the part of the persons militant, of which this his garrison is composed, on what circumstances does this his trust repose itself? On any such qualification as "respectability of character, exemplary discharge of duty, " or a competent share of learning?" Not it, indeed. Of these, he expressly declares (p. 15), he is "far from supposing that they "are necessarily connected, or even connected at all, with the "amount of the salary received." On what then?—On the quantity of respect paid to the noble army of his Church militant: paid not only to officers but to privates. Respect?—Good. But money—the money by which every thing is to be done—is that respect? No. Put the question to a Sectary, the answer will be—that they are very different things. But in the Excellent Church, some how or other, it is for money, and nothing else, that respect, or any thing else that is good, is to be had. "Men," says his Lordship, (p. 16), "are too apt to measure the respect "they owe to persons, or to offices, by the respect which they "see paid to them by the authorities to which they look up. "What must they think," continues he, (p. 16), "of the value "which is set by the Legislature upon the persons or the office of "those to whose care the religion of the people is entrusted, when "they see at how low a rate their services are estimated?"

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

What indeed is not said directly is—that when by a certain quantity of pay the functionaries belonging to this class are secured against contempt, the respect of the people will go on increasing, with every addition made to that quantity, whatever it may be: indirectly, however, it is not the less incontrovertibly insinuated. For, not only of the value set by the Legislature on the persons in question, but of the value set by the same supreme body on the office itself, the quantity of pay allotted to it is spoken of as the measure, and test, and conclusive evidence. But if so it be at any one part of the scale, how can it fail of being so at any other? That for this purpose any line ought to be or can be drawn at any point of this scale—of any such notion not any the slightest intimation is any where given. And to the “value set by the Legislature, upon the office of those, to whose care, (as his Lordship observes), “the religion of the people is entrusted,” what bounds would he recommend to be set by any body? Boundless being the value of their office, boundless accordingly ought to be the quantity of their pay: boundless—though not in the absolute and abstract sense—yet thus far boundless, as to have no other limits than those which are set to it by the ignorant impatience of those out of whose pockets it must come. Such is the logic of the Noble Advocate of Excellent Church: though disguised and guarded against every adverse grasp by so prudential an indeterminateness and slipperiness as has been furnished by his Lordship’s skill in the arts of rhetoric. While to the eye of hostility or scrutiny it presents the semblance of a limited demand, it presents the substance of an unlimited one to all those “understandings” which the eloquence of his Lordship of London, seconded by the prospect of the good things of this wicked world, has laid “prostrate” at the feet of Excellent Church.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

Money then being, in his Lordship’s eyes, as well as Excellent Church’s, the one thing needful,—in money her sole trust—the more money she has of it, the stronger her hold,—no wonder that, to the adding more and more to the bulk and strength of this holdfast, the force of his Lordship’s ingenuity should be directed. Of the exclusive efficiency of this instrument, according to his Lordship’s notion of it, can any further proof be wanting? Behold it then, in the very next paragraph, (p. 16). Of every species of Sectaries the rapid progress is recognized. To what cause is it ascribed? To the superiority of the service rendered—of the instruction administered—by these schismatics, in comparison of that which is rendered by the Ministers of Excellent Church?—Of course to any thing rather than this. To what then?—to the superiority of the pay received by those schismatics, in comparison of that which is received by their Excellencies: “How can we

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

“be surprized,” (says his Lordship), “at the rapid progress of every species of sectaries (who are far from allowing the Ministers of their congregations to fall in point of income to a level with the Curates of the Established Church,) when so large a proportion of the Ministers of that Church are left in a state of abject poverty.”—Superiority of pay? What? in any sectarian Church is there more factitious dignity, more power, and, above all, more money to be had—and that for less work, than in Excellent Church?—In his Lordship’s view, (p. 16), the Church is a lottery.—What? in any sectarian Church are there any 25,000*l.* 14,000*l.* 10,000*l.*, or so much as 1,000*l.* a year prizes? Strange then would it be, if, after so many testimonies, there could remain a doubt, that in the maxim, the quantity of religion in the country will be as the quantity of the money put into the pockets of the Clergy and others for the support of it, is contained the persuasion, which, with all his might, it has been, and continues to be, his Lordship’s endeavour to impress into every mind that can be induced to receive it.

But, on this head, could any doubt be left by his theory, it may be seen effectually excluded by his practice.—It is in the case of Curates (it has been seen) that in this speech of his Lordship’s this theory is advanced in the first instance: but, if once received as applicable to that case, then come two other and more profitable applications of it, first to the case of Incumbents, and then to the case of the money demanded for more Churches. As to the case of Curates, though nominally at the expense of Incumbents, it is really, (as hath been seen, and will be seen further), at the expense of Patrons alone, that the money for the Curates was to be and has been provided. But it is at the expense of the people at large—Sectaries included, who cannot so much as be expected to receive any part of the direct benefit from it,—that the money for the supposed underpaid Incumbents has been and continues to be provided; and, moreover, if the people will find patience, it is at their expense that the additional stock of Churches is about to be provided. The

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

Incumbents—the only Incumbents—at whose expense the money is to be provided for Curates, will be the future contingent Incumbents: and by these the burthen will not be felt. But the people, on whom the burthen is, and will be thrown, are the existing people of the existing time, by whom it will be felt in all its pressure.

Another of the fallacies,—employed by his Lordship's rhetoric, in the endeavour to conciliate the affection of those on whom it depends, and to secure the patience of the people, under the system of unpunishable depredation to which he is devoting them,—may be seen in the just mentioned emblem of the Lottery, taken from Adam Smith. “How can we expect, (says he, p. 16) considering the “ Church only as a profession, that men who have necessarily received a liberal education, and who ought to be men of liberal “ views, will continue to enter into a profession, in which the “ blanks bear so large a proportion to the prizes?” And again (in p. 28), “In this Lottery, they (the prizes) are indeed far less “ than the purchase money paid for the tickets:”—the Lottery accordingly is, in the words of Adam Smith, a disadvantageous one. Of this emblem, what is the moral?—Encrease (such it is of course) Encrease the aggregate value of the prizes. Well, then, when this encrease is made, will you thereby have rendered your lottery a less disadvantageous one to the purchasers of tickets?—Most assuredly not: much more probably will you have rendered it a still more disadvantageous one.—Why? because the greater in number and value the aggregate amount of the prizes, the greater, and—such is the delusive quality of hope—in an indeterminately larger proportion than before, will be the number of the competitors—the number of the purchasers of the tickets. In this way, under the notion of making the lottery less and less disadvantageous, you may keep adding to the number and value of the prizes, till you have emptied the pockets of the people of their last shilling: and when this is done, it will still be more disadvantageous than ever. Such, where applied to professions, is the fallacy couched in this emblem of a lottery. In a real lottery, the number of the tickets is always limited; in which case, true it is, that if while the number of the tickets remains the same, you make any addition to the aggregate value of the prizes, then so it is, that by the whole amount of the addition, you render the lottery so much the less disadvantageous than it was before. But neither in the lottery of the Church, nor in any other of the pretended lotteries to which, for the like purpose, the emblem of a lottery has been applied, is there any limitation to the number of the tickets.*

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

* To all the several predatory professions, to which the ruling and influential few betake themselves, for the means of preying upon the subject-many—to the Politician's and the Lawyer's, as well as to the Established Churchman's—this emblem of Adam Smith has been a perfect treasure. Be the amount of the depredation ever so enormous, the whole class of depredators are converted, in the lump, from objects of just jealousy into objects of compassion and sympathy. No abuse, be it ever so excruciating, that it has not been employed, and with but too much success, to reconcile men to:—throughout the whole field of government, sinécures, useless places, needless places, and overpaid places:—in the department of judicature, the continually increasing aggravation of the miseries produced by the technical system of procedure;—factitious delay, vexation, and expense, manufactured by the hands of lawyers, for the sake of the profit made by them out of the expense. Under the shadow of this emblem, we have seen—yes, this very generation has seen—a Chancellor and a Master of the Rolls, “combining and confederating,” to use their own jargon, to and with each other, to levy, and, under the name of fees, levying accordingly, without consent of Parliament, masses of money, more or less of which, through the channel of patronage, was to go into their own pockets.—Levy money without consent of Parliament? On what ground? Because by the like hands, in the same manner, money has been levied once before. Of the ground made in this case, what was the extent, in comparison of that which prevented not the condemnation of Ship-money, and the punishment of those Judges, by whom that imposition had been converted into an instrument of depredation. In the days of Charles the First, Ship-money found a Hampden; but this is the reign of George the Third, and the race of Hampden is no more. In a British House of Commons, not a single voice to lift itself up against the levying of money without the consent of Parliament! Money levied without consent of Parliament, for private and

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

^d To Maxim 4.—Proof, among official men, general understanding and general practice.—See Note (°) to Maxim 3.

^e To Maxim 5.—Proof, among official men, general understanding and practice: and see Doctrine of the Earl of Harrowby, as explained in Note (°) to Maxim 3.

^f To Maxim 6.—See Note (°) to Maxim 7.

^g To Maxim 7.—In the Non-Established Church, composed of the people called Quakers, the sort of service, which, in other Churches is rendered by hands specially appointed, and generally paid, is rendered by the unpaid hands of such of the Members of this Church as, from time to time, feel disposed to render it. But Quakers are Sectaries: and as according to the doctrine of the Bishop of London, all Sectaries are men of “guilt,” so according to the milder doctrine and language of the Earl of Harrowby—milder in form at least—it is not good that Church service should be rendered by, or received from Sectaries.

Proof of the adoption given to this and the last preceding Maxim, —general understanding as expressed in the language of the Earl of Harrowby. It is among the “dangers of our situation,” that mention is made by him (pp. 32-16) of the increase in the number of dissenting places of worship, and the still greater increase in the number of dissenting Ministers.—“While the licences for the “creation of dissenting places of worship are increasing, (says he), “from the average of ninety per annum during the first four-personal use, levied by that tax, compared with which the worst of other taxes is a relief.* One of the confederates was once a Soldier-Officer: and there came out a pamphlet, proving that officer's pay was such as no gentleman could live upon. Little could he then expect ever to find it in his power, in so smooth a manner, to reduce such theories to practice.

O rare emblem—emblem of a lottery!—a use for it this, which, with all their sagacity, the inventors of that ingenious instrument never could have imagined!

* See Bentham's Protest against Law Taxes.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

“teen years of the present reign, to an average of five hundred
 “and eighteen, during the last fourteen years; and the licences
 “for dissenting preachers in a still larger proportion; while there “are 1,881 parishes, containing a population of nearly five mil“lions of persons, in which the churches and chapels are 2,553, “capable of containing only 1,856,000 persons, and the places of “dissenting worship are 3,438; do not (continues he) let us “shut our eyes to the dangers of our situation.” And in the next page, (p. 33), “in the most populous parishes, places of wor“ship, according to the Church of England, are notoriously defi“cient. The people have no option but the entire neglect of all “divine worship, or the attendance upon a worship which makes “them dissenters from the establishment.”

“While the chapels of every sect, (continues his Lordship) “are rising round them day by day, and inviting congregations by “every species of accommodation, and by the repetition of their “services at different hours, the parish church is open perhaps “only once on the Sunday; is insufficient to accommodate the “rich; and in too many places is almost shut against the poor.”

In any breast, in which either the religion of Jesus, or that morality which depends upon it, were a primary object of regard,—under the inability which the Church of England thus confessedly labours under, as to the affording to the people the benefits of divine worship according to the religion of Jesus,—the fact that there are other Churches by which the benefit of divine worship, according to the religion of Jesus, is administered, should it not naturally, whatsoever preference were given to the Church-of-England form in comparison with these dissenters' forms, be, upon the whole, an object—not of regret, but of consolation?—But the religion of the Noble Earl is the religion of the Church-of-England: and the increased extent thus given to the benefit of divine worship, according to the religion of Jesus, is, to his Lordship, matter of pure regret, unassuaged, for any thing that appears, by any the least particle of consolation. All this is consistent: all this is National-Society principle. To hell let them all go, rather than seek otherwise than under our command the way to heaven.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

Happily for the religion of Jesus, and that morality which depends upon it, and that happiness which depends upon this morality,—the good people of England, as his Lordship himself sees and shews, have given judgment against his Lordship of Harrowby, his Lordship of London, and these their schemes. If, among the different Protestant modes of the religion of Jesus, the mode of the Established Church of England were not, in respect of its tendency to promote the ends of religion, inferior in the eyes of the people at large to those other modes, additional places of worship in that mode, capable of holding more persons than those places of dissenting worship, would, in all this time, have been erected:—erected, and by the same honourable means; erected by voluntary contributions. In the period in question no doubt that by these same means, in number more or less considerable, places of Church-of-England worship have been erected. But, notwithstanding the prodigious difference in respect of pecuniary capacity and influence, so small is the number, shame has kept his Lordship and his coadjutors from holding it up to view.

Voluntarily they will not contribute any thing:—seeing this, his Lordship's plan—his Lordship's declared intention—is, if he can, to make them contribute by force.* But, along with all luke-warm Church-of-Englandists, included in that design is the intention of compelling all dissenters, thus to add to their already

* Extract from Morning Chronicle, June 27th, 1816.

[House of Lords, June 26th.]

“ Lord Harrowby moved for an Abstract of Returns respecting the Residence of the Clergy, and an Extract of Returns respecting the capacity of Churches and Chapels, as compared with the population of each parish, &c. His Lordship stated, that Parliament would be called upon next Session for some legislative measure, and for an act of munificence, with a view to the establishment, as far as possible, of a sufficient number of Churches and Chapels commensurate with the population.”

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

exacted contributions, towards the performance of a service, from which, if it were ever so good an one, they could not reap any direct benefit, and which, in their eyes, with what reason let it now be judged, is so far from being a good one.

^b To Maxim 8.—General proof—universal understanding and universal practice.—Specific proof—opinion delivered in the Earl of Harrowby's Speech, as above.

Speaking of the Act of Henry the Eighth, by which Non-Residence was disallowed in some cases, but allowed in others,—after saying (p. 20) that “the extreme strictness and universality” of the disallowance “had brought it into desuetude,” and without saying any thing in favour of an universal disallowance, in any case, or in any date of the Church, “I am induced” (says he) “by many considerations to think, that, in an establishment “where the income of benefices bear no proportion to the labour “or importance of the cure, a strict injunction of universal residence could neither be practicable nor desirable.”

Speaking immediately after of Pluralities, “I am equally “averse” (continues he) “to the abolition of pluralities;” (p. 21.) “but the more I have considered the subject, the more “firmly am I convinced that some regulation, by which the “tent of pluralities and non-residence should either directly or “indirectly be reduced, is essential to the existence of an Established Church in this kingdom.”—So far his Lordship: Regulation?—Yes:—for how trifling soever the regulation, whatsoever is regulated is thereby confirmed.

Regulate, and by regulation confirm the practice of non-residence and pluralism? Regulate then next, and by regulation confirm the practices of shop-lifting and swindling. So many instances of Sinecurism, so many instances of the safe-obtainment of money in large masses by false pretence. So many instances of Non-Residence, so many instances of Sinecurism.—So many instances of Pluralism, so many instances—of Sinecurism, of Non-

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

Residence, total or partial,—and thereby of obtainment on false pretences. So many benefices possessed by one and the same Pluralist, so many instances, with or without the exception of one, of the obtainment of money, by this same person, on this same false pretence.

ⁱ To Maxim 9.—See Note (^k) to Maxim 10.

^k To Maxim 10.—Proof, universally established practice—general understanding grounded on it, and the opinion of the Earl of Harrowby, as evidenced by the silence maintained in relation to this subject, as well in his plan of reform as in the Speech spoken by him on the introduction of it. Of “surplice fees,” in p. 8, he makes explicit mention: but to no other purpose than the remarking, that “it was impossible to comprehend them in one abstract.” And though it is by the officiating minister, that in every instance they are received,—by the Curate, as often as he is the officiating Minister,—by the Curate in whose hands it would have been in his Lordship’s power to keep them in every instance, by a clause, prohibiting the Incumbent from ever taking them out of the hands of his Curate,—to Curates (p. 22) he gives enormous and constantly disproportionate sums, for an “extent of labour” in every other particular purely imaginary, (so it will soon be seen), suppressing all mention of these constantly proportionate remunerations.

^l To Maxim 11.—Proof, established practice; and, among Church-of-Englandists, an extensively, if not generally, prevalent understanding, of which that practice is effect and cause: moreover, recognition made of the existence of this practice by the Earl of Harrowby, where, as above, (Note (^s) in Maxim 7) he says, (Speech, p. 33) “the parish church . . . is insufficient to “accommodate the rich, and, in too many places, is almost shut “against the poor.”—According to a notion imputed to Mahomet and his followers, women have no souls: according to an opinion thus proved, as above, upon Church-of-Englandists, the poor, “in too many places,” either have no souls at all, or none that are worth saving from hell-fire. On this head see Note (^s) to Maxim 7. But the exclusion thus put upon the poor, whence comes it? Whence but from the fundamental principle, acted upon by the Church of England, at the period of what on that occasion is called the Reformation? viz. the sacrifice of the spiritual interest of poor and rich to the temporal interests of the rich.

NOTES TO EXCELLENT CHURCH'S MAXIMS.

^m To Maxim 13.—See Note (^c) to Maxim 3.

ⁿ To Maxim 14.—See Note (^c) to Maxim 3. Proof, established regulations; in particular, the Statute, called the Act of Uniformity, (13 and 14, c. 2. c. 4.)—practice established under and according to these regulations,—and general understanding, in conformity to those regulations and that practice. See also Note (^a) to Maxim 1.

^o To Maxim 15.—See Note (^c) to Maxim 3.

^p To Maxim 16.—See Note (^c) to Maxim 3; and the scheme of the Noble Church Reformer on this subject, as noticed in Note (^c) to Maxim 3, and Note (^b) to Maxim 10.

^q To Maxim 17.—See Maxim 14: and Note (^c) to Maxim 3.

§ 5.—Pay continued—Merit, whether produceable by Sinecures, &c.

Zealot.—But merit?—What do you say to merit?—Surely has it all this while been altogether out of your thoughts! Sinecures—the great use of them—and is it not a sufficient use? is—to serve as rewards for merit. In this line of public service—(and can there be any other equally important one?) take away Sinecures, and other liberally paid offices, you leave merit without hope of reward; and, if thus you leave merit without hope of reward, is not this excluding it? In this line, or any other, do you know of any thing better than merit?—And can you have too much of it?—And, if you could, which you cannot, would you be un-generous enough—illiberal enough—unjust enough—to leave it without paying for it?

Graduate.—Before all things it is necessary to have a meaning. When you talk of merit—of having Sinecures to give as rewards for merit—what I do understand is—that your wish is to have public money in this shape, to dispose of as may be most agreeable to you: what I do not understand is—on what public ground, for what public cause, you claim thus to have it at your disposal.

What, in my notion of the matter, is the only justifiable cause for the disposing of the matter of reward, in this or any other shape, is the production of public service: say—if in the sound of the word merit there be any thing particularly agreeable to you—say the production of meritorious, but be pleased to add, beneficial, public service: for ordinary service, ordinary reward; for extra service, extra reward: and, moreover, be pleased to remember, that in no shape, pecuniary or not pecuniary, can the matter of reward be bestowed by government, but that it is at the expense of the whole community that it is bestowed.

Production of public service—in this result then behold the only proper object, of reward bestowed on the sort of occasion here in question : bestowed by the trustees for the public ;—bestowed at the expense of the public ;—bestowed in an indefinitely large proportion, if not in the whole, at the expense of unwilling contributors.

A most pernicious,—and, at the same time, a most deplorably common, error,—is that by which the case of reward, administered as here at public expense, is confounded with the case, in which it is administered at personal expense : with the case, in which the party by whom it is administered is the party at whose expense it is administered. Administered at personal expense, excess is neither probable nor mischievous : be it ever so great, no person, other than the donor, can find in the magnitude of it any cause of complaint : and, by the supposition, no such cause does he find : administered at public expense, excess is constantly mischievous, and as constantly probable. Liberality—generosity—such are the attributes ascribed to the gift, and thence to the giver, in the case where, in respect of its magnitude, the disposition made of the good thing given in the way of reward, is an object of approbation to him by whom it is thus spoken of. Applied to reward, conferred at personal expense, these eulogistic appellatives are innoxious, and even beneficial : applied to reward, conferred at public expense, they are noxious ; they are instruments of pernicious delusion ; they are instruments in the hand of misrule, peculation, and degradation. Liberality at a man's own expense—liberality at other men's expense—what can be more opposite ? In the first case, and in that alone, it is that self-denial can find place : in the other case, instead of self-denial, nothing is to be seen but selfishness. In the first case, the only tax imposed is the tax imposed by the giver upon his own self-regarding affection, imposed for the gratification of his own sympathetic—of his own social affections: so let him do, tax those his personal affections—as high as he pleases—you need not fear his over-taxing them: should he even do so, it is his concern alone—not any body else's.

These things considered, if it be at public expense, talk not of rewarding merit—talk not of retribution—talk not of remuneration—at any rate in the character of an end in view: of words of this complexion, by the indeterminateness of their import, the tendency is—to mislead men's minds, and to reconcile them to misrule, in the shapes of waste, peculation, and depredation: say always production of public service, or, if you please, production of meritorious public service. By either of these phrases, indication is given of the object, which, on the occasion in question, is, or ought to be, the sole and immediate end in view:—an object, which is at the same time a test of the propriety of the disposition made, and a measure of propriety for the quantity so disposed of.

By the word merit, what is the object really designated? Any specific quality in the subject? No: nothing but the affection with which, by him, by whom the word is employed, the subject is regarded,—unless it be the property which the subject manifests, in giving birth to the affection so excited and directed. A libel is any thing that a man does not like: merit is any thing he does like: libel is a word invented to enable men to waste punishment at pleasure: merit is a word invented to enable them to waste reward at pleasure.

For bestowing reward at public expense, on any occasion or in any shape, this then being the only proper object and immediate end in view—the only justifiable cause —viz. production of public service,—so it is that, with reference to the accomplishment of this object, rewards, in the shape now in question, viz. Sinecures and Extra-paid places, will be seen to be essentially improper: being not only not conducive to that end, but, with reference to the attainment of it, positively adverse and obstructive.

Uncertainty, unproportionality, abstractiveness or seductiveness, and degradingness,—in the combination of all these qualities, may the cause of the impropriety be seen in the case of Sinecures; in the combination of all of them but the last, in the case of Extra-paid places.

1. Uncertainty:—for it is by existing, not by future contingent bread, that man is kept alive. In the list of Sinecures, be it ever so long, and be the service ever so meritorious, so it may be, that no one article,—such as, for the merit and the man in question, can be spared,—shall have fallen in, till the man is dead, the service forgotten, or some other service performed by some other man, whose service, or whose merit, i. e. whose person is more acceptable.

2. Unproportionality:—for,—on the one hand, be the value of the past service to be rewarded, and on the other hand the value of the service producible by means of the reward, what it may,—so it is that, the value of the reward being fixt, and not capable of being adapted to the value of either of those services, the chances are indefinitely great, that in quantity it will be either greater or less than the proper one.*

* By this circumstance, therefore, is a Sinecure distinguished from a Pension. A Pension is not, in its own nature, incapable of being adjusted—adjusted with any degree of nicety to the value of the service: a Sinecure is. No wonder: for it is not by any view of making application of them to any such purpose as that of a reward for real public service, that in any branch of the public service they have been produced.

3. Abstractiveness or seductiveness: abstractiveness, the property of drawing a man out of the meritorious course to which he should be attached; seductiveness, the property of drawing him into a course of dissipation: leading him into a life of idleness, or engaging him in the pursuit of what commonly goes by the name of pleasure: of pleasure in those shapes in which the sudden influx of the matter of wealth now for the first time enables him to purchase it. Of this effect the magnitude will indeed depend upon the relative magnitude of the lot of reward—the Sinecure. But, in the case in question, this magnitude is in many instances notoriously enormous.

4. Degradingness: of this quality, and its inherency in the very essence of a Sinecure, mention has been already made: the shape being such, that in this shape reward cannot be received by a man, without his aggregating himself to a class of men, in whose instance nothing but condign punishment is wanting to aggregate them to the class of notorious criminals.

In this quality of degradingness may be seen, as above, the only shade of difference, which, in this respect, has place between the case of a Sinecure and the case of an overpaid place, of the pay of which the excess, instead of being, for the benefit of the public, suppressed, is kept on foot, to be disposed of in the same manner that a Sinecure, so called, would be disposed of. Where the excess arises from the smallness of the quantity of time employed in the performance of the duties, the office is in fact, by the amount of the deficiency in the article of time employed in the performance of the duties of it, a Sinecure.

Thus much being thus proved, viz. that to the production of meritorious public service in any line, reward, in either of the shapes in question, more particularly in that of Sinecure, is essentially ill adapted, another proposition presents itself, the proof of which may be apt to appear a work of supererogation. This is—that in relation to the production of extra-meritorious public service in the line here in question, the tendency of purely factitious extra reward, not only in this shape, but in any shape, is not conducive, but adverse and preventive.

As to the exigible duties, it is only in and by Sermons that extra-meritorious service referable to this head can be rendered.

Matter and delivery—to one or other of these heads will be found referable, whatsoever merit is capable of having place in a discourse of any kind: whatsoever service, extra-meritorious or simply meritorious, is capable of being rendered by it. So far as it is by the reading of a fixt form, such as the Liturgy, that the duty is performed, so far under the head of matter, no place is left for merit on the part of any individual, present or future. So far as concerns delivery, whatever comes to be said in regard to the reading of a Sermon, will, without considerable variation, be applicable to the reading of the Liturgy.

1. As to Sermons, and the meritorious service which in respect of the matter of them is capable of being rendered, true it cannot but be admitted to be, that while printing was unknown or rare, factitious extra reward might by its application to extra-meritorious service in this shape have been not incapable of being employed with beneficial effect. But by that admirable art, so it is that, for merit in this, as well as so many other lines of public service, has been brought into existence a species of reward in the shape of natural, i. e. naturally attached reward, by which, in this country at any rate,—unless it be, in some such way as will be seen, in subordination to this natural reward,—whatever may have been or may be the case in other times or other places, the use of factitious reward has been done away.

By natural or naturally attached reward, understand any benefit which, without any thing done for the purpose, either by the hand of government, or by any other hand, finds its way into the hands of him by whom the service in question has been rendered.

On most parts of the field of literature, and on that in question in a greater degree than almost any other,—to a written discourse, by which extra-meritorious service is capable of being in any shape rendered to the public, is naturally attached a mass of reward in a pecuniary shape, dependent upon publication, and consisting in author's profits. A class of cases is not altogether wanting in which,—by reason that the benefit, howsoever real and important, does not in colours sufficiently strong present itself to the feelings of a sufficiently considerable part of the whole number of the persons benefited, or capable of being benefited,—this naturally attached reward fails of being adequate. But assuredly the case here in question belongs not to that class.

In most instances, and in particular in the present,—among the properties of this natural reward, one is—that of being more eminently exempt than any factitious reward can be from the danger of being misapplied: another is, that, in respect of proportionality with reference to the value of the service, it presents in general a fairer chance than is presented by any such factitious reward: a third is—that, in the very nature of the case, it comes all of it from willing, no part of it from unwilling hands: thence so it is, that no suffering is produced by it. Of these three desirable properties, the last cannot by any person be denied to belong to it. The two first may indeed:—but by whom?—By those to whom,—their own “understandings

“and wills,” together with the few others which are in league with them, being, in their eyes, the only “understandings and wills” worthy of being regarded otherwise than with contempt,—it is accordingly an object prudently concealed, or madly avowed, to keep in a state of “protraction” those same faculties in all other men.

In the case of the proposed Homily Sermons, the conception has been seen to be—that, without the benefit of any ulterior reward, natural or factitious, the utility of the service rendered to Church-of-Englandists in general by Church attendance, might, even in their own conceptions, be rendered in a very considerable degree greater than it is at present. Still, however, on this plan, service in this same shape, more and more useful, was not by any means out of view. Were the door of the proposed collection to remain inexorably shut against all future additions, the application of the existing stock of natural reward might, in a degree more or less considerable, be obstructed. But,—if, on this occasion, due attention being paid to the course naturally taken by the natural reward, the application of factitious reward be guided by it,—factitious reward might, in this particular way (it is supposed) be employed—not only without any ill effects, but even with positive good effect.*

* Five, it is believed, is the number of 8vo. volumes containing the Sermons published by the late Dr. Blair, of Edinburgh. Not till some time after the first, came successively the four others. For each of the four he received, by agreement, from the firm of Millar and Cadell (since Cadell and Davies) 1,000*l.*: concerning the price paid for the first, nothing can here be said with certainty. After payment of these great prices, so vast was the profit made by the Booksellers, that, from an emotion of spontaneous generosity, they presented him with 1,000*l.* more. The choice was given him of plate or money. He chose the money: it was paid him, to the knowledge of the writer of this article, by Sir William Forbes, banker, of Edinburgh.

Thus much as to matter. Remains delivery. Remains thereupon to be shewn, that, in regard to the production of extra-meritorious service in this shape, the tendency of factitious reward would be rather preventive than promotive.

So far as depends upon good delivery, nothing can be more assuredly attached to extra-meritorious service in the character of a preacher, nothing more certainly and exactly proportionate, than natural reward. The more impressive the delivery, the more auditors: the more auditors, not only the greater the quantity of reward reaped in the shapes of admiration, respect, and reputation, but, if

With the indications thus given, to serve as securities for substantial correctness,—the writer, though anonymous, may venture to propose the anecdote as a subject for inquiry.

Instruction, in more shapes than one, may be derived from it.

1. To moderate desires, such as suit the subject and the profession, natural reward, in a quantity not incapable of operating with beneficial effect, is attached to meritorious service in this line and in this shape.

2. By Church-of-Scotlandism, with its 933 Parish Priests and no more, service of greater value, in this line and in this shape, has been produced, than by Church-of-Englandism, with its 11,000 Parish Priests and more, besides its hierarchy of Archbishops and Bishops, with Sinecurists dignified and undignified, possessors of extravagantly paid benefices,—all kept on foot under the notion of their being applied in remuneration and production of extra-meritorious service. By no Church-of-England Clergyman, Priest, Bishop, or Archbishop, even though Tillotson was one Archbishop, has ever been produced a collection of Sermons, of which the number of purchasers, and thence necessarily of readers, has been near so great.

3. Even in the conception of Church-of-Englandists themselves, instruction not unwholesome is not altogether incapable of being drawn, from a fountain, ecclesiastically speaking, foreign and schismatical as it is. For, unless in no small proportion to Church-of-Englandists, could any such vast number of copies have been sold? Assuredly in houses, zealously Church-of-Englandist, have they been found by the writer of these pages. Note that in the whole collection not so much as a single part (it is believed) can be found touched upon, that is in controversy between the two Churches.

the preacher chooses, the more money. Even under Church-of-Englandism, though not in Parish Churches, yet in Chapels built or hired on speculation, the truth of this, and even without prejudice to orthodoxy, has been experienced by many a Clergyman, much to his advantage.

In the established Church of Scotland, in the three first-mentioned acquisitions—viz. admiration, respect, and reputation, may indeed be seen all the rewards that a Clergyman can look for from this particular source. But in these shapes, refined as they are, is reward altogether without its value?—altogether destitute of operative and productive energy?

In the Non-Established Churches,—as, in the way of natural reward (factitious having in this case no existence), almost every thing depends upon Prayers and Sermons, matter and delivery together,—so accordingly in no small degree upon delivery.*

All this while,—though, under Church-of-Englandism, for extra-meritorious service in this shape—matter and delivery together—adequate natural reward, as above, is, to those to whom it appears worth their while to seek it, by no means unattainable,—yet, if the maximum of meritorious service in this shape were the object, the Church to look to would, for the reasons already given, be—among Established Churches, not the English, but the Scotch; to which may be added, with little distinction, all the Non-Established Churches.

Yes: so far from producing it, the tendency of Sinceres,—of factitious reward, especially in any such large masses,—particularly in this line of service,—is—to prevent merit from coming into existence. To the natural reward as above described, in possession or in prospect, substitute now, or add a mass of factitious reward: a richer living, a fat Deanery, or a Bishoprick:—what will be the consequence?—The factitious reward—it will be at the hands of this or that high-rated individual, in the character of Patron, that it will be looked for: instead of being worshipped by his congregation, the business of the Preacher will be to worship this giver of good gifts: to that object will all his attention and exertions be directed. This, while the reward is as yet but in expectancy. But, suppose it in possession, and no ulterior object of ambition in prospect, then not only in the line of public service, but in every other line, even in the line of Patron-worship, will exertions cease. The hope of the reward is what the exertions had for their cause: the cause ceasing, so does the effect.

* Of delivery, the component parts are intonation and gesture. As to gesture, from a man reading out of a book, scarcely would it any where be endurable. In England, scarcely, without much reserve, from a man preaching without book. Englishmen are not Athenians.

Thus stands the matter so far as depends upon the performance of the duties of perfect obligation. Turn now to those of imperfect obligation—the inexigible services so often distinguished and explained. On condition of his residency then, and in proportion to the relative value which his charity, his zeal, and his intelligence, give to them,—respect, and, within a moderately extensive circle, reputation, will attach upon them, and constitute in the breast of the Parish Priest the temporal and human part of his reward; as to admiration—of that sort which is the fruit of discourse, and in a more particular manner of oratory,—it belongs not to this part of his field of duty: but in lieu of it, he finds in affection a more appropriate, and to a pious taste a less suspected, and upon the whole a sweeter fruit.

Apply now the fatter Living, the fat Deanery, the fat Bishoprick: during expectancy, behold now the same destructive and seductive influence; after possession, the same narcotic and sedative influence.

What happens but seldom will yet happen now and then. Well then:—from admiration of the degree of perfection in which these inexigible services have been rendered by a Parish Priest, a Patron bestows upon him the adipose matter:—the rich living, the dignified Sinecure, the Bishoprick. Suppose this for argument sake. Upon Parish Priests in general will the gift operate with any such general effect as that of producing increase of meritorious service in this same shape?—No: the most commonly, not the most rarely productive cause, is the cause to which by men at large, an effect is ascribed: the gift itself will be visible to all eyes; the cause of it to but a few: not merit, but what is called interest, will have the credit of it.

For rewarding merit—and perhaps, if pressed, for rewarding meritorious public service—this forsooth is the pretence on which ye ask for the disposal of these good gifts. Ah, hypocrites! is it for any such use that ye covet them? Unless it be to make the surer of keeping them for other uses, do ye ever put them to any such use?—Not ye indeed; ye know better things.

Works of supererogation and policy excepted, as above, interest in some shape or other—by this familiar and comprehensive name may be expressed the efficient cause, to which in every instance the receipt of any such good gift may, without danger of error, be ascribed. By some modification or other of the art of pleasing, the clerical person has found favour in the Patron's sight: by good fortune or industry he has found the means of rendering himself in some way or other useful to him: son, cousin, quondam preceptor, dependent—to the Patron he bears some relation or other, which renders it either a matter of profit, or a point of honour, to make provision for him :—add the same cases, having place or relation to any near connexion or particular friend of the Patron. Lastly, not least appositely, in either House suppose vote and speech, or though it be but a vote, secured, during the life of the Parliament, to Monarch or Minister—secured in either case to legitimacy—by a dutiful and loyal use of so divine an attribute as that of beneficence. Of all these causes,—to which more and more might be added,—is there any one that will not be recognized in the character of a more probable cause for the effect, than any such rare and magnanimous desire, as that of giving, in any line of office, sacred or profane, increase to meritorious public service?

Rich gifts in this shape are not well adapted to the production of extra-meritorious service in any line of office :—rich gifts in any shape are not promotive but preventive of extra-meritorious service in the line of ecclesiastical office. It is not for any such purpose that they were instituted : it is not for any such purpose that they are kept on foot. Of any one of these positions is the truth a secret?—No more than the existence of Saint Paul's Cathedral within view from St. James's Park.

Even by a man who in general piques himself upon conscientiousness or public spirit, will any scruple or mystery be made of their being obtained by him, or of him, by interest?—by interest, in some shape or other, as above particularized?

Meantime,—as the same activity, which is exerting itself principally in the more efficient art of interest-making, may, in the meantime, be exercising itself with more or less success in the less efficient art of preaching, each art lending encouragement to the other,—what, among such a multitude, might equally have been effected by a throw of the dice, may also be effected by the sort of state policy above spoken of: viz. in the multitude of cyphers setting down here and there a significant figure. While, by “usefulness” in the Treasury sense, and by those other arts by which such eminences are most naturally gained, working himself up to St. James’s,—even the recorded contemner of “Ale-drinkers,” and supporter of their “poisoners,” was displaying, it is said, such pulpit talents, as reflected a certain degree of countenance on the countenance he was receiving. And thus it is, that, as the hierarchy never has been, so never can it be in much danger of being altogether destitute of merit: of merit, to wit, of that quality and in that quantity, which will have enabled this or that Courtly writer, whose language is the language of harmonious exaggeration, to give a description of the Bishops’ Bench in some such strain as may be found set by Pope:

“ Ev’n in a Bishop I can spy Desert;

“ Secker is decent, Rundel has a Heart,

“ Manners with Candour are to Benson giv’n,

“ To Berkley, every Virtue under Heaven.”

Pope’s Epilogue to the Satires, Dial. ii.

In all this there may have been little or nothing that was not true. But supposing it all most correctly true, what would it prove in favour of the existence of Bishopricks? For being decent, having a heart, or having manners with candour, is there any necessity or use in giving a man from 1,000*l.* to 25,000*l.* a year? And suppose Berkley to have had every virtue under heaven, what,—out of the small circle in which he moved, and in which his virtue found his reward,—was the country the better for it? that part of it excepted which was embodied in his published works, and which also generated its own reward.*

* INCOMES of ENGLISH and IRISH BISHOPRICS, with intimations concerning the interest, by which they were most of them respectively ob-

But—the few grains of wheat, which accident and policy concur in scattering in among the chaff, do they do any thing like paying for the manure? In the Scottish Church, without this part of the expense, in the Non-Established Churches without any expense, you have all tained. From the Morning Chronicle for the 25th February, 1813, and 19th April, 1813.

N. B. By the sums annexed are designated—not the whole Ecclesiastical incomes enjoyed by the respective Bishops, but the incomes belonging to the Bishopricks, exclusive of such Sinecures, and *Living*s converted by them and for their benefit into Sinecures, as are held with these same Bishopricks.

ENGLISH BISHOPRICKS: 19th April, 1813.

Canterbury, Duke of Rutland's cousin	£ 20,000
York, Lord Vernon's and Harcourt's brother	14,000
Durham, Lord Barrington's uncle	24,000
Winchester, late Lord North's brother	18,000
Ely, Duke of Rutland's tutor	12,000
London, Dr. Randolph	9,000
Bath and Wells, Duke of Gloucester's tutor	5,000
Chichester, Duke of Richmond's tutor	4,000
Litchfield, Lord Cornwallis's uncle	6,000
Worcester, Dr. Cornewall	6,000
Hereford, Duke of Beaufort's tutor	4,000
Bangor, Son of Queen's English master	5,000
St. Asaph, Lord Buckingham's tutor	6,000
Oxford, Brother of Prince Regent's tutor	3,000
Lincoln, Mr. Pitt's secretary	5,000
Salisbury, Princess Charlotte's tutor	6,000
Norwich, Dr. Bathurst	4,000
Carlisle, Duke of Portland's tutor	3,500
St. David's, Dr. Burgess	5,000
Rochester, Duke of Portland's secretary	1,500
Exeter, Lord Chichester's brother	3,000
Peterborough, Dr. Madan	1,000
Bristol, Mr. Perceval's tutor	1,000
Landaff, Dr. Watson	900

the wheat without any of the chaff. In the Scottish Church you have all professional services, inexigible as

Gloucester, Dr. Huntingford	1,200
Chester, Lord Ellenborough's brother	1,000
Sodor and Man, Mr. George Murray, son of late Bishop of St. David's, Duke of Athol's nephew in law, Earl of Kinnoul's brother-in-law
	£169,100

IRISH BISHOPRICS: 25th February, 1813.

Armagh, Marquis of Bute's brother	£14,000
Cashel, Viscount Middleton's brother	8,000
Tuam, Marquis of Waterford's uncle	9,000
Dublin, Bishop of St. Asaph's brother	12,000
Kildare, Lord Balcarras's brother	7,000
Meath, Duke of Portland's private secretary	6,000
Derry, Lord Northland's brother	13,000
Kilmore, Marquis of Waterford's cousin, about	6,000
Elphin, Lord Clancarty's brother	10,000
Killaloe, Marquis of Ely's brother	6,000
Raphoe, Marquis of Waterford's brother, about	9,000
Cork, Lord Howth's brother	5,000
Fernes, Lord Roden's brother	6,000
Down, Lord Caledon's cousin	6,000
Killala, Dr. Vershoegle	3,500
Cloyne, Dr. Bennett	5,000
Clogher, Dr. Porter	7,000
Waterford, Dr. Stock	6,000
Ossory, Dr. Kearney	3,500
Dromore, Dr. Leslie	5,000
Limerick, Dr. Warburton	6,000
Clonfert, Dr. Batson	3,500
	£156,500

[From the Morning Chronicle, 25th Aug. 1813.]

"The vacancies filled up by this Administration (there is now one open) on the Bench of Bishops, in Ireland, have been seven; of these, four were well as exigible, with most important extra-professional duties, all well performed:—not to speak of human learn-given to the brothers of the Marquis of Waterford, Earls Howth, Roden, and Kilkenny. It will be observed, that the Marquis of Waterford has three mitres now in his family, the Archbishoprick of Tuam, and the Bishopricks of Kilmore and Killaloe. How much “Virtue and Talent” do these Beresfords possess. In the same way have the enormous Irish livings been disposed of.

“The vacancies (before the last) that they have filled up on the Bench, in England, have been eight; the persons who have been selected have been the Tutors of the Dukes of Buccleugh, Portland, Gloucester, Rutland, the brother of the Prince-Regent’s Tutor, the Secretary of the Duke of Portland, and a brother of Lord Ellenborough. The LAWS, in England, rival the BERESFORDS, in Ireland; for they have had three mitres. The present Bishop of Chester’s father had the See of Carlisle, and his brother, the See of Elphin.

“The Deaneries, Prebends, &c. have been chiefly got by the Duke of Beaufort, Lords Harrouby, Brownlow, &c. for their own connexions. With the exception of the Deanery of Canterbury, bestowed upon a popular preacher, we ask whether one of those good things has fallen upon a person recommended alone ‘by Virtue and Talent?’—N. B. Mask not yet dropped off.

“It is a moot point, whether the Bishoprick of Waterford, just vacant by the death of Dr. Stock, is in the patronage of the Duke of Richmond or Lord Whitworth: the latter, though sworn in Lord Lieutenant of Ireland before the English Council (it is contended) not being virtually invested with the Sovereign Authority of the Sister Kingdom, until he is also sworn into that high office before the Privy Council of Ireland also. It is said, however, that the brother of the Attorney-General of Ireland is to be the new Bishop of Waterford.

“The Bishopric of Bristol is about to receive a considerable addition to its episcopal revenue, through the means of the Archbishop of Canterbury, the valuable rectory of Almondsford, on the Severn, in the patronage of the Bishop of Bristol, having just become vacant, but the presentation to it devolving to his Grace, as an option, he has liberally waved his right, on condition that it be annexed to the See in perpetuity, which will raise it from six hundred to two thousand two hundred pounds per annum.”

Engaging every successive Bishop of Bristol to obtain this same Living, on pretence of doing all the duty, with a fixed determination not to do any part of it—such is the virtue, which, under the name of liberality, is, by the candour of this Opposition writer, whoever he is, made matter of

ing. In the Non-Established Churches, though in all of them without the extra-professional services, and in perhaps the most populous of them without human learning, you have the professional services, inexigible as well as exigible, rendered under circumstances of which a still more active zeal than in any Established Church, even than in that of Scotland, is a natural, not to say a necessary consequence.

Good my Lord, I have now, I hope, afforded your Lordship satisfaction as to the above six or seven points: viz. 1. That the probable production of public service, in some specific shape, and not merit at large, is the only proper ground, on which, at the expense of the public, the matter of reward, in any shape, can be bestowed:—2. That as in every line of public service, so more particularly in this, a Sinecure is, in every imaginable point of view, ill-suited to any such purpose as that of the production of meritorious public service:—3. That by none of the duties performed by a Clergyman of the Church of England can any such service be rendered, the production of which can reasonably be expected to be promoted by factitious extra reward in any shape, and particularly in the shape of Sinecure or Extra-paid office:—4. That,—for production of every the most valuable service, which in that situation and character can be rendered,—the reward which, by the very nature of the case, without any thing done by government, attaches upon the service, is proper, and, with or without a proposed slight exception, sufficient: 5. that of laud, for the benefit of his Grace of Canterbury. But, quære as to the matter of fact?—As to the obtainment of *Living*s by Bishops, see further under the head of Discipline.

Morning Chronicle, 19th Nov. 1813.—“Ministers have rewarded their friend, Dr. Parsons, of Oxford, with the Bishoprick of Peterborough;—it is not forgotten with how much zeal he discharged the duties of the Presiding Officer, during Lord Eldon’s unsuccessful contest for the Chancellorship of the University.”

large masses of factitious reward,—whether in the shape of Sinecure or any other,—under Church-of-Englandism, the natural effect, so far from causing to come, is to prevent meritorious public service from coming, into existence: 6. that (saving your Lordship's presence) instead of the giving existence to meritorious public service, the views of those by whom the continuance of Sinecures, and overpaid and useless and needless places is contended for, are of a nature altogether opposite: advancement of personal and private interest at the expense of public, the end; corruption, the means: that (to come to particulars) Deaneries, Canonries, Prebends, with their respective et cæteras, and moreover the Incumbent's part of the profit of *Living*s served by Curates, are plainly useless, and worse than useless:—that the difference between Curate's pay and the least pay for which any man or boy, that can read, would read what the Curate reads, is also useless; and that Bishopricks and Archbishopricks, unless any adequate use can be found for them under the head of Discipline (of which presently) are in a still worse case.

To your Lordship's universally acknowledged merit—to that demand for reward of the highest price, which is so illustriously visible in your Lordship's case—I bow with prostrate reverence:—but, on a case so singular, no true general proposition can be built.

§ 6—III. Discipline.

Church discipline may be considered, in its exercise over the Clergy, or in its exercise over the people at large, i. e. over Clergy and Laity together; say for shortness, over the Laity.

In an Established Church, considered in its exercise over the Clergy, the proper use of it may be defined to be, so to order matters, that, in return for the pay, if any, service shall be rendered, such as shall in quality be conformable to the system established in regard to doctrine, and moreover adequate in respect of quantity.

1. First, as to the duties of perfect obligation.—

Under a Liturgy, quality being secured by the fixt form, if the Parish-boy be employed to read the Minister's part, nothing can be easier than to secure the performance of the service in due quantity. For the stated and periodically recurring parts pay him each time, as, for the occasional parts of the service, the Minister is paid at present; viz. by the fees called surplice fees. The paymasters may be the Churchwardens.

Under Church-of-Englandism, as to every part of the service but the Sermons, doctrine is secured by the Liturgy. By the here-proposed authoritative Collection of Homily Sermons, it would be no less effectually secured in regard to Sermons.

In regard to both these parts of the service, for securing conformity on the part of the proposed Parish-boy, no great expense, either in money, attention, or talent, would be necessary.

In case of involuntary deviations, suspension, or in case of delinquency, repeated in such sort as to serve as conclusive evidence of inaptitude, deprivation might, by the governing body of the Parish, be inflicted without much difficulty. In case of purposed delinquency, through boyish malice, a proportionate application of the rod might be added. But, under the absence of all ordinary motives for purposed delinquency, naturally speaking, whatsoever is said about the rod, may remain a dead letter for any number of ages.

In a Non-Established Church, no apparatus is employed

—no official establishment—no body of coercive laws—for the maintenance of discipline. With perfect simplicity, and with no less perfect efficiency, the discipline is exercised by the lay-members of the Church themselves; by the lay-members, in their character of voluntary contributors to the expense. If the service had ever failed to be performed, no member would have paid any thing: if for a time the service were to cease to be performed, for that same time at least, every member who thought fit so to do would cease to pay. But, this being the case, and universally seen to be the case, in no instance in any such Church does the service cease to be performed. Not for a year—not so much as for a day—is any such office a Sine-cure. If, in respect of quality, it is, in the judgment of any such member, to a certain degree ill-performed, he stops his attendance and with it his contribution. This stoppage has, according to the amount of it, the effect of a legal penalty: but with this difference, viz. that by the endeavour, successful or unsuccessful, to cause a legal penalty to be levied, the burthen of litigation would to a certainty be laid upon the shoulders of both parties, while the success of the endeavour, be the offence ever so flagrant, would still be uncertain: whereas, in a Non-Established Church, no sooner, on the part of the Minister, does any thing, which, in the conception of a contributing member, is regarded as delinquency, manifest itself, than he withdraws his contribution, and, with the exception of the delay, vexation, and expense, attendant on litigation, this subtraction has the effect of a fine: and of this fine, the severity is exactly as the number of the contributing members, by whom, in any such degree, as to call for punishment in this shape, what is done is regarded as constituting an offence.

Under the established Church of Scotland, a body of coercive laws, for the maintenance of discipline, has place : but, for the giving execution to those laws, no separate official establishment has place. With the assistance of a certain proportion of the Laity, the Clergy,—amongst whom inequality is no more established or suffered, than by Jesus it was among his Apostles,—the Clergy, collected in bodies, exercise what little discipline needs to be exercised by them, over one another, considered as individuals.

In this Church, discipline cannot, it is true, be in every instance exercised without litigation. But in this Church the form of procedure in these cases being,—not, as under the English Church, technical,—that is, teeming with factitious delay, vexation, and expense,—and established and kept up for the sake of the lawyer's profit upon the expense,—but natural,*—and thence pure of all those abominations,—the burthen of litigation is reduced to its minimum.

The use of judicial procedure,—or, in other words, of litigation,—bating the bad sense, which, by the blind feeling of the miseries produced by technical procedure, has been so indiscriminately attached to the word litigation—is to give effect to the substantive portion, or main body, of the law. If, of the ordinances contained in this main body, so it be that no infringement ever takes place, no demand can there ever be for litigation : suppose infringement, the demand will, in any given space of time, be as the number of the infringements. If,—while, in case of infringement, there are any persons, who at the same time possess and feel an interest in the execution of these ordinances, no instance occurs of any demand calling for their execution, such demand being capable of being made without any delay, vexation, or expense, to the demandant, other than that minimum which is inseparable from natural procedure,—it is a sign that no transgression ever takes place : and so, the less frequent the demand, the less frequent may the instances of transgression be justly concluded to be.

* For the differences between technical and natural procedure, see Bentham's Scotch Reform, &c. throughout.

But, under the system of technical procedure transgression may be universal, and still no application for execution ever have place. And—not to speak of State—not very far from this is the situation of things under Church of England and its laws.

Moreover, in this may be seen the English of the brutum fulmen, ascribed, by the Earl of Harrowby, (p. 30) to Ecclesiastical Censures, i. e. to Church-of-England discipline. It is not that to the thunderbolt, when hurled, any thing is wanting to the rendering it as deadly as a thunderbolt need be. But the arm of the God is so formed as not to be put effectually in motion but by a certain mass of fees : and with no sufficient degree of frequency is the requisite mass to be found.

If, without a separate official establishment for the maintenance of discipline, discipline be maintained as well as, though it be no better than, with and under an establishment of this sort instituted and kept up for that purpose,—on this supposition any such establishment is at best but useless. But a proposition, the truth of which, to all who have any acquaintance with the two establishments, is perfectly notorious,—and into the truth of which no Archbishop of Canterbury, no Bishop of London, no First Lord of the Treasury, no Chancellor of the Exchequer, will venture to provoke, or so much as permit an inquiry,—is, that the degree, in which discipline is maintained in the two established Churches, is in the Scottish Church at the top of the scale of perfection, and, under the English Church, at the very bottom of it.

As to any demand that can have place for it—for the maintenance of discipline, the whole clerical part of the official establishment of England is therefore completely useless: and—to speak in particular—the several situations of Archbishop, Bishop, Archdeacon, and Rural Dean, have thus been proved to be completely useless.

Of the discipline exercised in the Church of England, the whole is in name exercised by Bishops. Of that which is thus said to be exercised by Bishops, part is really exercised by these same holy persons; part not by them, but by certain other persons, inferior but not subordinate to them, under the name of Judges of the Bishops' Court.

The part which is exercised by these Judges is that part which, according to the distinction brought to view at the outset, is exercised over the people at large, Clergy and Laity together.

Of the discipline said to be exercised by Bishops, happily for the Laity, over the Clergy alone is exercised now-a-days that part which is really exercised by Bishops.

Not efficient to any one good purpose, the discipline thus really exercised by Bishops is, on the whole of it, as far as it goes, efficient to the aggregate of all bad purposes. That aggregate is despotism.

Correlative to despotism is slavery. With vice in one form, the breast of the despot is filled by it: with vice in other forms, that of the slave. He who as towards one man acts the part of a despot, is but the more fitted for acting towards another man that of a slave. So many men as there are, one above another, standing in these relations one to another, so many links are there in the chain of slavery. To form a link, or any number of links, in such a chain, "prostration of will," so long as it lasts, suffices. But, to render it perpetual, "prostration of understanding" is moreover necessary.—Lord of London, is it not?

In whatsoever instance and to whatsoever extent, under or without the name of judicature, so it is that, in respect of happiness and unhappiness, the lot of one man is determined by another, if it be secretly, singly, and without appeal, this other is thereby constituted a despot. By publicity, so it be all-pervading, a check—and that in no inconsiderable a degree an effectual one—is applied to judicial power: more especially if the law, in the giving effect to which it is employed, be really-existing, i. e. Statute Law; in contradistinction to sham law, commonly called Common Law. Even in the darkness of secrecy, by plurality of Judges, a check is in some sort applied to despotism, since in proportion to the number, the secrecy is relaxed, and, in the event of improbity, each beholds in every other a possible accuser at least, in how small a degree so ever a probable one.

The Judge, by whom, without, or even though it be with, Statute Law—and that closely penned—for his guide, judicature is exercised, not only in secret and without appeal, but singly, is a despot complete. A Judge of this sort is every English Bishop. Of this despotism, the foundation having been laid of old, the edifice of late has been completed.—See Section 7.

1. Examination, for Orders called Holy, i. e. for the liberty of scrambling for the loaves and fishes,—on pretence of a man's having a God somewhere or other in the inside of him—say Examination for Holy Orders. 2. Licensing for Non-Residence, i. e. for obtaining money on false pretences. 3. Keeping eyes shut or open at pleasure, to non-answer or false answer to questions, by a true answer to which a Non-Resident might expose himself to penalties. 4. Apportioning of Curates' Stipends: i. e. power of taking money out of the pockets of Rectors and Vicars to put into the pockets of Curates. 5. Determining whether to the office of Parish Priest a man shall be allowed, or not allowed, to add the occupation of a Husbandman. All this judicature, behold it exercised by these Judges, acting not only in secret, but singly, and without appeal:—with an inconsiderable modification or two—too inconsiderable to be worth noticing in so general a view—exercised, the whole of it, in the way of despotism, if there be any such thing as despotism.

To weave, for the unrestrained despotism that is within, a cloak, composed of the appearance of self-restraint, is the work of hypocrisy and self-praise. The man takes his cue from, after having perhaps given his cue to, the Earl of Harrowby.* He turns up the whites of his eyes: he groans under the load: and, could his prayers be heard, this cup, as well as so many others, would be taken out of his hands:—out of the hands that clench upon it.

Under a Bishop,—that is, as often as he pleases—and he always pleases;—under his Chaplain,—(for, whenever the exercise of a Bishop's power has any thing in it beyond amusement, it is turned down to underlings) be the candidate's inaptitude ever so complete, never can any thing, but the most consummate imprudence or mishap, debar him from the benefit of the desired visit from the Holy Ghost. His being the choice of the supposed examining Bishop, and thence of the really examining Chaplain,—thence it is, that, on the part of five-and-twenty out of the six-and-twenty Examining Chaplains, or sets of Chaplains, the union of the most consummate skill and knowledge, with the most consummate probity, could not, to any such purpose as that of excluding inaptitude, be of any use, so long as there remained a twenty-sixth, at whose hands the requisite degree of indulgence might, by any means, be obtained. As in a Catholic Confessor, so in a Church-of-England Examining Chaplain, the reputation of facility,—that is, of the habitual violation of duty—the reputation, and thence the reality—is, in one shape or other, a source of profit. Before the Holy Ghost is received by him, fees most assuredly pass from hand,—fees to the amount of which there is not any limit—whatsoever be the pockets in which they ultimately find their rest.

* Speech, p. 25.—“As the law stands at present there can be no part of the duty of a Bishop more irksome and invidious, than the general exercise of a discretion, unguided by the landmarks of law,” &c. O yes: so it is with human nature. Poor Emperors! poor Kings! poor Regents! how they all suffer!—which of them for a moment would be what he is, if his subjects did not force him to it?

Under the Established Church of Scotland no license for the exercise of clerical functions is granted, but in consequence of a stout and appropriate examination, performed in and by a many-seated judicatory, and without fees. As to the Holy Ghost, he is not received by any body. Wherefore, according to Church of England, while in Church of Rome, every thing done with this or that exception, every thing done is valid; in Church of Scotland every thing done is void. In the whole Church of Scotland no such character as that of a Priest is to be found. By a man presuming to officiate in that character, every function that is performed is void. Be they ever so copiously sprinkled, all children, as well as all men and women, go to hell. Except in the profane way of digestion, no bread becomes flesh; no wine, blood. Fathers and mothers are all rogues and whores. All men and all women go to hell by a double title: firstly, as not being rightly christened; lastly, as not being rightly buried.

II. Remain, as and for the only clerical duties, to the performance of which the proposed juvenile reader would not be competent, the duties of imperfect obligation. But of these duties, neither do the Bishops enforce the performance, nor has it ever entered into their views to enforce it, nor have they it, nor can they have it, in their power to enforce it. In the nature of the case, by no sort of human power can it, with any tolerable degree of efficacy, be enforced, other than that by which it is enforced in the Established Church of Scotland, or that by which it is enforced in every Non-Established Church.

To a degree more or less efficient, without any factitious impulse from external force,—remains, in all places and at all times, in regard to these same duties, the physical power of performance.

Now then for a calculation: on the one side of the account, set down all those by whom, within a given space of time, the attribute of heroism will, in this Christian shape, have been exemplified: on the other side, those who, by the looseness of their lives, will have been rendered scandalous, and those who by pride, or exaction, or both together, will have been rendered odious:—on which of the two sides of the account will be found the largest numbers?—Note that, in so far as the aptitude of the whole system is the object of the inquiry, to the sinister side of the account will belong the number, of those in whose instance the odium has had no other cause than the exaction of that which, being legally due to them, would not but upon compulsion, have been paid to them: for here, though not the individuals, still it is the system that is in fault.

Note, that neither the dissoluteness, nor the pride, nor the exaction, have place in the Scottish Established, or can have place in any Non-Established, Church.

Thus rotten being the state of the discipline, bad as is the state of the service, which it pretends to support,—still worse would it be than it is, but for the aid it derives from schism and schismatics: from those men of guilt, whom the prostrators of understandings and wills—had they their will—would exterminate.

Schism, it has been observed already, is conducive to truth in doctrine: it is no less so to goodness in discipline. By the very nature of the case, a sort of auction is established. The article put up and bid for is public favour. The bidders are the several sects; led—such of them as have leaders—by their respective chosen instructors. The auction is a perpetual one: the biddings are in good behaviour: in whatsoever sort of good behaviour passes for the best; and which, if it be not in every point that which is most conducive to general happiness, differs not from it very widely, and, under the protection of freedom, will approach nearer and nearer to the mark continually, in proportion to the degree of freedom which has place. So many of these competitors, so many mutual spies—so many eventual informers—against that sect, in the conduct of which, if any such there be, mischief in any shape is to be found. Spies—informers—by these names are designated so many sorts of agents, to the function of which, necessary as they are in every government, the experience had of the ill use, which, in proportion as the government has been ill-constructed, has been made of them, has given an ill name: but, in the case here in question, there is no ill but in the name.

Of the service rendered in this shape by schism, due notice may be seen in Adam Smith.

Such then is this branch of the Church Discipline. The subordinate Clergy are plagued by it: the people at large, Clergy and Laity together, are not served by it.

With the discipline in no better a state than that of the English Church, suppose an English Army. The next moment, what would become of it?

In respect of discipline, between the three species of Churches, the case may be thus briefly, nor yet incorrectly, stated. In the English Established Church may be seen the forms of discipline without the substance: in the Scottish, form and substance both: in the Non-Established Churches no form, but nevertheless the substance: and this but the better, for being without the forms.

So much for Church discipline, considered as exercised over the Clergy; exercised for the purpose of securing the due performance of Church service. Now as to discipline called Church Discipline, considered as exercised over the people at large, Clergy and Laity together.

But, over the Laity, by Clerical hands, as such, to what good end should any discipline at all be exercised? Till a satisfactory answer to this question be found—and never will any such answer to it be found—so much as there is of this discipline exercised, or attempted or pretended to be exercised, so much is there of sheer abuse.

Take any of the acts, in the punishing of which this discipline is employed. For the punishment of it does any real demand exist? By whatsoever other judicatures other mischievous acts are punished, so may this be punished. Does no such demand exist? Then ought it not to be punished, by these, any more than by any other judicatures.

Turn to Blackstone, and you will find, that because, in the days of Popish darkness, for the punishment of certain offences, three sorts of judicatories were established, therefore for one and the same individual offence, there ought to be, as there are, three different sets of lawyers to prey upon both parties, offenders and injured parties together,—three separate lots of punishment, each sufficient of itself, each capable of being inflicted in addition to the two others. For the same reason, if thirty different sets of lawyers were to be fattened, every supposed offender ought to be punished thirty times over, each time sufficiently for one and the same offence : all this to save the joint lottery of Church and Law from becoming a disadvantageous one.

If, in the customary style of vulgar nonsense, addressing himself to a notorious prostitute, a man bestows upon her the epithet cursed, calling her or not calling her bitch, taking him before a Justice of Peace, she makes him pay, —for so says the law,—a shilling : if, instead of bitch, he calls her whore, neither meaning any thing more, nor hurting her any more by the word whore than by the word bitch, she puts him into a court called an Ecclesiastical Court, and neither of them get out of it for less than some twenty, thirty, or forty pounds.

The Ecclesiastical Court system is, as no one can deny, a remnant of that system of despotism called the Roman, alias the Civil law, topped by the law of Popery, called the Canon law : the whole of it as complete a nuisance as ever was established : the mode of proof employed under it as opposite as possible to whatever is acknowledged to be a proper one. If it were ten times as bad as it is, men would not be wanting, who, if possible, would be ten times as hot and inexorable as they are in the defence of it.

After all, it is only by misrepresentation that these judicatories, bad as they are, are called Ecclesiastical Courts, the system of discipline which they exercise, Ecclesiastical or Church discipline, and that part of the system of law under which they exercise it, Ecclesiastical law. The men who in these Judicatures act as Judges, are not, unless by accident, and then in no other than subordinate situations, Clergymen.

What then is it that makes this part of Church discipline so dear to Bishops, and to all others who look to become, or to make, Bishops? What is it that renders it so clear to them that without these judicatories no soul could be saved? Behold the cause. Though not themselves Bishops,—nor, unless as above in a few inconsiderable instances, so much as Priests,—the Judges of these Courts are appointed by Bishops; and, of that portion of the people's substance that can be squeezed out by the hands of those judicial Officers and their subordinates, a portion more or less considerable is employed in giving fatness to the families of Bishops.

Let the same Justice who levied a shilling for the word cursed, levy another or the same shilling for the word whore, you have at once a precedent, upon the model of which you may give exercise to what part soever there may be, if there be any, of the Church discipline exercised upon the people at large, that is fit to be exercised. So doing, you may transfigure all that portion of the hierarchy that belongs to it, into that state of beatitude which is called Sinecure. The misfortune is—that the sine-cure would in this case be also sine pay: and there would be the rub. But,—be the case as it may in regard to this or that division of the non-penal part of the business,—for the profit made out of the penal part, compensation at the public expense, might be even more than adequate, and still not ill-bestowed.

On this part of the field, as in so many others, look, and behold imposture mounted upon imposture. Imposture, the notion—that, by money squeezed out by clerical hands, souls are mended more than if the hands were non-clerical ones: imposture, the pretence that the hands thus employed in the exaction of it are clerical ones. But, so long as the people will continue to lie with their heads in a bush, to be thus vexed and pillaged, where is the imposture, where even the violence, that will be grudged?

As in the profane judicatories, so in the sacred ones—as in all other Christian countries, so in England—technical procedure, cloaking itself in the name of regular, took for its main, if not for its sole object, maximization of delay, vexation, and expense: of expense, for the sake of the profit extractible out of the expense. Among such a cloud of other witnesses, witness the Noble Lord, whose duty, if he did it, would be done by making entries in a book, and who in his share of this profit beholds, and clasps to his heart his “freehold.” Witness again that Judge, who numbers among his duties, the duty of checking and punishing any exactions which may happen to be practised to his own use; to whom all those judicatories, by which natural justice is substituted to technical injustice, are as declaredly odious as “hell is false;” and by whom, after his worthy predecessors, the requisite portion of law has been so modelled, as to transfer to the hand of the injured complainant, any punishment that may be due to the exacting and exaction-protecting Judge.

Would you be assured that profit thus extracted was at least a principal, if not the sole, object to the founders of English judicature, read Adam Smith, who unfortunately saw not, or at least has not discovered that he saw, any thing to object to it. Would you behold in all its shapes the mischief of the system by which this profit is extracted, read Bentham, who, in his Protest against Law Taxes, has given a picture of them, and in his Scotch Reform has shewn by what devices the man of law contrived in this country to swell to so exalted a pitch the profit, and for the sake of it the mischief, producible from this source.

Among the fruits of these devices, behold, as in matters between man and man, a denial of justice, so in respect of the enforcement of pastoral as well as so many other official duties, a palsy in the arm of justice,—and, in consequence of that palsy, among the Clergy a general neglect of duty, and towards those parts of the body which apply specially to their function, a generally prevalent and thoroughly confirmed habit of disobedience. In addition to reason operating upon experience, would you be assured of this by authority? call in once more the Earl of Harrowby. In the speech by which his Bill was introduced, “ecclesiastical censures” pronounced (p. 30) as above, “a brutum fulmen :” in the preamble to his Bill (p. 36), the “insufficiency” of the laws declared: throughout the whole tenor of it, the power of enforcing observance being given exclusively to the Bishops, behold it concluding with a clause (p. 40), enacting, “that Bishops shall exercise summarily, and without formal process or suit, the powers vested in them by this Act.”

Ecclesiastical censure an inefficient thunder? whence then came its inefficiency?—The laws in this behalf insufficient? whence came their insufficiency?—Is it that in the substantive part of the law there was any deficiency? No. Of penalties there was no want: of penalties, with reward upon the usual plan, to be sued for and upon conviction be paid to Informers. But,—whatsoever would have been the weight of the penalties, supposing them inflicted, and out of them the Informers paid,—such was the expense and vexation attached to the purchase of an Informer’s ticket in this part of the lottery of the law, that for generation after generation none of these tickets had found purchasers. At last an extraordinary concurrence of apparently favourable circumstances presented to one individual* a prospect of net profit in the event of his accepting the invitation held out by the law, and thus adding his labours to those of the Judge in the service of justice. He accepted it accordingly. He brought his actions. The consequence was—that, to give impunity to the delinquent, the power of Parliament being called in, was employed accordingly in breaking the faith of Parliament, and stopping the course of justice.

* Mr. W. Wright, of whom further on.

Nor, had compensation been given to the listed and then perfidiously discarded minister of justice, would it have been ill employed. Without desiring to see them enforced, the hypocrisy of a tyrannical Government had in the beginning imposed these duties. Each successive Government had, by its negligence, invited men to the violation of them. From first to last, so rotten has been the whole system, nothing but mischief could ever have been the result of whatever could have been done to patch it up.

At them once more, Lord Folkestone! humane, intrepid, generous Lord Folkestone! Piety, morality, whatever is good in government, call upon you with one voice. One more attack upon the poison-tree. Lay your axe now to the root: think it not enough now to nibble at the branches. Open once more upon the listed advocates—the well-sworn and well-subscriptionatized advocates—of whatsoever is evil—adversaries of whatsoever is good. Opposite to you behold Sir William. Give him one other ague. Death to the Church in one of its many senses, that ague will be life to the Church in its only good sense: death to so many of the sins of the ruling few, it will be salvation to the welfare of the subject multitude.

§ 7. State of Discipline, as exhibited by authority, and elucidated by a Diocesan Secretary.

Of the actual state of the Church, the picture exhibited in the under-mentioned Tables, within these few years to and by Parliament, is too instructive to be suffered to pass altogether unnoticed even in so compressed a work as the present. Coupled with the arrangements made by Henry the Eighth at the commencement of that so imperfectly beneficial change, which for want of a better, is spoken of in England by the name of the Reformation, (of which presently), it proves (as will be seen) to demonstration, this fundamental truth, viz. that in the conduct of that change, on the part of the ruling powers, neither at the commencement, nor at any subsequent period, has the welfare, temporal and eternal,—say, for shortness, the salvation of souls, or, in one word, salvation,—been the main and ruling object, or end in view, of what has been done. To a sincere eye, that can endure to look the idea in the face, the only points, that will remain susceptible of a question, will be—whether in any degree, and if in any, in what degree, on this or that occasion, to the ruling powers of this or that time, this most sacred and most extensively public object was an object of regard.

The years for and during which the matters in question are exhibited in these Tables, are the three successive years, 1809, 1810, and 1811. “AN ABSTRACT OF RETURNS respecting NON-RESIDENCE; for the Year ending 25th March 1809:”—such is the title of the earliest of these Tables: ABSTRACT of the Number and Classes of NON-RESIDENT INCUMBENTS, and of the Number of RESIDENT INCUMBENTS, according to the Diocesan Returns for the Year 1810: such is the title of the next succeeding one: and in the same form, with the exception of the name of the year, is that for 1811.

It is in the copies printed by and for the House of Commons, that these Tables have been consulted:—date of the Order for that of 1811, 26th March, 1813. Of no later date has any information on this subject been printed by the Order of the House of Commons. By the body of information thus collected, the object, by the contemplation of which the collection of it had been produced, had been accomplished: viz. the forming a ground for the plan of reform, or whatever else it is to be called, began by the late Minister, Mr. Perceval, and supported, continued, and still continuing, by the President of the Council, the Earl of Harrowby.

Of this valuable body of information—for such it will truly be seen to be—the immediate source and efficient cause may be seen in the Act of the year 1803: 43 G. III. c. 84. 7th July, 1803. For the various lights thus cast upon her whole fabric, Excellent Church appears to have been indebted to the confederacy of political saints, and, in an especial manner, to the pious policy and professional skill of Sir William Scott. Among the schemes which for her confirmation appear to have been formed by this Holy Brotherhood, one was—the peopling with Curates a number, more or less considerable, of the parsonages deserted by Sinecurist Incumbents. For this and other purposes, an article of information, which, now for the first time, was deemed necessary to be possessed by any body, was—in each diocese, of the whole number of Incumbents, by whom, by reading over and over again a quantity of matter, out of a modern book, souls were to be saved, how many there were, whose bodies were occasionally to be seen, in the several places in which, if in this or any other shape service were rendered by them, it would be necessary they should be to render it,—and how many others, whose equally consecrated bodies, how replete soever with the Holy Ghost, were never at any time thus visible.

For this service it is that,—for the causing of it to be in every parish rendered, and rendered in a proper manner,—under the names of Bishops and Archbishops, a set of men, dressed out to this day in the popish habits of the fifteenth century, are kept in a Protestant House of Legislature,—where, every day, that there may be something for them to do, some one of them is seen mumbling over the same page or two, out of that same book, to unconscious ears. For this service,—still more empty and unprofitable than the service for the enforcing of which it professes to be employed—for this service it is, that pay is received from about 10,000*l.* to above 20,000*l.* a year,—with a more or less rich mass of patronage to each, for the enrichment of families and dependents,—and a seat for life in that Upper House of Legislation: besides additions to the pay of each to an indefinite amount,—in the shape of standing Sinecures, and Cures occasionally improved, as will be seen, for the purpose, into Sinecures.

To know whether a man, who in a particular place has service to perform, performs it rightly,—to know even so much as whether he so much as makes a show of performing it, two preliminary points of knowledge are necessary, viz. who the man is, and whether the place—the only place—in which such duty, if done, can be done, is at any time among the places in which his body is to be found. Under the system which the act found existing,—not, unless by accident, was so much as this preliminary stock of knowledge, slender and barren as it is, in the possession of any of these Right Reverend and Most Reverend Figurantes on the politico-religious theatre, whose sole essential duty, if they had any, would have been the causing of that other duty, such as it is, to be done.—Not any thing did they know about the matter: never had it been intended that they should: they found not in their hands any tolerably sufficient means for the obtainment of such knowledge. This ignorance, does it stand in need of proof? Behold it then in the Act: for, of the objects and functions of it, one part, and that a necessary one, is—not only the furnishing of that information by the Bishops to Parliament, but the antecedently necessary furnishing of this same information, by the Incumbents to these same Bishops.

The Act being thus necessarily brought to view—some sort of intimation, how brief soever, of the other matters, about which it occupied itself, may in this place be expected.—1. To give confirmation and extension to Non-Residence, with the complete and wilful neglect of duty therein included:—2. to authorize the conversion of Cure into Sinecure, for the purpose of putting, in addition to the regularly allotted revenues of their Sees and Provinces, more and more money, without stint, into the pockets of Archbishops as well as Bishops:—3. to establish by various means, in those holy hands, a pure despotism, placing under it the whole body of the Non-Resident Parochial Clergy and their Curates, together with an unlimited proportion of Residents:—4. to give to delinquency indemnity for the past, as well as security for the future,—punishing at the same time with disappointment and loss such persons as, by invitation, had engaged in the service of the law, for the enforcing the execution of it upon delinquents;—these may be mentioned as the most material of the objects provided for in this Act, in addition to the giving continuance to the already mentioned supply of ecclesiastico-statistical information, which will be seen exhibited in the ensuing Tables.

July 7th, 1803, is the date given to this Act. March 25th, 1809, is the concluding day of the earliest year, for and in relation to which, any of the information which it undertook to bring to light, made its appearance: length of the interval between the issuing of the order and the time of the facts stated in the earliest document exhibited in consequence, near six years. April 18th, 1810, is the date of the House of Commons' Address, in compliance with which it was furnished by the Council Board: June 2d, 1810, is the date of the Abstract made of the above Returns by the Reverend Thomas Brooke Clarke, by order of that Board: being the earliest of all the Abstracts, three in number, that have ever made their appearance, and the earliest of those same three, which will here be seen consolidated into one. June 13th, 1812, and no earlier, is the date of the House of Commons' Order, from which, for the first time, it received the sort of half-publicity, which accompanies those unpurchaseable papers, the distribution of which is confined to the Members of that House. Little less than nine years had thus elapsed, before any part of that information had transpired, the obtaining of which was one of the main objects of this Act: and, when at last it did come forth, that it came forth teeming with gaps and misrepresentations—with both defects upon a prodigiously extensive scale—is what will be visible in an instant to any eye; visible by any the slightest glance at the difference between the numbers standing under the three different years, in cases where the real facts admitted not of any but a comparatively minute proportion of such difference. Even to this very day might the nakedness of Excellent Church have remained concealed from all profane eyes, had not the zeal of some of her most devoted sons,—in an evil hour,—evil for Holy Mother, but proportionably auspicious for the public,—uncovered it, and commenced that display of it, which will here be seen, more or less extended.

In the exhibition thus made, why so many years omitted? Why? unless it be, that, in any anterior state, the nakedness would have been still more shocking to any observing eye.

From the individual Returns, made to such Orders as were in consequence sent from the several Bishops, were composed,—by the Reverend Divine, whose name is at the bottom of the Table for the year 1810, or by some other person or persons,—these three Abstracts, the matters of which are respectively arranged under the general heads and sub-heads, that will be seen.

Whether, for any succeeding years, any views of the Church, on the same or any other plan, have been furnished to the Privy Council,—and, if so, from that Board to the House of Lords,—cannot here be stated. At any rate, no further information appears to have been called for by the House of Commons.

In those Returns, the years in and for which the state of the Church, in the particulars in question, is exhibited, are those successive years 1809, 1810, 1811. By the side of each of the principal heads, which stand one under another in a vertical line, are given in a horizontal line, headed by the names of the several dioceses, figures expressive of the numbers of the persons, stated respectively from these same dioceses, as being in the predicament designated by these same principal heads. Occupying in each Table the large proportion of the whole space, and, not being needful for the present purpose, the contents of this subdivision are here omitted:—but, by means of this omission, room is left for the giving at one view, in so far as in those originals it is exhibited, the state of the Church for those same three successive years.

In these Returns, under the common name of Incumbents, the whole collective body of Rectors, Vicars, and Perpetual Curates, is cast, in the first instance, into two divisions, designated by two very instructive names, viz. Residents and Non-Residents: Residents, those by whom more or less, of that duty for which they receive their pay, is done or supposed to be done: Non-Residents, those by whom,—with the exception of a small proportion, distinguishable, though in these Tables not distinguished, by the appellation of Virtual Residents,—no part of that duty for which they receive pay is so much as supposed to be done: in other words, Doers of duty and Non-Doers. Such then, to use its own phrase, is the Army of the Church Militant: an army composed of effectives and deserters: the effectives receiving pay as such; the deserters also receiving pay as effectives, notwithstanding they are deserters.

How little allowance soever they can pretend to from the heavenly King whom they profess to serve, from his Vicegerent here on earth allowances to this effect have not only been received by them, but even granted to them without their asking.

Of this English manufactory of sinecure out of cure the center having long been erected by the spiritual Popes of Rome, founders of the primæval and Universal Church, the right wing (the center being at the same time condemned) was erected by the self-crowned temporal Pope, Henry the Eighth, Defender of the Faith, (i. e. of his own faith in all its successive forms) founder of the new and local Church, self-styled Excellent Church:—founder, viz. in and by the Act 21 H. VIII. c. 13. Thus, for about 273 years, to the great convenience of those for whose accommodation it had been erected, had it enriched the scene,—when in the reign of the present Most religious King (for every King of England is, by the Act of Uniformity, and the Liturgy which forms a part of it, Most religious)—it came to pass, that, for giving still further increase to that holy convenience, a new wing was added, viz. by the Act 43 G. III. c. 84. already mentioned. Thirteen or fourteen (for in this case numeration would not be found quite so easy as might naturally be supposed)—thirteen or fourteen is the number of niches, already under the name of Exemptions, provided in the old wing: about the same number, under the name of Licenses, in the new one: and,—so completely have the principles and taste of the fundator incipiens been imbibed and pursued by the fundator perficiens,—that, until upon more particular examination the error was discovered, the same date had actually been ascribed to both of them.*

By these preliminary remarks the eye of the general reader will, it is hoped, have been sufficiently prepared for the inspection of the ensuing Table. For the further elucidation of the subject, to some of the heads of information contained in it, Notes will be found subjoined. Of these Notes, the matter will be found to be partly mere matter of observation, partly matter of information, resting on the authority of Mr. W. Wright, to whose successive Letters on the subject, as transcribed from the Morning Chronicle, of the years 1813 and 1814, reference is all along made: letters, seven or eight in number, the earliest bearing date Nov. 6th, 1813, and published in the Morning Chronicle of the 13th of that month, or thereabouts; the latest, 11th March, 1814.

* Of Exemptions likewise a folio page full is added. See No. V. of this.

According to his own statement, he had then lately been Secretary to four Bishops : in the first instance to the late Dr. Randolph, then Bishop of London : afterwards, and it should seem, at the same time, to the then Bishops of Ely and Norwich ; and one other—name and diocese not discernible. By every one of these Prelates, except Dr. Randolph, he speaks of himself as having been neglected and ill-used.

On the strength of the information, obtained in the course of that holy service by this quondam Secretary, it is, that, in the year 1811, against a considerable number of Incumbents, those actions, which gave so much disturbance to the wisdom of Parliament, were brought,—for the recovery of penalties supposed to have been incurred by violation of those laws which had for their object, real or pretended, the preventing of the sort of desertion above spoken of.

To repel the imputation of his having chosen for his victims delinquents who were such in form only, and not in substance, “ in any action,” (says he, Lett. 4th. 3d Dec. 1813) “ which I have caused to be commenced against “ persons holding two benefices, if they can prove that “ they resided constantly on one, and performed the proper duty, and had a resident and licensed curate on the “ other, whereon he also performed the duty according to “ law, I will (under the sanction of the court, by whose “ authority I am always guided) in such cases accept a “ nominal penalty.”

Of those actions, what was the consequence ? Judgment ? No : but denial of justice. In pursuance of a Bill, brought in by Mr. Bragge Bathurst, 17th Nov. 1813, an Act of Parliament was passed, giving impunity to delinquents, violating the public faith pledged by Parliament to the individual, by whom the invitation given to engage in the service of religion and law had been accepted, leaving him, for any thing that appears, without compensation in any shape for the loss, the trouble, and the ill-will, he had drawn upon himself by the confidence so unhappily placed by him in the justice of Government.

In the last, or last but one, of these letters, ulterior information is announced and threatened. No such ulterior information, however, made its appearance. The letter-writer's circumstances, as described by himself, considered,—the probability seems to be, that the intimation was not given altogether in vain, and that, by holy policy in some shape or other, the pen of the too inquisitive and active Secretary was saved from the eventually intended trouble.*

* Of Mr. Wright's published letters, as above, the date of the last is 11th March, 1814. Relative to his part in the business, the latest printed document that has been found, is a Petition of his to the House of Commons, which in the Votes of the 21st April, 1814, stands as follows:

“ Ordered, that the Report from the Committee of the whole House, on the Bill to discontinue proceedings in certain actions already commenced, and to prevent vexatious suits against Spiritual Persons under an Act passed in the 43d year of His present Majesty, be taken into further consideration upon Monday next.”

“ A petition of William Wright, of Bridge-Court, Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, was presented and read; setting forth, that, under the sanction of an Act of Parliament, made and passed in the 43rd year of the reign of his present Majesty, intituled, “ An act to amend the laws relating to spiritual persons holding of Farms, and for enforcing the Residence of spiritual persons on their Benefices, in England,” the Petitioner commenced divers actions against Clergymen for the recovery of part of the penalties, to the payment of which they had by their own neglect become liable; and the Petitioner was induced to believe that himself, or any other person who might sue for the same, would find that encouragement and protection, to which, by the laws of this Country, he was led to believe himself entitled; and that the Petitioner never had any desire, or ever sought to imprison the persons of the Clergy, as hath been imputed to him, he being well aware that he was

In regard to these actions, if any person there be, in whose view of the matter it is evident, that no duty, prohibited from so doing by the 17th section of the said Act, it being therein provided that no execution shall be levied against the body of any spiritual person for any penalty, if the same can be recovered within three years by sequestration of the benefice ; and that the representations made by the Clergy derogatory to the character of the Petitioner as a Christian and a gentleman, of his having entrapped them, nourished or engendered their offences, or kept back their licences or notifications, he most solemnly declares are untrue ; so far from which, the Petitioner did at great trouble prepare a faithful abstract of all the Statutes in force respecting residence, and added thereto forms of notification, and Petitions for licences of non-residence, which at his own personal expense, he caused to be printed and distributed gratis, not only to the Clergy of the dioceses wherein he acted as Secretary, but also to the Clergy of other dioceses ; and that he did also at his own personal expense, from the month of April, 1806, to the month of April, 1813, cause advertisements to be inserted in the provincial newspapers, and circular letters to be written to the Clergy, for the purpose of acquainting them with the necessity there was for them to renew their licences, if the cause which created their existence still continued, and to request others of the Clergy to deliver the notifications required by the said Act ; and that so conscious is the Petitioner of the rectitude of his conduct, that he invites the whole body of Clergy, against whom he has commenced actions, to adduce a single case in evidence at the Bar of the House, of his ever having entrapped any of them, nourished or engendered their offences, or kept back either their licences or notifications ; and that the Petitioner has commenced actions for penalties against Clergymen in twenty different dioceses, and therefore his researches are not confined to the four dioceses in which he had been employed as Secretary, but his information has been derived, not only from an extract published by authority of the Right honourable the House of Lords, which was introduced to his attention by a dignitary of the Church, who complained that such a publication should be permitted by Government, as it held up a large proportion of the Clergy to prosecution, but also from many long, tedious, and expensive journeys, which the Petitioner has made, in order to elucidate the subject ; and that, since the Petitioner has commenced actions for penalties under the before mentioned Act, not only clubs and associations of the Clergy have been publicly convened, for the purpose of defeating the Petitioner in his legal claims, which combination the Petitioner humbly submits is contrary to the known Law of the land, but also several of the Clergy have caused friendly actions to be commenced against themselves, in order, if possible, to defeat the Petitioner's which by these deserters from the service of their God, would have been performed, had they been at their posts, vested rights; and the Petitioner is informed that some of them have consulted Counsel whether they could not avoid the penalties to which they were liable, by a resignation of their benefices, and retaking them; and that the Petitioner feels perfectly satisfied that the House will not lend its aid to deprive him of a right so sacred as that which is vested in him by a recent Act of the Legislature, framed by the united wisdom of both Houses of Parliament, (poor Petitioner! little, if sincere, did he know Honourable Houses) and that no measures will be adopted by the House to abridge him of the penalties under the said Act, upon the ex parte reports which have been communicated to the House; and that the Petitioner has not only, by the means aforesaid, been put to a very considerable expense in putting the Clergy in possession of the Law of the Land on the subject, and in obtaining the necessary evidence and information in support of his said actions, but has by their neglect, in not renewing their licences, sustained an annual loss of at least £300 during nine years in which he was Secretary to four Lord Bishops; the Petitioner therefore places himself under the protection of the House, and prays that the Bill to discontinue Proceedings in certain actions already commenced, and to prevent vexatious suits against spiritual persons, under an Act passed in the 43d year of His present Majesty, may not in its present shape pass into a Law, and that he may be heard, by himself or Counsel, against the said Bill, and be allowed to produce such evidence as he may be advised, or that the House will be pleased to grant him such relief as to them shall seem meet."

"Ordered, That the said Petition do lie upon the Table."

Here, then, amongst so many other things, has been seen, on the one part, the offer—(Oh, impious offer!) to uncover—a corner at least—of the nakedness of Holy Mother Church: on the other part, in the depth of the silence with which the offer was received, the horror which such an impiety could not fail to produce.

From that time to the present, it appears not, from any document that has been found, that the public has heard any thing from Mr. Wright: by this silence, and that alone, the hope is produced—that in some unknown way and proportion, compensation may have been received by him for the course of expense and labour he had, as above, been led into, by so unfortunate a supposition as that the faith of Parliament was a safe object of reliance. By a careful search made into the documents of the time by a learned friend, the author is assured, that, antecedently to those actions brought by Mr. Wright, it was in certain prosecutions grounded in the original sta-would have been of any real value,—that to their parishioners no less than to their God, they would have been tute of Henry the Eighth, and commenced, probably by some other person, at some time anterior to the year 1801, that the whole system of sham-reform, that will be seen unfolded, took its rise: that accordingly the first Act that was passed in consequence was the Act 41 G. III. c. 102. which was a temporary Act, and for its object had no other than the stopping of these same prosecutions. By the 42 G. III. c. 86. brought in by Sir William Scott, it was continued, and again by the Act 43 G. III. c. 34. the Bill for which was brought in by the same Right Honourable son of Excellent Church; whereupon came the Act of the same year, c. 84. of the efficiency of which for giving security and increase to Non-Residence, under the notion of “enforcing Residence,” ample proof will here be seen.

Thirtieth of July, 1814, (54 G. III. c. 175.) is the date of the latest Act on the subject of Excellent Church that has been found. In this Act, the provision made in the former Act of the 43 G. III. c. 84. after all the pains taken, to hammer it into a “brutum fulmen” being still, by some nervous temperament or other, been found too formidable, was (by § 10, 11) limited to a 20*l.* penalty (a sum scarcely sufficient to cover with any assurance the difference between costs allowed on taxation and costs out of pocket): care being taken, by a cloak very ingeniously woven in the texture of the preceding section, to enable a merciful Bishop to save from the gripe of the Informer any penitent sinner, whose “prostration of understanding and will” shall have been sufficiently profound. But,—if, instead of 20*l.*, the pay thus offered to an Informer were 200*l.*,—after what has passed, by what Informer will a ticket in this part of the lottery of the law ever be purchased? Surely by no one, whose attention common prudence has directed to the history of the part taken by Government in this business. Seeing that as often as a ticket of this sort has been purchased, all shame being cast aside, the whole power of Government has been employed in destroying the value of it, what he will see, if he has eyes, is—that, in any such case, to put trust in the Government of this Country, framed as it is at present, would be not only to lean on a broken reed, but to kick against the pricks.

As to the paper above spoken of by Mr. Wright, by the name of the Extract published by authority of the House of Lords,—against which paper the complaint had been made, that it held up a large proportion of the clergy to prosecution,—it seems to have been the same of which mention is made in the fourth of his above-mentioned Letters; date of the Letter, or of the Morning Chronicle in which it was published, 3d December, 1813:
“ The

unprofitable servants,—and that, howsoever condemned by their invisible Commander-in-chief, such their desertion had, by a long continued course, partly of open allowance, partly of connivance, been authorized and encouraged by the only power, to which it is the custom of Excellent Church to have regard,—it will be in a correspondent degree evident, that if on this score any blame attaches upon Parliament, it can only have been in respect of the non-allowance of adequate compensation at the public expense: a neglect, in consequence of which the burthen threatened by law to transgressors was transferred from their shoulders to those of the too credulous individual, who, by invitation from Parliament, had been engaged in the service of justice.

The impunity thus given to transgressors,—while punishment in every thing but the name was inflicted on those who, at the call of Parliament, had loaded themselves with expense in the endeavour to bring them to punishment,—will at any rate be a lesson to those who otherwise might have been disposed to “put their trust in princes,” whose engagements have been thus openly and deliberately violated: and, in this state of things, it may be inquired, whether, from any penalties appointed in their laws, the professed reformers of Church discipline have themselves either expected or desired any real effect, other than that of giving the appearance of efficiency to a system of discipline, for which no real efficiency was designed.—Follows now the Table.

“ The extract of Diocesan Returns, ordered to be printed by the House “ of Lords, contained only 1742 Benefices, and of them, 383 Incumbents “ were stated as fit objects of prosecution; besides 430 demanding inquiry “ previous to an action being commenced.”

ABSTRACT of RETURNS respecting NON-RESIDENTS
for the under-mentioned years ending 25th March

Form and Arrangement of Answers, by		Name of Clergyman		Non-Resident 1811
				1812
				1813
				1814 1815
				1816 1817
				1818
				1819
				1820
				1821
				1822 1823
				1824
				1825 1826
				1827
				1828
				1829
				1830
				1831
				1832
				1833
				1834
				1835
				1836
				1837
				1838
				1839 1840
				1841
				1842
				1843
				1844
				1845
				1846
				1847
				1848
				1849
				1850
				1851
				1852 1853
				1854
				1855
				1856
				1857
				1858
				1859
				1860
				1861
				1862 1863
				1864
				1865
				1866
				1867
				1868
				1869
				1870
				1871
				1872
				1873
				1874
				1875
				1876
				1877
				1878
				1879
				1880
				1881
				1882 1883
				1884
				1885
				1886
				1887
				1888
				1889
				1890 1891
				1892
				1893
				1894
				1895
				1896
				1897
				1898
				1899
				1900 1901
				1902
				1903
				1904
				1905
				1906
				1907
				1908
				1909
				1910
				1911
				1912
				1913
				1914
				1915
				1916
				1917
				1918
				1919
				1920
				1921 1922
				1923
				1924
				1925
				1926
				1927 1928
				1929
				1930
				1931
				1932
				1933
				1934
				1935
				1936
				1937
				1938
				1939
				1940
				1941
				1942
				1943
				1944
				1945 1946
				1947
				1948
				1949
				1950
				1951 1952
				1953
				1954 1955
				1956 1957 1958
				1959
				1960 1961 1962
				1963
				1964
				1965 1966 1967
				1968 1969
				1970
				1971
				1972
				1973
				1974
				1975
				1976
				1977
				1978 1979
				1980 1981
				1982
				1983
				1984
				1985
				1986 1987
				1988
				1989
				1990
				1991
				1992
				1993
				1994 1995
				1996
				1997
				1998
				1999 2000
				2001
				2002
				2003 2004
				2005
				2006
				2007
				2008
				2009 2010 2011
				2012
				2013
				2014
				2015 2016
				2017
				2018
				2019 2020
				2021
				2022
				2023
				2024 2025
				2026 2027
				2028
				2029
				2030
				2031
				2032
				2033
				2034
				2035
				2036
				2037
				2038
				2039
				2040 2041
				2042
				2043
				2044
				2045
				2046
				2047
				2048
				2049
				2050
				2051
				2052
				2053
				2054
				2055
				2056
				2057
				2058
				2059
				2060 2061
				2062
				2063
				2064
				2065
				2066
				2067
				2068
				2069
				2070
				2071
				2072 2073
				2074
				2075
				2076
				2077
				2078
				2079
				2080 2081
				2082
				2083
				2084
				2085
				2086
				2087
				2088
				2089
				2090
				2091
				2092
				2093
				2094
				2095
				2096 2097
				2098
				2099
				2100
				2101
				2102
				2103
				2104
				2105
				2106
				2107
				2108
				2109
				2110
				2111
				2112
				2113
				2114
				2115
				2116
				2117
				2118
				2119
				2120
				2121
				2122
				2123
				2124
				2125
				2126
				2127
				2128
				2129 2130
				2131
				2132
				2133
				2134
				2135
				2136
				2137
				2138
				2139
				2140
				2141
				2142
				2143
				2144
				2145
				2146
				2147
				2148
				2149
				2150
				2151
				2152
				2153
				2154
				2155
				2156
				2157
				2158
				2159
				2160
				2161
				2162
				2163
				2164
				2165
				2166 2167
				2168
				2169
				2170
				2171
				2172
				2173
				2174
				2175
				2176
				2177
				2178
				2179
				2180
				2181
				2182
				2183
				2184
				2185
				2186
				2187
				2188
				2189
				2190
				2191
				2192
				2193
				2194
				2195
				2196
				2197
				2198
				2199
				2200
				2201
				2202
				2203
				2204
				2205
				2206
				2207
				2208
				2209
				2210
				2211
				2212
				2213
				2214
				2215
				2216
				2217
				2218
				2219
				2220

ABSTRACT of RETURNS respecting NON-RESIDENCE, for the under-mentioned Years, ending 25th March.

FORM and ARRANGEMENT of ABSTRACTS, by ORDER of COUNCIL.	NON-RESIDENTS' Numbers, in Years
	1809.	1810.	1811.
I.—EXEMPTIONS.
1. Residence on other Benefices ^(a)	1,240	1,816	2,059
2. Official Chaplaincies*	37	41	24
3. Chaplains to privileged Individuals ^(b)	32	21	41
4. Ecclesiastical, Collegiate, and Cathedral Offices†	281	251	250
5. Officers in the Royal Chapels of St. James's and Whitehall	—	—	—
6. Readers‡ in his Majesty's Private Chapel at Windsor	1	—	1
7. Preachers and Readers in the Inns of Court§ or at the Rolls	11	8	8
8. Public Officers and Tutors in the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge	69	67	55
9. Resident Fellows in ditto 	47	38	34
10. Provost of Eton, Warden of Winchester, Fellows of both	13	30	24
11. Schoolmasters and Ushers of Eton, Westminster, Winchester, &c.	8	5	5
12. Students residing in Oxford or Cambridge, un- der 30	7	—	12
13. Exemptions not notified ^(c)	817	363	155
14. Livings held by Bishops, 1809. See No. 30, iv. .	26	—	—
II.—LICENCES.
15. I. Infirmary of Incumbent or Family ^(d) . . .	465	389	396
16. II. Want or unfitness of Parsonage Houses ^(e)	944	941	1,068
17. III. Residence in a Mansion within the Parish belonging to Incumbent or relative . . .	105	62	68
18. IV. Incumbents possessing small Livings, li- censed to Curacies	210	170	168
19. V. Schoolmasters or Ushers of Endowed Schools	159	122	133
20. VI. Masters or Preachers of Hospitals . . .	19	4	5
21. VII. Endowed Preachers or Lecturers . . .	30	24	19
22. VIII. Licensed Preachers in Proprietary Chapels	14	16	14
23. IX. Librarians of the British Museum, Sion College, and Trustees of Lord Crew's Charity	5	3	4
24. X. Incumbents residing in the neighbourhood, and doing duty†† ^(f)	565	348	301
25. XI. Unenumerated cases, confirmed by the Archbishop ^(g)	54	35	26
26. XII. Unenumerated cases within the Arch- bishops' Dioceses ^(h)	—	—	5

* In the Returns for 1810 and 1811, Chaplains. † In 1810, 1811, Officers. ‡ In 1810, 1811, Reader. § In 1810, 1811, and || In 1810, 1811, Oxford and Cambridge.  In 1810, 1811, thirty years of age. †† In 1810, 1811, Performing the Duties of their Parishes.

FORM and ARRANGEMENT of ABSTRACTS, by ORDER of COUNCIL.		NON-RESIDENTS' Numbers, in Years
		1809.	1810.	1811.
III.—CASES which could not be included among LICENCES or EXEMPTIONS.
27.	I. ABSENCE without Licence or Exemption ⁽ⁱ⁾	672	650	1,033
28.	II. Dilapidated Churches ^(k)	—	34	56
29.	III. Sinecures and Dignities not requiring Re- sidence ^(l)	—	70	68
30.	IV. Livings held by Bishops ^(m)	—	35	21
31.	V. 4. Vacancies ⁽ⁿ⁾	—	74	96
32.	VI. 5. Recent Institutions ^(o)	—	54	33
33.	VII. Held by Sequestration ^(p)	—	91	78
34.	MISCELLANEOUS CASES not included in the pre- ceding Classes ^(q)	—	38	51
TOTALS.
		1809.	1810.	1811.	1809.	1810.	1811.
Incumbents exempted by Sta- tutes without Licence		2,589	2,671	2,668
Whereof are stated as per- forming the Duties of their Parishes		—	—	—	—	244	173
Incumbents exempted, under Statute or otherwise, by Li- cence		2,826	2,114	2,207
Whereof are stated as perform- ing the Duties of their Pa- rishes		—	—	—	565	747	685
Incumbents "Absent" (i. e. Non-Resident) without Ex- emption or Licence		—	1,017	1,385
Whereof are stated as perform- ing the Duties of their Pa- rishes		—	—	—	—	5	14
Incumbents whose cases are stated as "miscellaneous," and not included in the pre- ceding Classes		—	38	51
Whereof are stated as perform- ing the duties of their Pa- rishes		—	—	—	—	2	60
Totals of those stated as per- forming the duties of their Parishes		..	..	..	565	998	932
Total of the above cases of Non-Residence		7,358	6,311	5,840
Add cases of alleged Residence		3,836	4,490	4,421
Totals of Incumbents reported as Non-Resident or Resident		11,194	10,801	10,261

NOTES

TO THE ABOVE NON-RESIDENCE TABLE.

1. [Residence on other Benefices.] Speaking (Lett. 1. 6th Nov. 1813) of the persons against whom he had brought those actions of his, which were stopped by Parliament, "they are also," says Mr. Wright, "against some who have been returned as resident, " but who are not so, and many of those holding one, two, or " three livings, from some of which they claim exemption, in " consequence of residence on others, which" [residence] " they " do not perform."*

3. [Chaplains to privileged individuals.] The privilege is—that of depriving a certain number of Parishes, increasing with the dignity and sanctity of the privileged person—depriving them of the service, which, but for this dignity and sanctity, would have been rendered to the souls of the inhabitants, by those who are, by authority of the Church, (25 H. VIII. c. 13. § 13 to 21. § 24.) deemed their most proper pastors; leaving the souls to take their chance in each instance, for having or not having more or less of the service of a make-shift substitute, hired at the lowest price for which any one is to be hired. Besides Peers and Peeresses with their children, and official men in abundance, six is the number of Parishes in which a man may give this advantage to the Devil if he is a Bishop; eight, when he is an Archbishop. Of the persons, to whom, under the name of his Chaplains, the privileged person is entitled to give the profit of this injury, the number is, according to his rank, from one to eight, as above. Increasing, it seems, in proportion, in the first place, to his sanctity, and, in the next place, to his rank, is the weight with which his soul gravitates on towards the pit of hell, increasing, consequently, in the same proportion the quantity of spiritual labour necessary to stop him in his descent. Such, it should seem, is the principle, and is it altogether an inapposite one?

* As to this matter, see further, under Note (1), to Absence without License or Exemption.

NOTES.

^c 13. [Exemptions not notified, 817, 363, 155.] In these instances no exemption being notified, how and whence comes the existence of any such thing to be known to the person by whom in this case the Return is made, and who, it is supposed, is the Bishop of the Diocese? To those who are in the secret must the question be addressed, by any person whose desire it is to know how this matter stands. To us who are not in the secret, the decreasing series, exhibited by the three years, viz. 817, 363, and 155; seems remarkable enough: it looks as if this or that stimulus, by which more and more of these defaulters had been awakened out of their lethargy, or frightened out of their contempt, had by degrees been found.

Confront this decreasing series with the preceding increasing series of the cases of Residence on other benefices, 4240, 1816, 2057, and the succeeding decreasing then increasing series of cases of "Absence without License or Exemption," 672, 650, 1033: not to speak of the decreasing series of the numbers of Incumbents residing in the neighbourhood and doing duty: viz. 565, 348, 301. Is it in the nature of the case that truth and veracity should in all these instances—or in any one of them—have accompanied the variation in these numbers?

^d [15. I. Infirmity of Incumbent, or Family: 465, 389, 396.] Follows what, on this subject, we have from Mr. Wright, Lett. VI. January 6th, 1814:

" Now ill-health of the Incumbent himself, or his wife or " daughter, is a common pretext, when no other legal cause can " be found of avoiding residence. Of twenty-two licenses granted " in one diocese, for this reason, three only of the persons are in " a state of health to warrant it, and the benefices from which " they so absent themselves are very valuable. Whether the " nineteen, whom I thus challenge as using false pretences, de-

NOTES.

“ serve the imputation, will best appear by the mode of life they “ adopt. Some live in town during the winter; and, although “ night-air certainly cannot benefit a valetudinarian, they may “ be constantly seen at card-parties, routs, or the theatre. In “ summer, enjoying the amusements of fashionable watering-“ places, whilst, too often, their Curate, by the parsimonious “ stipend they afford him, is, with a numerous family, in a state “ of the greatest poverty. Others have beneficial schools in the “ neighbourhood of London. Others are continually to be met “ with near their residence in more pleasant parts of the Country, “ enjoying the sports of the field, or vigilantly endeavouring to “ detect some poor countryman, who may have an unfortunate “ inclination to taste game! Others may be seen most days driv“ ing their own carriage! Some are in debt, and some are “ Curates near the Fens! and all, to observers, seem perfectly “ healthful; yet a certificate from a medical man is deposited “ with the Bishop that they are not so; probably it is six or eight “ years before, when there might have existed a degree of tempo“ rary ill health, but after the cause ceases, the same plea is con“ tinued, and a license once granted is renewed as a matter of “ course.”

‘ [16. II. Want or unfitness of Parsonage Houses, 944, 941, 1,068.] Behold here a number, little less than one-tenth of the whole number of Parsonage Houses: a number considerably greater than the whole number of Parishes in Scotland, in no one of which is any such thing as a Parish without a Parsonage, or an uninhabited Parsonage, to be seen.

With reference to Parsonage House, after the word want, steals in the word unfitness; unfitness furnishing a cloak unbounded in extent for the exercise of Right Reverend despotism.
 To the Reverend friend of the Right Reverend arbiter, what Parsonage, that is not more agreeable to him than any other residence he could have, can be otherwise than unfit?—here, exercise is found for Right Reverend beneficence. For a man, who, by

NOTES.

“non-prostration of understanding and will,” is troublesome, what pig-stye, having the name of a Parsonage, can be otherwise than fit?—Here exercise is found for the severity of Right Reverend justice.

“In one diocese,” (says Mr. Wright, Lett. II. Morning Chronicle, 20th Nov. 1813) “one-third of the Parsonage Houses were returned to be in bad repair.” Thus far Mr. Wright. This it should seem must, in each instance, have been for the purpose of serving as an excuse, true or false, for Non-Residence. On what other occasion could a statement to this effect have been called forth?

[24. X. Incumbents residing in the Neighbourhood, and (per Abstract of 1809) doing duty: (per Abstracts of 1810 and 1811) performing the Duties of their respective Parishes,—565, 348, 301.] Out of Section 19 of the above-mentioned Act of 43 G. III. c. 84. viz. the self-styled Residence-enforcing Act (for such in the title it professes to be) sprung the class of Licenses granted to the class of Non-Residents thus described. In so far as regards Non-Residence, this Act may be seen to have two objects; 1. To give increase to the population of Sinecurist Incumbents, and thereby to give in reality increased extent to a state of things so agreeable and convenient to Excellent Church: 2. To establish, in the minds of those who are not in the secret, the persuasion that the wish and endeavour has been all along to diminish the extent to which Sinecurism, in that same convenient and agreeable state, had been carried.

For the accomplishment of the principal of these two general objects, two specific objects have, with indisputable success, been pursued: to the original colony of these Sinecurists, planted by the Act of Henry the Eighth, viz. Sinecurists by Exemption, two others, it will be seen, have now, by or under this self-styled Residence-enforcing Act, been added, viz. Non-Residents, alias Sinecurists by License, and Non-Residents, alias Sinecurists by connivance: of which latter a little further on.

NOTES.

For the effectuation of the minor of these two general objects, viz. that of making a cloak for the principal one, besides the words in the title, viz. “and for enforcing the Residence of Spiritual Persons on their Benefices,” the following is the turn given (it will be seen with what ingenuity) to the language in the above-mentioned 19th Section. In the first place comes a description given of the general situation, common to all the persons to whom (but to them alone), in the cases thereupon particularly enumerated, it shall be lawful to grant licenses. This general situation is—what?—That of all Incumbents whatsoever, in what part soever, of the kingdom, or even of the globe, resident?—Oh no. What then? Answer. That sort of situation alone, which is not in any instance so remote from the Parish, from which the pay is received, but that, in some shape or other,—to the amount of some part or other, though not to the amount of the whole, of what is regularly due,—benefit might by the inhabitants be received from the pious labours of the Incumbent. For the producing a conception to this effect, it will be seen how dexterously the following words are contrived:—“It shall be lawful for any Bishop to grant Licenses to any Spiritual Persons” (describing them) “to reside out of the proper House of Residence, or out of the Parish, and within such distance therefrom as the case may appear to such Bishop to require, if, upon the consideration of all the circumstances of any such case, such Bishop shall, in his discretion, think the same fit and proper :” and thereupon immediately comes the description of the several specific cases, nine in number, in which, on the above condition, as above insinuated, and not otherwise, the indulgence in question may be allowed.

Now this condition, what is it?—what but that, notwithstanding the licenses, a man’s actual residence shall still be, in relation to his Parish, within what may for shortness be termed service-admitting distance. Distance, viz. with reference to the place—the only place—in which, in consideration of the pay received, duty in any shape is by him by whom it is received to be performed—service in any shape to be rendered,—is a circumstance, which the Bishop is, by the express terms of the Act, required to take into consideration. But, to what purpose, take it at all into consideration, unless so it be, that in which ever of the nine cases in question the Incumbent be, his residence will still, under and notwithstanding any such License, be within service-admitting distance? For, let it but be understood, that by the Incumbent, when thus licensed “to reside out of his proper House of Residence, or out of the Parish,” he may, by his License, be put into such a situation, as not to have it so much as in his power to perform any sort of duty, legally exigible or legally inexigible, from which the Parish can be supposed to receive from him any sort of benefit,—let this be understood, as well might his residence be at the antipodes as at any lesser distance.

NOTES.

What then, in regard to the exercise to be given to this power, was the conception, which we who are not in the secret were to be led to entertain ourselves with?—what? but that, in no case whatever—not even in any one of the nine cases thereupon so particularly described—was an Incumbent to be licensed to reside either out of the proper place of residence, i. e. the Parsonage, or at any rate out of the Parish, unless the place, in which, in virtue of such License, he took up his residence, were in some sort within the above-explained service-admitting distance.

Such then was the expectation meant to be raised. Of any one of the distinguished and variously titled persons, by whose piety this clause was got up, can there have been so much as a single one, who ever meant it should be fulfilled? The answer may be found in the residences of about as many Incumbents as have received those Licenses.

Such then being the intention and the effect, observe now in what way the intention is fulfilled—the effect produced.—Of the preceding nine statutable grounds,—coupled with the immediately succeeding unstatutable and spurious one, which necessitated this explanation,—behold then the practical result.—If the Incumbent be in any one of those nine cases, his Spiritual Lordship, if such be his pleasure, and not otherwise, be the distance what it will, grants him a License under the Act: if not in any one of them, then, under the notion, true or false, of his being in this case, so does he out of his own head, and without any warrant from the Act.

NOTES.

Thus much as to the Act itself. Turn now to the Abstracts, and in them, under the head of Licenses, observe the twelve causes of License that have been deduced from it: and in particular this tenth cause, which will be seen to have been added by Episcopal effrontery to the insufficiently exercised authority of Parliament.

On the subject of discipline, Church and State together, this article may, when compared with the Act, be seen to present upon the face of it, a picture rather more extensive as well as instructive, than any which, when this body of information was called for, was probably intended to be very generally conveyed. Taking it for correct, here may be seen, and at one view, not only under what sort of discipline Bishops are, as in relation to Parliament, but moreover what sort of discipline Parliament itself is, as towards that public, in which that same Parliament, in one of its parts, professes itself in some sort to be dependent.

In the Act in question—being the law in which these licenses originated—the only law under which they have been, or can be legally granted—in Section 19—nine cases are, as above, described, in which, and in which alone, with the exception of two others, in the next section (Section 20.) distinguished, as above, by the name of “Unenumerated Cases,” the granting of these Licenses, after the regard paid as above to distance, is allowed. These nine are the nine which, under the general head of Licenses, may be seen standing in the Table. In the Abstracts of these several Years, after these nine, each of which, provided always that due regard be paid to the circumstance of distance, as above, and not otherwise, has its ground and warrant in the Act, comes this tenth case, thus simply and coolly inserted—this tenth case, for the warranting of which, not even in the most vague and unexplicit manner, is so much as a single syllable to be found in the Act.

NOTES.

Now then, what upon the face of these three successive Returns we see asserted, is this plain matter of fact, viz. that, on the grounds thus described, so it was, that, in every one of the instances, under the heads of the several Dioceses specified and particularized in figures,—viz. that in all the several instances above-mentioned,—by the Bishops of these several Dioceses, Licenses for Non-Residence were actually granted to those same numbers of Incumbents. Of any of these Right Reverend Prelates is this true? Well then, in every one of those Right Reverend Guardians of Ecclesiastical Discipline, and Members of the Upper House of Parliament, of which it is true, may be seen a self-constituted legislator, acting on his own single authority: setting thus his own power above the power of Parliament.

By the men of law, and other political saints, by whom a part was taken in the penmanship of this Act, was the above-described state of things which has been the result, foreseen and intended, and such their intentions mutually communicated? If so, in these same pious persons we have so many successful conspirators, conspiring for the establishment and maintenance of this corrupt system of pay without service, on pretence of souls-saving—conspiring, to permit, and cause to be committed, on the part of the order of Bishops, an usurpation of and upon the authority of Parliament. Was it that no such intention, or that no such communication did indeed take place?—then at any rate,—unless while year after year, so many accordant pictures of Excellent Church, viewed in this point of view, were successively hung up in the Council Chamber and in both Houses, these same pious persons were all the time fast asleep,—we have, with or without conspiracy, so many connivers at the clandestine transfer thus made of the authority of Parliament.

The Earl of Harrowby in particular—the indefatigable servant

NOTES.

of Excellent Church,—in whose breast, in conjunction with that of the departed Saint, this Act, and every thing else which, for the advancement of Church-of-England piety, has in this pious reign been done, or attempted in Parliament, took its rise,—the Earl of Harrowby, for the purpose of whose Act for the putting Incumbents' money into the pockets of Curates, this body of information was called for,—by whom it has been sifted to the bottom, been commented upon in his Speech, and in the pamphlet containing that same Speech re-methodized and re-edited,—is it by mere accident, that his eyes have, for any thing that appears, been thus long shut against this contempt of Parliament—this usurpation—to which those pious labours have given birth and continuance?—If among those who have the power, there be any one who has the curiosity to learn how these matters stand,—let him address himself to these pious persons whom the Votes, or other public prints, present to view, as having taken a part in this pious business, and in particular, in the Upper House, to the Earl of Harrowby; and, in the Lower House, to Sir William Scott.

On the occasion of this exercise of legislative power, it may be matter of curiosity to observe the various parts taken, in the three successive years, by the several potentates:—

I. Four, and no more, abstained from it altogether. These (taken all along in alphabetical order) were, 1. Bath and Wells; 2. St. David's; 3. Gloucester; 4. Rochester.

II. Eight, having taken up the sceptre in the beginning, kept it in hand to the last. These were, 1. Bangor; 2. CANTERBURY; 3. Chester; 4. Durham; 5. Exeter; 6. Hereford; 7. Litchfield and Coventry; 8. Winchester.

N. B. In both these lines of conduct may be seen consistency, though operating in such opposite directions.

III. Five, having taken up the sceptre, and kept it in hand the two first years, let it drop the last. These were, 1. St. Asaph; 2. Carlisle; 3. Landaff; 4. Lincoln; 5. YORK.

NOTES.

IV. Five, having taken it up the first year, let it drop the second, and did not afterwards resume it. These were, 1. Ely; 2. London! 3. Norwich; 4. Peterborough; 5. Worcester.

V. Three, having taken it up the first year, dropt it the second, but took it up again the third. These were, 1. Bristol; 2. Chichester; 3. Salisbury.

VI. One, having shrunk from the enterprize the first year, plucked up courage enough the second, but lost it on the third. This one was Oxford.

Another curious state of things is—that which may be learnt from a confrontation made of this article (X) with the several sub-articles, if so they may be styled, in each of the Abstracts for 1810 and 1811, (in each of them the same four), in each of which such multitudes are stated as “performing the duties of their Parishes.” Between these cases and the one principally here in question, wherein consists the difference?—In both,—in so far as the Returns are true, the Incumbents “perform the duties,” i. e. all the duties: but the difference is—that, in the principal article, they are stated as residing in the neighbourhood;—whereas, in the sub-articles, no statement to that effect is contained. But, if this be true, viz. that in all these instances the “duties” which they were bound to “perform,” were all of them, by the several Incumbents, in their several Parishes, really “performed,” what is there that should have deprived so many holy men of the benefit of a License any more than these others?—In the one case, exactly as good a warrant did the Act give as in the other: viz. none in either.—Clouds upon clouds! every thing is wrapt up in clouds. The solution, is it this? In the cases designated by the principal article, the Incumbent applied for a License, and thus obtained it: in those designated by the sub-articles, no application, consequently no License; but, to save reputation of Holy Church, Bishops spoke for so many Incumbents, who feared, or thought it not worth their while, to speak for themselves. As to this spontaneous mercy, see further Section 8, Note.

NOTES.

* 25. XI. Unenumerated Cases confirmed by the Archbishop: 54, 35, 26.] In the Act of the 43d of the King (c. 84.), after all those which have been seen in the Table, manufactured, and set up under generic heads,—the pretence for leaving the souls to shift for themselves, while the money allowed for taking care of them is pocketed, not being found sufficiently numerous,—a sweeping clause (p 20.) was provided, allowing every Bishop to manufacture other pretences in any number, on condition of getting his superior, the Archbishop, to join with him.

Had any thing better than the extension of ecclesiastical despotism been intended,—annexed to this relaxing clause would have been some provision for taking into consideration, from time to time, the individual cases as they arose, and out of them forming general ones, to add to the above list. But, by Excellent Church despotism, two capital purposes are at once served; viz. conversion of cure of souls into sinecure, for the accommodation of the ruling few, and the service due to the same separate and sinister interest, by the extension given to corrupt and corruptive influence.

Of the ulterior grounds for non-performance of duty, thus left to the indulgence and ingenuity of Bishops, checked by the severe sanctity of Archbishops, the following case, stated by Mr. Wright (Lett. IV. 3d Dec. 1813, in the Morning Chronicle of some days afterwards) seems to have been given as a specimen:—
“ I have now before me” (says this quondam Episcopal Secretary) “ an authentic document, which states, that a license was “ granted to a Clergyman for Non-Residence, and, on looking for “ the cause, it is returned ‘ outlawed.’ ”

” [26. XII. Unenumerated Cases within the Archbishop's Diocese: 0, 0, 5.] Every Bishop having for his Ecclesiastical Superior one of the two Archbishops,—where the allowance for setting up the additional pretence-manufactory was, in the first instance, given to a Bishop: and, for form sake, to keep up the idea of subordination, and give to holy idlers the appearance of something to do, there was an use in requiring the concurrence of this his Superior.

NOTES.

But the Archbishop having no Ecclesiastical Superior, and yet having not only his Province, but, within that Province, a Diocese of his own, what was to be done in his case? The answer was obvious. High as it is, the sanctity of a Bishop not being as yet at the highest point, requires a check: in the still higher sanctity of the Archbishop a competent check is provided. But, in the Archbishop, sanctity is at the very highest point: no check therefore is necessary for it. While Dr. Manners Sutton was as yet but Bishop of Norwich, holy as he was in life and conversation, (inquire at Norwich else) exemplary in the discharge of all episcopal duties, still, though never sinning, he was not yet unpeccable. But now he is Archbishop of Canterbury, and never had St. Thomas Becket a more worthy successor. For the two first of the three years thus employed in the preparation of the new system for the reformation of discipline, the Canterbury and York pretence-manufactories, notwithstanding the advantage which a single-seated has over a many-seated discretion, seems by some cause or other—say by a somewhat over-delicate conscience—say by doubts borrowed from a neighbouring woolsack—kept at a stand. But in the last of the three years it may be seen set to work.

¹ [27. I. Absence (i. e. Non-Residence) without License or Exemption: 672, 650, 1,033.] On the part of Incumbents, False Return and Non-Return; on the part of Bishops and Archbishops, connivance;—in these may be seen three different yet intimately connected forms of transgression, blessed fruits of the original sin in which Excellent Church was conceived, and of the sham discipline which sprung from it.

Of False Return, express indication will not be expected to be found upon the face of any of these authoritatively published documents: still less of connivance on the part of those holy persons. Cases of Non-Return are the cases, which in these Tables have for their denomination the words "Absence," (i. e. Non-Residence) "without License or Exemption."

NOTES.

In one or other of the several possible ways, an Incumbent (suppose) is, and determines to continue, a transgressor of the laws: of those holy laws, which he hears, and sees, and feels were never intended to find obedience. 1. To avoid paying to his Curate a forced price, he forbears to take out the license which the law in its wisdom requires, to warrant an Incumbent in casting off upon another person the cure of the souls, for the taking charge of which he has, by his own acknowledgement thus expressed, been overpaid: 2. Holding two livings, and being entitled to a dispensation for holding them on condition of submitting to a certain degree of residence on one or both of them, and not meaning to submit to any degree of residence in either, he avoids—in the first place to take out any dispensation, and in the next place to make any Returns to the questions put to him. For if, a return being made, that return were false, by the falsehood he might be exposed—possibly to punishment, and at any rate to shame: if true, thereby to penalties.

3. If the number of livings be greater than two, in which case he may be termed an Ultra-Pluralist, or Unjustifiable Pluralist, as in the other case a Simple Pluralist, no dispensation being allowed, what he exposes himself to is (by 21 H. VIII. c. 13. § 9, 10.) forfeiture of all livings but that which came into his possession last.

Such are the dangers, to which, in these several cases, a man would expose himself, were he to pay canonical obedience to the orders—to make answer to the inquiries—so received from his Bishop.—To what then does he expose himself by silence?—To nothing: to nothing at any rate, unless it be his misfortune to stand, on some special account, in bad odour with the Right Reverend arbiter of his fate.

In the case of Simple Pluralism, justification may, viz. by dispensation, (with fees for the same), be attained. But in the case of Ultra-Pluralism, neither by dispensation nor by any thing else, can, to any legal purpose, any such holy work be accomplished. By one and the same Ultra-Pluralist, the number held of benefices with cure of souls amounts, (for of this will be seen alleged instances), amounts (suppose) to seven. On this supposition, no return of more than two can he make to the mandate, whatever it is, with perfect safety: for, on a perusal of the whole collection of Returns, it might in this case be seen that, all seven being in one hand, all but the last are thereby, as above, forfeitable. This well-fed man of God, what course then will he take in consequence of the queries sent to him from his Bishop or his Bishops? Either he will let them lie all together unnoticed, or—making answer as to two out of the seven, he will leave in that same predicament the other five. In the first case, seven, in the other five will have been the number added by this one Ultra-Pluralist to the above totals of 672, 650, and 1,033.

NOTES.

Note here—in the last of the three years, the number swelling to more than half as much again as it was in either of the preceding ones. Whence so extraordinary a swell?—Whence?—unless it be that,—finding the contempt, thus put upon the orders of their superiors, thus for two successive years unpunished and unnoticed,—all such delinquents, whose cases were most desperate, and least susceptible of true declaration or probably successful misrepresentation, betook themselves to silence: to silence, as to an asylum, in which the best chance for impunity was to be found.

At the same time, for want of a sufficiently correct and commanding view of the situation in which he stands, fearful of what may be the consequence of an apparent contempt thus manifested by silence, many an one (it will be manifest) there has been, who, seeing that by true returns he would expose himself to punishment in one way, and by non-return in another, has had recourse to falsehood.

And here, in a more especial manner than in the case of Simple Non-Return, comes the demand for connivance:—connivance, (of which presently), on the part of Right Reverend and Most Reverend eyes.

NOTES.

As to this matter, the following exhibits an alleged case of Non-Return, as reported by Mr. Wright (Letter II. Morning Chronicle of 20th Nov. 1816). "A Rector, holding two livings by dispensation, one with 500*l.* the other 400*l.* per annum; — the Incumbent lives 200 miles off, and has no resident or licensed Curate; nor has he thought it worth his notice to state to the Bishop, why he is Non-Resident according to 43 G. III. c. 84. § 25, 26."

On the subject of Pluralism and Ultra-Pluralism taken together, "In one diocese," (says Mr. Wright, Letter V. January 10th, 1814), "in one diocese, there are about 216 Clergy, who each hold two livings; 40, who hold three each; 13, who hold four each; 1, who holds five; and 1, who holds six, besides Dignities and Offices: and although many of these, thus accounted single benefices, are two, three, four, or five Parishes consolidated, yet great part of these Pluralists do not reside in any of their preferments."

The same Ultra-Pluralists are (it should seem) the persons whom Mr. Wright has in view when he asks (Letter IV. 3d Dec. 1813, Morning Chronicle), "How are these Pluralists to be returned in March next to his Majesty in Council? are they to be called resident in each living? If so, the list of Residents will appear very respectable: but it is not a new mode of increasing their numbers: or are they to be returned as excepted from the operations of the laws?"

"I will prove," (says he, Letter VII. March 4th, 1814, Morning Chronicle), "I will prove that there are Pluralists holding more than seven benefices and dignities."

In these cases of Ultra-Pluralism, whereabouts are the eyes of the Archbishop, when he grants, if so it be that he does grant, to one and the same person as many dispensations, minus one, as he has livings; and those of the Bishop, when he grants, if so it be that he does grant, to this same extra-meritorious person, the same number, or any part of the same number of licenses, viz. licenses for Non-Residence, including licenses for the same number of Curates? Here we have in one station the sin of Ultra-Pluralism (a sin the guilt of which is as real, as that of Simony is imaginary), in two other stations, the sin,—converted by the sanctity of the station into the virtue,—of connivance.

NOTES.

Number of these self-confessed inexcusable deserters of duty, A° 1809, no greater than 672; A° 1810, no greater than 650; A° 1811, swelled all at once to 1,033. In the increase—the great and sudden increase—thus acquired by the goodly fellowship of pretenceless truants, may be read the revelation of divers mysteries, by which all attempt at interpretation might otherwise have been set at nought. 1. “Incumbents residing in the neighbourhood and doing duty,” numbers shrunk from 565 (A° 1809) to 348! (A° 1810); and from 348 (A° 1810) to 301, A° 1811:—silence, where the same purpose may equally be accomplished by both, being in some eyes, and in some cases, more eligible than either rank mendacity, or an excuse irrelevant or insufficient upon the face of it:—2. “Unenumerated cases, confirmed by the Archbishop, shrunk from 54 to 35, and from 35 to 26:”—thus much, besides the several other instances of contraction in less striking proportion, which a glance at the Table will bring to view, in the cases by which this case is preceded. Add to these the following out of those that follow it: 3. “Sinecures, and Dignities not requiring Residence,” number shrunk from 233 to 70! and from 70 to 68:—4. “Living held by Bishops,” after an increase in one year from 26 to 35, shrunk from 35 to 21:—5. “Recent Institutions,” number from 54 (A° 1810) shrunk to 33:—6. “Held by Sequestration”—(an article of unpleasant aspect) number from 91 (A° 1810) shrunk to 78.

As to the “Unenumerated cases,”—as the two last of the above string of twelve cases of license are styled—(not that any of the others have any numbers prefixed to them either in the Act, or in any one of the Abstracts)—as to these two cases of arch-licentiousness without a mask,—who, that felt aright the ground he stood upon, would lay “understanding and will prostrate” before his

NOTES.

Bishop—his high-seated, and, except by accident, unknown and unknowing Bishop—much less, in the first place, before this Bishop, and then, in the event of this first sceptre's being held out to him, the still more highly and tremendously exalted Archbishop,—when, without any part of this compound of peril and humiliation, the same impunity might so easily be secured—secured by sitting still and silent?

Thus when, for giving allowance and increase to Non-Residence, the whole stock of excuses had been exhausted, so small a part of which, in the eyes of any one to whom salvation of souls were an object would, one should have thought, have been worth a straw,—the whole budget of the excuses, which so well exercised an invention as that of the Right Honourable and learned draughtsmen, assisted by all the experience and ingenuity of the host of reverend and other pious persons interested, could frame—and when even this was deemed not sufficient, without a power given to each Bishop with the concurrence of his Archbishop, and to the Archbishop without the concurrence of any body, to give allowance to this dereliction of sacred duty, in any case at pleasure, in which, after all the exercise thus given to experienced and interested ingenuity, not so much as the shadow of a pretence for it could be found,—after all this, in connivance was universally viewed, it thus appears, the surest, and to all parties (those excepted whose souls are at stake) the most convenient ground, on which this system, for the eradication of what little discipline, or regard for duty, might here and there have otherwise maintained its footing, could be erected.

Such, in itself and in its consequences—its natural (and can it be said its unforeseen or unintended?) consequences—is the Act, to which the Right Honourable Sir William Scott, by whom the Bill for it was brought in, has not scrupled to prefix the title of, “An Act to amend, &c. and for enforcing the Residence of Spiritual Persons on their Benefices in England:”—of the Most Reverend Fathers in God, the Archbishops—of the Right

NOTES.

Reverend Fathers in the same God, the Bishops—divers concurring in, no one objecting to, the bestowing upon it this same instructive and memorable title.

^k 13. I. [Dilapidated Churches, 23, 34, 56.] ^l 14. II. [Sinecures and Dignities not requiring Residence, 33, 70, 68.] In one respect, these two classes of the “Cases of Non-Residence which “could not be included among Licenses or Exemptions,” possess a joint claim to notice. Such, in the Return for 1810, being the second of the three years, is the character ascribed to both of them,—well then—this same character, is it the character that was ascribed to them in the first of these same three years? Oh no: in the accounts of that year they are both of them placed under the general head of Licenses.

Amidst this contrariety of statement, how then stands the fact? —Is it that, in this first year 1809, by the respective Bishops, Licenses were granted to so many Incumbents for the alleged cause, that the Churches belonging to their respective Parishes were in a state of dilapidation? and to so many others, became the Sinecures or Dignities of which they were respectively possessed, (the same being, all of them, Parochial Benefices) did not require Residence? If so, bold indeed were the hands by which, for any such causes, Licenses were signed: for of neither of them is any, so much as the most distant, hint to be found in the Act:—in the only Law by which, on condition of License, allowance is given to Non-Residence.

Thus then must have falsehood existed somewhere: the only question is, where. An Incumbent, to whom his Bishop had not for any such cause granted a License, did he state himself, and to the Bishop himself, as having on this ground received a License? or, the framer of this Abstract for 1809, knowing that no such Return had been made, did he, viz. to the number which thus stands annexed to the case, state such Returns to have been made? —If so, was it of his own motion, or at the suggestion of any, and what other person or persons that, by that Reverend Person, the false statement was thus made?—And so in the next case, viz. the case of “Sinecures and Dignities not requiring Residence.”

NOTES.

A propos of Dilapidated Churches.—If, to every Parish, Residence of a person thus replete with the Holy Ghost be—of itself, and independently of all duty done—so great a blessing,—how is it that (not to speak of License—that, as above, being plainly destitute of all ground)—how is it that, by a sort of moral title, Exemption comes to be allowed on the mere ground of the non-existence, or non-repair of the Church alone, so long as the Parsonage is not incapable of affording a lodging to the Holy Ghost?—The Church—it is not in the Church that, with this inmate in his breast, the man of God has his daily habitation. Destitute of these benefits, for the administering of which no place, other than that consecrated edifice called the Church could have been an allowable situation—deprived accordingly of the benefit of direct instruction,—the need which the Parishioners have of instruction by example—in a word, of whatsoever other benefits may be found derivable from this sanctifying Residence, is it not so much the more urgent?

To this, should he feel disposed to give it, the Earl of Harrowby might find his answer. It is not, he might say, by Excellent Church at large, that any such anxiety for the diminution of Non-Residence has ever been testified: no: with me, and the departed man of God, whose mantle I have upon my shoulders—it is with the chosen band that on this ground have been acting along with us—it is in our breasts that all this anxiety took its rise: the Act commonly called the Curates’ Act—the Act in which this pious affection sought and has obtained relief—the Act for a ground for which this information was obtained,—it is our Act.

Good, for the Earl of Harrowby. But Excellent Church, in what sort of a plight does this defence place her Excellency?

In what sort of plight does it place those highly exalted persons behind the curtain, under whose direction these Abstracts were framed? In their judgment this case formed a class apart—a case which did not come under the last preceding case, intituled "Absence without License or Exemption." It stands at the head of a list of cases, all which were, upon the face of them, understood to present a colour of justification: of justification in a moral, though not in a legal point of view.

NOTES.

Now as to the numbers—the numbers exhibited under each of these heads, in the three respective years:—as to this part, note well the amount of the draught made upon our faith.—First, as to Dilapidated Churches.—Anno 1809, of the Churches which, from the first erection of these sacred edifices, have fallen into this deplorable state, the whole number found remaining in it at the close of this year, no more than 23:—at the end of one single year more, viz. 1810, that number swelled to 34, almost half as many again; increase 11: next year, viz. 1811, number 56, increase 22; number of the increase doubled:—from these data, calculate—any person, to whom a calculation of this sort would afford amusement—at what Anno Domini England would be left without so much as a single Church in it.

Next as to Sinecures and Dignities not requiring Residence. Note here that,—notwithstanding the word Sinecures, and the word Dignities substituted in some of these cases to the word Sinecures,—what may be averred without much danger of error is—that all these benefices are so many parochial benefices: benefices, i. e. masses of profit extracted out of the pockets of so many sets of parishioners, encumbered with so many of these holy persons, so properly styled Incumbents: if not, no place could they have had in these Returns. The case then must be—that, with the constantly operating and all-embracing benefit of Episcopal discipline, by persevering neglect of pastoral duty, fostered by Episcopal connivance, so many Cures of souls must have been improved into Sinecures: in these, as in other Parishes, the inhabitants paying for having their souls saved, and in these, as in other Parishes, no service to any such purpose performed:—no service—no, nor so much as the pretence and form of service.

NOTES.

Being then so many Parochial Benefices, these Dignities, how has it happened to them not to require Residence? Is it that these cases are so many cases of Exemption? Not they indeed:—if they had been, then of course under this or that one of the thirteen cases so intituled, would they not, every one of them, have thus been entered; leaving no matter to be placed under any such head as this. Is it that they are so many cases in which Licenses have been granted? Yes, says the Return for 1809: no, says the Return for 1810, and, after it, that for 1811.—Search all Scotland over, not one will you find of these Sinecures: as little any one of these Dignities. Visionary and fanatical are the notions entertained of Dignity by these schismatics! With them it consists in fulfilment of duty: not in idleness pampered by depredation. And, imbued with the same wild notions, need scarce be said, are all the Non-Established Churches.

Now, as to the numbers in the different years. Anno 1809, first year of these Returns, no fewer than 233. Comes the next year, 1810,—vanished are all but 70: third and last year, two more gone: remain at this time no more than 68. By these Returns, if Truth kept company with them, no bad service might thus be done: the best thing that, as to this matter, could happen, would in that case be—that all Parochial benefices should be Sinecures.

“Where is your pretence for pulling these cases under the head “of Licenses?”—by some such question, put by somebody, after the Return for 1809 had been made up, and before the Return for 1810 had been finally settled—by some such troublesome question, it seems to have been, that the difference between the 233 and the 70 was made to vanish. Meantime the 163 Sinecurists and Dignitaries, thus unmasked and dislodged, what became of them? In what other of all these lurking holes of evasion or falsehood did they take refuge? or was it in the last desperate resource, silence?—helpless and perilous silence?

^m 30. IV. [Living held by Bishops, 26, 35, 21.] See No. 13.
30. IV. By every man by whom the pay attached to a Parochial

NOTES.

Benefice is received,—he neither performing, nor so much as intending to perform, the duty, in consideration of which it is allotted to him,—so much money (when shall the occasions for the repetition of this position cease?) so much money as has been received by him, has been obtained on a false pretence. If the power given to Bishops had really among its objects the salvation of souls, and thence the causing that instruction to be received by the people, for the administering of which the pay is appointed, among the first of these objects, in the order of necessity, would surely have been—the taking care, that,—while, for want of sufficient pay to an instructor, there were a fellowship of individuals, to whom that instruction could not be administered,—there should not be any person, on whom, in consequence of, and as it were in recompense for, the false pretence of rendering such instruction, any such money should be bestowed.

Not content with conniving at this mixture of rapacity and mendacity in others—not content with conniving at immorality in this double shape—here, out of the whole number of Bishops and Archbishops, viz. 26, here may be seen a large, probably the greater, proportion, practising it themselves for their own benefit.

Number of livings held by Bishops, as per Returns, Anno 1809, 26 : Anno 1810, 35 : Anno 1811, 21 : all of them stated as cases of Non-Residence : and therefore cases in which no duty is performed, in return for whatever money is thus received. Here, in the first of these three years, the number of masses of pay received upon this false pretence, is exactly equal to the number of the Right Reverend Lords by whom in this way they are respectively received : here then, if so it were that they received, each of them, what, upon an equal division, would be his part in the plunder, here would be exactly as many “miserable” and habitual “sinners” in this shape, as there are self-pretended receivers of the power of giving to others the power of forgiving sins. In many instances, indeed, so enormous are the masses of pay attached to these disguised half-sinecures, which would be so highly improved by being turned into undisguised and complete ones—that in these instances no such appendage is ever added. But, the total number of the masses thus obtained being given,—the less any one Bishop has, the more there is which remains for some other or others of these propagators, as well as receivers of the Holy Ghost.

NOTES.

Another curious enough circumstance is—that, while in the first of the three years the number of livings stated as thus held is but 26, and in the last of them but 21 ; in the second of them no less is it than 35. One thing is certain, viz. that in no instance would a living, not held by a Bishop, be stated as being held by any such Right Reverend and grasping hands : whereas, nothing is more easy than that in any numbers they should be actually so held, without being returned as being so held. If, to any such plain questions as these which have been seen, a Bishop cannot or will not obtain an answer, from an Incumbent who is nothing higher than a subordinate, much less will he, or can he from a brother Bishop. Among the holy persons,—by each of whom, of the money paid in a parish, for the salvation of the souls belonging to it, a good nine-tenths was pocketed, while the business is turned over to any underling that will undertake the job for the remaining tenth,—Salvation of souls, forsooth !—what a jest must it not have been in such a company ? Ah ! quantum nobis profuit ista de Christo fabula !

One Bishop check misconduct in another Bishop ! As well might you expect to see a Judge occupied in striking off the amount of a law expense, which would have gone into his own or a brother Judge's pocket.

Yes, that it does :—the principle, upon and by which this accommodation is provided and secured, presents an irresistible claim to notice. Under the allied Excellencies, scarcely will you find any where a high, and as the phrase is, responsible office, in which matters are not so arranged, that if a man misbehaves in it, and in particular if he commits waste or depre-dation in it, so it is that in the tribunal, which has cognizance of his offence, one seat is secured to the delinquent, and the others are occupied by men, who being sharers with him in the same sinister interest and fellow-feeling, would, in case of punishment, or restraint imposed upon him, be in some way or other his fellow-sufferers. Is he a Lord of the Treasury? Is he a Lord of the Admiralty?—A seat he must have, either in the House of Lords, by which,—or in the House of Commons, at the instance of which,—if tried, he must be tried. Is he a Welsh Judge, a Master in Chancery, or a Master of the Rolls, the House of Commons is open to him. Is he head Judge of International Law? is he head Judge of Ecclesiastical Law? the same Honourable House is open to him, and never fails to receive him. Is he at the head of the Criminal Law?—that to any amount, through other names, he may to his own use receive the plunder of the prisoner and the distressed—that to this and all other purposes the very idea of responsibility may be excluded, and despotism made perfect, he is regularly and constantly seated in the only tribunal in which he can be tried. Is he Chancellor? that all remedy to the abuses, by which he and his confederates profit, may be hopeless, he not only sits in that same judicatory, but governs it.

NOTES.

Judica teipsum (in the story told by Blackstone, out of the year Book) said the Cardinals to the sinning Pope, who, in compliance with so polite an invitation, after judging himself, condemned himself to be burnt, and, being burnt accordingly, was burnt into a saint. The judica-teipsum principle—be this then the name of that all-extensively and all-efficiently ruling principle, which, under the allied Excellencies, is so little spoken of, so universally and effectually acted upon,—and of which the convenience and the security it affords are so well felt and understood in all confidential situations.

In the instance here in question, thanks to this same judica-teipsum principle, such is the state of the sort of tool called Par- liament, that, in the last but one of the spiritually reforming Acts, passed in the reign of his present Most Excellent Majesty, (43 G. III. c. 84.) may be seen, in so many words, the clause or section following:—"XLI. And to the intent to avoid all doubts, "be it enacted, that no Archbishop or Bishop having, or who "shall have any Dignity, Prebend, Benefice, Donative, or perpetual Cure, shall, by reason of Non-Residence upon the same, "be subject or liable to any penalties or forfeitures." Under the thus anxiously craved shelter of this clause, conceive now an Archbishop,—with his 20,000*l.* a year, or his 14,000*l.* a year, besides his patronage,—fastening upon a Curacy, and pilfering it of a part of the pence belonging to it!—Yes: impunity they have got: but what have they got along with it? the word is present to every eye: it begins with the same letter, and need not be completed.

NOTES.

Now,—if the service, the performance of which the system of discipline pretends to secure, were of any use, or the discipline were in any other respects capable of operating with any effect,—let it be imagined on what ground, in case of delinquency in any shape, in the breast of an Incumbent with lawn sleeves to his gown, any such apprehension could be entertained, as that of experiencing either punishment or check, at the hands of a Right Reverend brother, sitting on the same bench and arrayed in the same robes?

With these sleeves on his arm,—and his 20,000*l.* a year, or his 14,000*l.* a year for keeping them washed,—conceive a man taking the pay of one of these Curacies, with the pretence of doing the whole duty of it on his lips, and in his heart the determination not to do any part of it; and thus pocketing the best part of the pence belonging to it. Conceive, at the same time, on pretence of taking in to wash these same symbols of purity, a woman, who had obtained a pair of them, selling them and going off with the money? Is there a fifth clause provided for her security? Would she be safe? Not she indeed: no license for swindling in that shape. No license for it in any shape to any of the swinish multitude.—Shut up in one of the gaols would the swindling washer-woman be, or shipped off to one of the Penal Colonies.

NOTES.

Well now, after all the anxiety shewn, as above, and pains taken accordingly, in this Act of 1803, to avoid "all doubts," yet so it is, that, at the distance of above five years after the administering of this opiate, viz. in the year 1809, being the first year of these Returns, and thereafter in the years 1810 and 1811, doubts,—wheresoever bred, perhaps on that same sacred bench, perhaps on the neighbouring wool-sack,—swarmed as much as ever. Exemptions is the head under which the case of "Living held by Bishops" figures in the first of these three years: yet, somehow or other, spite of this doubt-dispelling clause, when the Returns come to be given in for the next year 1810, this ground was regarded as being no longer tenable. Under what general head was it then ranked? Under that of "CASES which could not be included" (thus peremptory is the language) "among LICENSES or EXEMPTIONS:" and, in the next of the three years comprised in these revelations, the same melancholy conviction still continued. By the 41st clause impunity was indeed given: but, somehow or other, under the circumstances of the case,—this case of Living held by Bishops being too scandalous to have found admission even into the original Act—the Act of Henry the Eighth,—simple impunity had come to be regarded as not quite sufficient for the purpose.

This vacillation in opinions, is it in this that we are to look for the already above-remarked variation in the numbers of the three successive years? Anno 1809, twenty-six, and no greater, the number of these who could muster up courage enough to declare, that their case is of the number of those which are to be seen on the list of Exemptions. In the next year 1810, a class of cases being established, under the acknowledged description of "Cases which could not be included among Licenses or Exemptions," all twenty-six now with one voice joined in the confession of their former sins, and to these six-and-twenty miserable sinners were now added nine others, whom the shame, so well suited to their condition, had prevented from claiming an exemption, the title to which had been disallowed by conscience. Thus much as to the two first of these three years. Comes the last, and now,—out of the thirty-five, or whatever greater number was the real one,—twenty-one, and no more, abide by this self-condemning statement, all the rest seeking refuge along with the horde of delinquent Incumbents, in a declaredly penal and palpably unjustifiable silence.

NOTES.

Mark here another trait in the policy of the high Allies. For thus super-over-fattening these already overfattened idlers in reality, labourers only in appearance,—avowed Sinecures—benefices without Cure of Souls—could not be spared: these were wanted for other purposes. In each instance, that one body might be thus pampered, souls by hundreds were thus accordingly to be put to spare diet, and (for such is all along the supposition built upon and acted upon) that diet of inferior quality;—of no better than the breath of Curates: and, out of those who, but for this usurpation, might at least,—and (if the parsonage happened to be elegant and pleasantly situated) would perhaps—have been Residents, the number of Non-Residents was thus augmented.

God, it is evident, was not thus served for nought. A Deanery, for example, could not have come but out of the treasury of Court favour and Crown influence. But a fat Living, derived from some inferior and private source, might, peradventure, be already in the possession of the man of God, upon whose refusing shoulders the super-sacred lawn was predestinated to be forced: in this way, while pious merit was rewarded, the dictates of no less pious economy were at the same time observed: and, how high and sincere the regard was that was paid to that useful virtue, let any one judge, from the magnitude of the scandal to which, for the benefit of thus giving increase to it, their allied Excellencies scrupled not to expose themselves.

So true is it, that, under those High Allies, so far as concerns

NOTES.

the predatory class of offences, not to speak of others, punishment is for that malefactor alone, whose offence is upon a small scale: impunity, security, and dignity, for him whose offence is upon the largest scale. And in the excellent feature thus common to both Excellencies may be seen what the attachment of so large a part of their admirers and supporters has for its "fundamental feature."

Under an absolute Monarchy there is but one licensed depredator; and, forasmuch as what in this way is taken by others is so much taken from him, it is his care,—in so far as to his political power he adds intellectual and active personal power adequate to the task,—to reduce to its minimum their respective shares. But, under this mixed monarchy, in the state to which it has been brought, to the quantity of the matter of wealth thus devoured by the arch-depredator must be, and is added a quantity of the same precious matter, to be employed in the shape of matter of corruption, to purchase, by the possession or the prospect of it, at the hands of the self-styled Trustees of the People, by whomsoever appointed,—and of individuals, governed by an interest separate from and adverse to that of the people,—the habitual breach of their acknowledged trust: and hence the notion, so studiously propagated, and, among those who behold their profit in it, so cordially embraced, that constant and almost universal corruption is of the essence of the constitution,—that, spite of the proof given by the American United States to the contrary, government cannot be carried on by any other than corrupted hands,—and that, to substitute uncorruption to corruption, would be to substitute anarchy to government.

^m [31. V. Vacancies; 0, 74, 96.] On one account this head may be worth notice, viz. as being perhaps the only one of these thirty-three heads by which, in some just shape or other, reproach is not cast upon the system by which they are furnished. For the preceding year 1812, eleven is the number of vacancies, which the Edinburgh Almanack of the year 1813 exhibits in the 933 parochial benefices of the Scottish Church : in this one particular is the proportion between the two Churches not marked by any difference, greater than that which in such a case might be expected to be made by the hand of chance.

NOTES.

^o [32. VI. Recent Institutions ; O, 54, 33.] Of this locution the import may perhaps not be apparent to every eye at first glance. Institution, coupled with Induction, being the ecclesiastical term employed to designate the taking possession of the benefice : the intimation meant to be conveyed by these words appears to be—that, in each of these instances, the Incumbent having so recently come into possession, had not as yet had time sufficient to make the necessary preparations for his residence. But, supposing a man to have had no legal cause of allowance for Non-Residence,—no legal title to exempt him from the obligation of doing his duty,—and at the same time determined not to do it, rather than appear without excuse, what he would of course do is—to lay hold of this circumstance, and out of it make an excuse referable to this head. Under the above-mentioned head of Infirmity of Incumbent or Family, Mr. Wright has shewn how easily and frequently, under a friendly Bishop, a case of infirmity may, from an acute, be improved into a chronical case : and to a case of Recent Institution, under the like auspices, the like convenient extension need not be despaired of.

^p [33. VII. Held by Sequestration : O, 91, 78.] Principally, if not exclusively, the individual cases included under this specific head will have been cases, in which the Incumbent being insolvent, possession, at the instance of some creditor or creditors, had been taken of the benefice, to raise money for the discharge of the debt. Only by Church-of-Englandism could such a class of cases have been furnished. Under the Church of Scotland no such remedy has place. Why ? because, under that Established Church, no demand for it has ever been known to have place. On the part of a Church of Scotland Parish Priest, supposing insolvency even to have place, the object upon which the remedy would attach would be his person; and as to property, his private property, and not his benefice.

NOTES.

^a [34. VIII. Miscellaneous Cases not included in the preceding Classes: 0, 38, 51.] In this may be seen another very convenient niche, well adapted to the purpose of serving as a lurking hole to an individual case that would not bear description.

Note, that of these eight cases, styled "Cases which could not be included among Licenses or Exemptions," the two only ones which have place in the Return for the first year, viz. 1809, are that of "Absence without License or Exemption," and that of "Livings held by Bishops." But, in the Return for 1809, we have a general head, denominated MISCELLANEOUS CASES, and the number subjoined to it as high as 1250. Under this general head will of course have been included in that year the individual cases designated by the six particular heads added in the years 1810 and 1811. In the Returns for the years 1810 and 1811, the numbers under these six particular cases are no more than, for the year, 1810, 361; for the year 1811, 401; corresponding to the number 1271 in the year 1809, will, in the year 1810, be 1011; and, in the year 1811, 403. Compare these numbers with the number for the year 1809, viz. 1271. Here we have another instance to add to the variations brought to view under Note (i) p. 337.

Thus,—wheresoever, for the accomplishment of the prime object of Excellent Church, viz. pay without service, there was any thing in the case that seemed to afford so much as the faintest shadow of a pretence,—the budget of pretences, vast and shameless as it was, not being yet large enough for a demand altogether insatiable,—which, having been established by the Act of Henry the Eighth has now been distinguished by the name of EXEMPTIONS; a place (we see) was found for it among the contents of the new budget now established under George the Third, for this same pious purpose, under the head of Licenses. Yet even this—we see how far it was from being sufficient:—for of the three successive years, the Returns give, as Cases of Absence without License or Exemption, for the year 1809, 672: for 1810, 650; for 1811, no fewer than 1,033. Such was the number of the instances, in which, upon the face of this statement, the inexecution of the laws, and, consequently, the inefficiency of the system of discipline employed for giving execution to them, stands demonstrated.

NOTES.

The last, of the three successive years respecting which these Returns had been exacted, was of course the year in which it might be expected, that, by the new and additional instrument of discipline, consisting in the call thus made for these notifications, its utmost effect would have been produced. Yet, in these last of the three years, the number of these pretenceless instances of dereliction of duty is more than half as great again as in either of the two preceding years: it amounts to more than one-sixth of the whole number of cases of absence.

In all these several particulars, had the Returns, furnished by these Bishops, exhibited marks of the most perfect accuracy, it would not have followed that to any useful purpose discipline was maintained by them; or that in that, or any other respect, this order of men was of any the smallest use. But,—forasmuch as to these shepherds of the professed shepherds of souls, their immediately subject flock, composed mostly of wolves in sheep's clothing, were, generally speaking, personally, as well as in every other particular, unknown,—thus it is that, generally speaking, no sort of care of them can they have been in use to take.

In these several documents, under whatever heads the matter of abuse may be found exhibited, thus much should all along be borne in mind, viz. that, in respect of quantity, the representation thus given cannot possibly have gone beyond the truth, but may, to an indefinite amount have fallen short of it.

§ 8. Ulterior Information from Mr. Wright.

Thus far the ground we have been treading upon is sure :—Acts of Parliament and official documents. For the ulterior lights which follow, we must, in the first instance, content ourselves with the authority of the above-mentioned Mr. Wright, whose opportunities of information have at any rate been unquestionable. If not themselves in any instance conclusive evidence, to any one who to the power adds the wish to bring to light any such completely satisfactory evidence, they may at any rate serve to furnish subjects for inquiry. In favour of their verity an universally applying and notorious article of circumstantial evidence applies: in the face of Excellent Church have they been standing now for about these three years, and not in all this time, in any instance, has denial been from any quarter opposed to them.

In the manufacture of Parochial Sinecurism has already been seen one of the capital objects of Church-of-England policy. Of the nature of Exemption and License, and the use made of those two chief instruments in the carrying on of that valuable branch of manufacture, a conception sufficiently correct and extensive for the purpose has already, it is hoped, been conveyed. Of the nature and virtue of connivance, a conception could not have been rendered quite so clear from the Abstracts alone, as it will, it is believed, be found to have been rendered by those same Abstracts, elucidated by the explanations, for which we are indebted to the quondam Diocesan Secretary.

Connivance supposes delinquency: in its import the word bears an implied reference to delinquency in some shape or other, towards which this sort of countenance is

NOTES.

year 1809, 672: for 1810, 650; for 1811, no fewer than 1,033. Such was the number of the instances, in which, upon the face of this statement, the inexecution of the laws, and, consequently, the inefficiency of the system of discipline employed for giving execution to them, stands demonstrated.

The last, of the three successive years respecting which these Returns had been exacted, was of course the year in which it might be expected, that, by the new and additional instrument of discipline, consisting in the call thus made for these notifications, its utmost effect would have been produced. Yet, in these last of the three years, the number of these pretenceless instances of dereliction of duty is more than half as great again as in either of the two preceding years: it amounts to more than one-sixth of the whole number of cases of absence.

In all these several particulars, had the Returns, furnished by these Bishops, exhibited marks of the most perfect accuracy, it would not have followed that to any useful purpose discipline was maintained by them; or that in that, or any other respect, this order of men was of any the smallest use. But,—forasmuch as to these shepherds of the professed shepherds of souls, their immediately subject flock, composed mostly of wolves in sheep's clothing, were, generally speaking, personally, as well as in every other particular, unknown,—thus it is that, generally speaking, no sort of care of them can they have been in use to take.

In these several documents, under whatever heads the matter of abuse may be found exhibited, thus much should all along be borne in mind, viz. that, in respect of quantity, the representation thus given cannot possibly have gone beyond the truth, but may, to an indefinite amount have fallen short of it.

§ 8. Ulterior Information from Mr. Wright.

Thus far the ground we have been treading upon is sure :—Acts of Parliament and official documents. For the ulterior lights which follow, we must, in the first instance, content ourselves with the authority of the above-mentioned Mr. Wright, whose opportunities of information have at any rate been unquestionable. If not themselves in any instance conclusive evidence, to any one who to the power adds the wish to bring to light any such completely satisfactory evidence, they may at any rate serve to furnish subjects for inquiry. In favour of their verity an universally applying and notorious article of circumstantial evidence applies: in the face of Excellent Church have they been standing now for about these three years, and not in all this time, in any instance, has denial been from any quarter opposed to them.

In the manufacture of Parochial Sinecurism has already been seen one of the capital objects of Church-of-England policy. Of the nature of Exemption and License, and the use made of those two chief instruments in the carrying on of that valuable branch of manufacture, a conception sufficiently correct and extensive for the purpose has already, it is hoped, been conveyed. Of the nature and virtue of connivance, a conception could not have been rendered quite so clear from the Abstracts alone, as it will, it is believed, be found to have been rendered by those same Abstracts, elucidated by the explanations, for which we are indebted to the quondam Diocesan Secretary.

Connivance supposes delinquency: in its import the word bears an implied reference to delinquency in some shape or other, towards which this sort of countenance is shewn: the person by whom it is shewn being a person, in whose hands, for the prevention of such delinquency, power has been placed,—instead of employing it to that end, he connives at the delinquency: while it is staring him in the face, he keeps his eyes shut, that he may have to say he has not seen it.

Diminishing Non-Residence being the declared object of the system of legislation and administration pursued, giving increase to it, as hath been seen, the real object,—the instrumental and subservient modes of delinquency, towards which the conniving eyes will be turned, will be those, the object and tendency of which is to give increase to it. In the present case, relation being had to certain inquiries, having for their object the exposure and proof of the principal delinquency, viz. Non-Residence,—the two instrumental and subservient modes of delinquency here in question are, as above observed, False Responsion, in the present case False Notification; and Non-Responsion, in this same case, Non-Notification. By true Responsion—by true Notifications—the principal delinquency would, in the cases in question, be confessed: therefore, by Notification in this shape, the forbidden purpose could not be effected. By Non-Notification, the party so transgressing would, in a direct way, expose himself to the penalties, such as they are, which have been provided: this, therefore, is not the immediate, but the last resource. The immediate and most promising resource is False Notification. For, by this expedient, unless and until the falsity shall have been discovered, the principal delinquency remains concealed from view. Now, if matters be so ordered, that, in each instance of delinquency, in no more than one hand can the necessary union, of power with adequate inducement, and thence with inclination, be found,—while, in the breast of the only person, whose power is adequate to the purpose, adequate inducement is generally wanting,—the consequence is—that, as often as it is so, connivance will be the state of the eyes, with which delinquency, in the desired shape in question, is regarded by him,—and the delinquency will as constantly be safe.

From the nature of the Episcopal situation it will be seen, that, in the state of things in question, towards delinquency in the shape in question, a general habit of connivance might naturally have been expected and depended upon: from the disclosure made by the Abstracts it will in a general way be seen, that, to a vast extent, such connivance cannot but have been manifested. In the statements made by the Diocesan Secretary, individual instances, and other evidences of such connivance, will be visible.

First, as to the general probability. In and by this pretendedly reforming Act, (43 G. III. c. 84.) followed up and supported by the other Act, of a ten years' later date, (53 G. III. c. 149.) power being given to the Bishops, in their respective Dioceses, under the declared design of their enforcing the ordinances of the law,—despotism, and that without any exception worth regarding, in the purest and most perfect character,—is the shape in which, as already observed, that power has been conferred. In that part of the field of action which has been marked out by these two Acts, wheresoever delinquency has place, the Bishop is free to punish and repress it if he pleases:—he is equally free to leave it unpunished, and thus to authorize and encourage it, if he pleases. Wheresoever the latter is his pleasure, connivance, as hath been seen, is the name of the means, by which the desired effect is produced.

That, of the unbridled liberty, put into the hands of the mitred despot by this despotism, a general habit of connivance, towards delinquency in the shape in question, cannot but be the result,—will be sufficiently manifest to every eye, by which the state of interests in this part of the field of action is contemplated. That, throughout the whole of the Establishment, pay should be maximized,—on the other hand, labour and inconvenience, in every other shape, minimized,—is the particular interest common to every individual who has a place in it. Of the doing, otherwise than under the spur of the most cogent necessity, any thing by which either of these two so intimately connected objects may be counteracted,—the effect, on the part of a Bishop, or any other person, to whose office the duty of enforcing the laws is nominally attached,—will be, in the first place, to hurt that common particular and sinister interest in which he has so large a share ; in the next place, to expose him to the ill-will of every individual, and of the connexions of every individual, whose individual interest is in a particular manner made to suffer by the act of coercive power so exercised.

Imagination cannot figure to itself a case, in which, unless by accident (of which presently) the indulgence given by such connivance, should not, on the part of every individual, in that so perniciously exalted and arbitrarily disposing situation, be of the two opposite lines of conduct the only one that can rationally be expected. True it is, that, at all times, among persons in such a number, situated in such a rank of life, some one or other small number may naturally be looked for, in whose breasts more or less of real regard for the professed ends of the establishment has place. But, even in these instances, no reasonable expectation of a conduct, different in this behalf from that of the majority, can reasonably be entertained. Strange, indeed—strange and not reasonably expectable in such a situation—must be any such blindness, as should prevent a man from seeing, that,—while, by the giving execution to the laws, individual suffering, in no small quantity, cannot but be produced,—it is not in the nature of the case that real good should in any shape be accomplished. Thus, even in the most generous as well as enlightened mind, sympathy—social affection—will be operating on the side of particular interest,—and connivance and indulgence, on the one part, impunity on the other, will be the general result.*

* To take any thing like an exact measure, of the whole of the field which may be seen to afford room for connivance—to make up any thing like a complete account of the classes of cases looking up to the Episcopal palace for conniving mercy—would be no easy task: under any of those general heads, to attempt to discover the individual instance in which so virtuous a vice had manifested itself, would be an altogether impracticable one. For a general conception, the following sketch may serve:

	INDIVIDUAL CASES, in Years
	1809.	1810.	1811.
1. Absence without License or Exemption	672	650	1,033
2. Residence on other Benefices	1,240	1,846	2,059
3. Exemptions not notified	817	363	155
4. Infirmary of Incumbent or Family	465	389	396
5. Want or Unfitness of Parsonage-House	944	943	1,068
6. Incumbents residing in the Neighbourhood, and doing Duty	565	348	301
7. Unenumerated cases, confirmed by the Arch- bishops	54	35	26
8. Dilapidated Churches	23	34	56
9. Sinecures and Dignities not requiring Residence	233	70	68
10. Livings held by Bishops	26	35	21
11. Recent Institutions	0	54	33
12. Miscellaneous Cases	1,271	38	51
Totals open to Connivance, viz. as towards Non- Notification and False Notification	6,310	4,903	5,268
Totals of Non-Residents	7,358	5,840	6,311
Totals of Residents	3,836	4,421	4,490
Totals of Residents and Non-Residents together . .	11,194	10,261	10,801

N. B. The three last totals are here given for the purpose of shewing the respective proportions between them and the first.

Of

That, of the general and regularly established system of connivance, an occasional and particular suspension, how-

Of all these articles, the most curious one seems to be that which has for its title, Exemptions not notified. The grounds of indemnity so sure—the notification of it so simple and so easy, yet no notification made!—the Bishop,—at whose hands, if at any, and at whose hands alone, punishment, in case of the non-existence of any such exemption, could, if in any case, be seriously apprehended,—ready at all times to receive every such notification: yet, in the several years, by no one of all this prodigious number of thus wantonly transgressing men of God, any notification made. In so many hundreds of instances,—the party, whose safety is at stake upon the evidence, never troubles his head about the matter: the Judge—he it is who, at his own instance, is at the pains of collecting this exculpatory evidence: no man in this Utopia cares any thing for himself; the Judge—the Judge—and he alone it is, that cares for every body. All this while, whence is it that he can have come by his knowledge of the fact—this so unprecedently indulgent Judge? The exemption that has “not” been “notified”—(for such in all these instances is expressly declared to be the case)—how is it that he has come to the knowledge of it?—Ænigma upon ænigma! Mystery upon mystery!

The solution, is it, peradventure, this?—for no other can be found. Conscious of his not having in any shape any allowance for his Non-Residence—satisfied all the while that on no such account will harm in any shape happen to him—there sits the holy Sinecurist in perfect composure,—not making any notification, nor ever troubling his head about the matter. On the other hand, the Bishop, conceiving the reputation of Holy Church to be more or less concerned—the Bishop it is—who, in each instance, takes upon himself the pious task of supplying the deficiency, and,—from the circumstance of the non-production of any ground of exemption, inferring the existence of a proper one,—gives accordingly in this way his attestation of the fact.

Of the two modes of delinquency, viz. Non-Responsion and False Responsion, brought into action by the nature of the system,—for the sake of clearness it may perhaps be worth while, in the above list of cases, to endeavour to distinguish which it is that has place,—and thence, in case of Episcopal connivance, which it is that is the object of the connivance. Of these cases, two present themselves as being, upon the face of them, cases of Non-Responsion, viz. by Non-Notification: these are, Absence without License or Exemption, and Exemptions not notified: the rest as being,—in so far as delinquency in the principal shape, viz. unjustifiable Non-Residence, soever rare, is not altogether out of the nature of the case, has already been observed. Two causes, and two with or without Ultra-Pluralism, has place,—cases of False Responsion, viz. by False Notification.

In the case of Exemptions not notified,—if the only conceivable account of the matter be, as above, the true one,—then so it is, that in the instances, which, in the several years 1810 and 1811, gave rise to Non-Notification on the part of Incumbents,—not only connivance, viz. as towards transgression in this shape,—but Falsehood, committed by a False Return, knowingly made to the Head of the Church in Council,—was the fruit, on the part of Bishops.

If then, on the part of an English Bishop, reputation for veracity were worth maintaining, here would be an occasion for maintaining it : if, in that same holy quarter, exemption from the imputation of mendacity were worth securing, here would be an occasion for securing it. But, on the part of these consecrated persons, is any such reputation regarded as worth maintaining? Among so many manifestations, common to all, let the practice of the University of Oxford, in regard to the constantly and universally violated oaths, promising obedience to the Statutes—let the practice, of such of them as have been trained to holiness in that perjury hot-bed, speak :—suppose them all, without exception, not merely perjurers notorious, but perjurers convict, who is it that would care? Would Excellent Church be the less Excellent? Not she indeed, but, contrariwise, the more Excellent. To out-vociferate the cry of Corruption,—the greater the demand for vociferation, the religious world would ring but the louder with the cry of Excellence : the more completely and more notoriously dry-rotten the whole fabric, the more money would be called for—called for by the united voices of the living Saints, and the ghosts of the departed ones—for the support of it.

Behold now the comparison.—Under Church-of-Scotlandism, or in all Scotland, anno 1811, as in every year, total number of beneficed Clergymen, (of whom not one Non-Resident, not one Sinecurist, much less one delinquent Sinecurist) 944. Under Church-of-Englandism, anno 1811, and thence by the latest divulged accounts,—self-confessing, openly transgressing, incorrigible, and authoritatively reported delinquents,—Non-Residents, Sinecurists, Pluralists, and Ultra-Pluralists together, in the shape of Incumbents,—absent, i. e. Non-Resident without License or Exemption, 1,033 ; besides to the number of 155 others, whose Exemptions,—most likely falsely pretended,—remained, whether truly or falsely supposed to exist, unnotified : the Act, by which such notification had for form sake been re-causes alone, present themselves as adequate to the production of such an effect.

One is, on the part of the mitred despot, particular ill-will or adverse interest, as towards this or that particular delinquent. Of this first case, however, were instances ever so abundant, scarcely through any channel, on any occasion, or in any way, could any such be brought to light, much less in such a work as the present, in which no individual security for correctness can be afforded. But, by the very nature of the case, all possibility of proof—of completely conclusive proof at any rate—is precluded.—Let the conduct of the despot take which of the two opposite directions it will,—Virtue, in some shape or other, is always at hand to furnish it with an efficient cause. Is it connivance? the virtue is Tender Mercy: is it restraint or punishment? the virtue is Love of Justice, or in one word, Justice. Sir Hudibras, such was his eloquence,

“ could not open

“ His mouth, but out there flew a trope.”

In Fairy Land, princesses are upon record, whose mouths could not open, but a still more substantially brilliant produce, composed of pearls, rubies, and diamonds, was the result. In the English hierarchy those exaggerations of fiction are every day left behind. A Church of England Bishop can neither shut his eyes nor open them, act or forbear to act, do something or do nothing, but out springs some virtue out of the consecrated bosom. When in the secret recesses of his palace, he is occupied in determining quired, being thus treated by them with the contempt so justly due to it:—the contempt which, from beginning to end, it was not only formed, but intended to provoke. Add, to these authoritatively declared and authoritatively protected delinquents, the other, and probably greater part, composed of undeclared and undiscoverable, and still more carefully and effectually protected delinquents, as above.

the lot of sinning Incumbents, Mercy (it has been seen) and Justice—are the virtues which court his choice. When in the House of Lords, seated on the sacred Bench, he lifts up his holy eyes to heaven,—he beholds on the right hand Gratitude, on the left hand Patriotism. But Gratitude having Hope for her support, it is only the leavings of this Patrician that are picked up now and then by the Plebeian Virtue. The object of Gratitude is embodied in the person of the earthly and living Monarch, Vice-gerent and express image of the heavenly one : poor Patriotism has for her support no better an image than that of the many-headed monster, ycleped the Swinish Multitude.

Of the other cause,—being that which operates, in the case, in which, for the interest of the whole system, and of all that fatten upon it, a sacrifice is understood to be necessitated,—one example presents itself to every eye.—In the Tragi-comedy of the Curates' Act has been seen, and will be seen again, the Noble Reformer, in the character of Arch-Sacrificator, sacrificing to Excellent Church a holocaust of Incumbents, to make a feast for Curates.

By this explanation we are prepared for the exemplifications which have been given of divers ulterior corruptions by the Diocesan Secretary:—corruptions in themselves more or less different, but all of them flowing from one common source.*

* On the subject of connivance, and thereupon of veracity and sincerity, the following home-questions, addressed to the Archbishops and Bishops, appeared in the Morning Chronicle of 27th Nov. 1813: no notice, in print, it is believed, was ever taken of them by any body:

“ 1. Will the Archbishops and Bishops, in general, or any of them, say, that they ever corresponded candidly with each other about any individual case, to ascertain whether they were imposed on or not?

“ 2. Will they severally say, that the whole of the persons returned by them as licensed, were at that time actually so?

“ 3. Will

I. False Notification.—As to falsehood in Notifications, “It is not only against Pluralists,” (says Mr. Wright, Lett. I. 6th Nov. 1815, Morning Chronicle, 13th Nov. or thereabouts,) “not only against Pluralists, who have neglected to get Licenses for Non-Residence, but against many who have neglected to make the proper Notifications, ac-

“3. Will they, or any of them, say, that the whole of the persons returned as Resident, even resided within their respective parishes?

“4. Will any of them say, that the whole number, which each of them returned as exempt, made their Notifications?

“5. And were not all the Bishops desired by the Archbishops, under an Order of the Privy Council, to return those as not notified who had so neglected to send Notifications?”

“In the same diocese” (says Mr. Wright, Jan. 6th, 1814) “twenty-eight licenses have been granted, because ‘the house is unfit;’ eighteen of these benefices had formerly fit houses; and, as the favourite motto of churchmen is, Nullum tempus occurrit Ecclesiæ, they ought to be so now; and seven are unfit because they are let Two of the twelve had, by being consolidated, two parsonage-houses each. One Incumbent obtained a License by stating that he was Vicar of ———, and that he had no parsonage-house on his said Vicarage. He was correct, for he has none on his Vicarage, but it is on the Chapelry, which has been, time immemorial, annexed to it! He was instituted previous to the 43 G. III. and took the oath to reside, and had no License for the Residence till after that Act passed.

“The late Honourable Dr. Yorke, Bishop of Ely,” (says the same Mr. Wright, March 11th, 1814) “on receiving False Returns from some of his Clergy on these matters, wrote under such Return, in the most decided language, the statement he had received from the Rural Deans, and sent it back to the Clergyman so attempting to impose upon him, and requested those officers to see that the reparations were completed. Indeed, in 1787, he publicly expressed his high sense of the assistance he had received at their hands, and the benefit their exertions were to the Diocese.”

“The system of evasion” (says he, Jan. 18th, 1814) “has risen to an alarming height, and even men who by their offices ought to be the foremost in repressing or exposing any deception attempted to be practised on the Diocesans, are themselves guilty of the most flagrant misrepresentations and contempt of the laws; while their Curates, and those of other opulent Incumbents and Pluralists, of three, four, five, six, and seven, benefices and dignities, have remained unlicensed.”

“ cording to law,” (this is the case of Non-Notification,)
 “ of their exemption from Residence; which exemptions,
 “ even if notified, would be of a very equivocal nature:
 “ and others who have returned false notifications.” Such, he then goes on to say, are those against whom his actions were brought: “ as also others, who have been returned as “ Resident, but who are not so; and many of those hold“ ing one, two, or three livings, from some of which they “ claim exemption, in consequence of Residence on others,
 “ which” [Residence] “ they do not perform.”

For general presumptive proof of alleged falsehood in Notifications, see above, Section 7, Note (c), to 13. Ex- emptions not notified: for particular alleged instances of vice in this shape, see Note (d) to 15. I. Infirmity, &c. and Note (i) to 27. I. Absence without License, &c.

II. Falsehood in Statements made to Bishops for obtain- ing Licenses.—“ A Vicar,” (says Mr. Wright, Lett. II.
 Morning Chronicle, 20th Nov. 1813)—“ A Vicar, who “ obtained a License from a Bishop for Non-Residence on “ one living, stating that he was going to live near ano“ ther living in a different part of the kingdom. On in“ quiring for him at the place where he was supposed to “ to reside, he was gone to a more fashionable part of the “ country. His License has been expired two years, and “ his Curate neither licensed nor resident.”

III. Perjury and Bond-breaking, viz. by Non-Residence, or other non-performance of duty, the performance of which has thus been professed to be secured by a pro- missory oath, or a bond, or both.

As to the truth of the matters of fact, in this as in all these other instances, it must rest upon the credit of Mr.
Wright.

True or not, however, in these particular instances,—under Excellent Church, perjury will, on every safe and profitable occasion, be an incident but too truly probable. It is among the practices which, as hath been seen, the Church of England clergy are trained up in and to in the preparatory situation. It is among her principles—it is what you will hear from every mouth—that things of this sort, (meaning promissory oaths, subscriptions, test-ceremonies, and so forth,) are all matters of form: and that, as such, they may without scruple be violated, as often as advantage or convenience in any shape is to be got by it. In any such predicament as that of having, for example, taken an oath on admission into the University of Oxford, promising constant observance of a set of regulations, many of which are, by every one who has ever taken the oath, continually infringed,—if conscience be too callous to need for its repose this or any other sedative, at any rate for putting aside the imputation of standing self-condemned, some short phrase or other, to serve as a plea, will always be necessary: and a more commodious one than this the nature of the case seems not to admit of. Among these same statutes, are some, the observance of which would be impossible: others, such that, by the observance of them, some mischief and no good would be produced: and thus a justification is found for violating others, of which, while the observance is both possible and beneficial, the non-observance is mischievous.

For cover-seeking falsehood, Jesuitry has long been proverbial: but, between Jesuitry and Church-of-Englandism, more especially in this Oxford edition of it, where has been the difference? The sin, over which these Romanists have never ceased to throw a cloak, these Church-of-Englandists commit openly, and at their ease. In the practice of insincerity, shame has never altogether quitted the school of Loyola: it seems to have been reserved for Excellent Church, and more particularly for the University of Oxford, to regard that vice, in all its unpunishable forms, as a matter of indifference.

Follow now the facts from the pen of Mr. Wright, Lett. II. Morning Chronicle, 20th Nov. 1813:—

“ The number of those who have neglected their duty,
“ in contempt of the law, and in direct violation of solemn “ oath and bonds, are far more than can be contemplated “ without a considerable degree of alarm.”

“ A Vicar, on whom the great tythes of the benefice “ were settled many years ago, ‘ in order to encourage “ him,’—they are now worth near 1,200*l.* per annum: when “ he was instituted, he took an oath to reside, which, al“ though not administered since the Act of the 43d of his “ present Majesty, (being prohibited by section 37.) yet
“ he having taken possession previous thereto, is not ab“ solved from it, nor has he any legal cause of absence.”— What Mr. Wright means, of course, to give us to understand of this Vicar, is—that, notwithstanding this oath, he never did reside. Quære, by whom, and on what authority, was an oath to this effect administered?

“ A Rector, holding two valuable Rectories, together “ about 1,200*l.* per annum, by dispensation, to obtain “ which he gave bond to the Archbishop, that he would “ constantly reside on one, and keep a Resident Curate “ on the other, himself preaching on the benefice where “ he did not reside thirteen sermons every year.” N. B.
This is according to the form of a dispensation for Pluralism given in Burn’s Ecclesiastical Law, title Plurality.
“ He obtained Licenses for a statutable cause from both, kept
“ a Curate on one, who served both for 84*l.* but, his Licenses
“ for Non-Residence being expired, and there being some “ doubt in the Bishop’s mind, whether he had any regular “ Curate, the Licenses were not renewed: he of course “ became liable:” [viz. to an action: and against this alleged delinquent we are to conclude was one of Mr. Wright's actions brought.]

IV. View of the Bishops' Bench, by this Secretary to four Bishops.—"At a Committee of the Bishops," (says Mr. Wright, Lett. I. Nov. 6th, 1813) "after a deliberation of nearly two years, it was decided that each Bishop should give his Secretary an annual sum of money. I have received it from not one of them, except my late lamented patron, the Bishop of London:" [Randolph.]

"Commiseration may have been given," (says he, Lett. VII. March 4th, 1814,) "but it was all I ever received from any one, and that would have been unnecessary, if the sums had been paid which were acknowledged to be my due, for the extra-official business I transacted during nine years, for the dioceses I was employed in by order of Government. Although some part of it was for the advantage of the Clergy, the Bishops endeavoured to throw the whole expense upon Government; and Government (after allowing them printed franks, and, in several instances, papers to any extent from the King's Printing Office) considers that the Bishops ought to furnish the required particulars at their own charge, and therefore, at present, I, and other Secretaries, remain unpaid."

"Two Secretaries have, within the last ten years, fallen victims to the consequences of depression of mind arising from a want of sufficient income."

V. Quantity of actual Duty reduced by habitual Neglect; viz. even of legally exigible Duty,—by subtraction of half, or of some yet larger proportion of the number of times at which, in the compass of the year, the stated parts of the Church-of-England service ought by law to be performed.

"In one diocese, one-third of the livings have had the “ duty within a few years reduced from twice each Sunday

“ to once.”

“ A Vicar who holds a consolidated living (and took the “ oath to reside) worth about 200*l.* per annum . . . had a “ license for non-residence, expired near two years: lives “ four miles off: holds also another vicarage, (whereon he “ took the oath to reside,) within these few years there was
“ a house on this also: its value was about 150*l.* per an“ num: now there is said to be no house, and the duty on “ each is reduced from twice each Sunday to once.”

VI. Ely Diocese. State of its Discipline anno 1813,
compared with the year 1728. [From Mr. Wright's Letter
V. Jan. 18th, 1814.] “ The following statement of one “ small diocese, of which I have with infinite trouble, col“ lected the particulars, for every parish except four, from “ authentic sources, will prove the necessity of some serious “ enquiry as to the performance of those sacred duties for “ which such large sums are paid out of the labours of the “ industrious.”

In 1728.

“ On 140 livings 70 Resi“ dent Incumbents.

“ Thirty-five who resided “ near and performed the “ duty.

“ Thirty-one curates who “ resided in the parish or “ near it.

“ The population was “ 56,944 souls. The duty
“ was performed 261 times
“ every Sunday.

“ And their Income was “ 12,719*l.* per annum.”

In 1813.

“ On the same 140 livings,
“ 45 Resident Incumbents.

“ Seventeen who reside
“ near and perform the duty.

“ Thirty-five curates, some
“ of whom reside seven,
“ eight, ten, or twelve miles
“ off.

“ The population is “ 82,176 souls. The service
“ is performed about 185
“ times every Sunday.

“ And their Income is now
“ 61,474*l.* per annum.”

alleged delinquent we are to conclude was one of Mr. Wright's actions brought.]

IV. View of the Bishops' Bench, by this Secretary to four Bishops.—"At a Committee of the Bishops," (says Mr. Wright, Lett. I. Nov. 6th, 1813) "after a deliberation of nearly two years, it was decided that each Bishop should give his Secretary an annual sum of money. I have received it from not one of them, except my late lamented patron, the Bishop of London:" [Randolph.]

"Commiseration may have been given," (says he, Lett. VII. March 4th, 1814,) "but it was all I ever received from any one, and that would have been unnecessary, if the sums had been paid which were acknowledged to be my due, for the extra-official business I transacted during nine years, for the dioceses I was employed in by order of Government. Although some part of it was for the advantage of the Clergy, the Bishops endeavoured to throw the whole expense upon Government; and Government (after allowing them printed franks, and, in several instances, papers to any extent from the King's Printing Office) considers that the Bishops ought to furnish the required particulars at their own charge, and therefore, at present, I, and other Secretaries, remain unpaid."

"Two Secretaries have, within the last ten years, fallen victims to the consequences of depression of mind arising from a want of sufficient income."

V. Quantity of actual Duty reduced by habitual Neglect; viz. even of legally exigible Duty,—by subtraction of half, or of some yet larger proportion of the number of times at which, in the compass of the year, the stated parts of the Church-of-England service ought by law to be performed.

"In one diocese, one-third of the livings have had the “ duty within a few years reduced from twice each Sunday

“ to once.”

“ A Vicar who holds a consolidated living (and took the “ oath to reside) worth about 200*l.* per annum . . . had a
“ license for non-residence, expired near two years: lives
“ four miles off: holds also another vicarage, (whereon he “ took the oath to reside,) within these few years there was
“ a house on this also: its value was about 150*l.* per an“ num: now there is said to be no house, and the duty on
“ each is reduced from twice each Sunday to once.”

VI. Ely Diocese. State of its Discipline anno 1813,
compared with the year 1728. [From Mr. Wright's Letter
V. Jan. 18th, 1814.] “ The following statement of one “ small diocese, of which I have with infinite trouble, col“ lected the particulars, for every parish except four, from “ authentic sources, will prove the necessity of some serious “ enquiry as to the performance of those sacred duties for “ which such large sums are paid out of the labours of the “ industrious.”

In 1728.

“ On 140 livings 70 Resi“ dent Incumbents.

“ Thirty-five who resided “ near and performed the “ duty.

“ Thirty-one curates who “ resided in the parish or “ near it.

“ The population was “ 56,944 souls. The duty
“ was performed 261 times
“ every Sunday.

“ And their Income was
“ 12,719*l.* per annum.”

In 1813.

“ On the same 140 livings,
“ 45 Resident Incumbents.

“ Seventeen who reside
“ near and perform the duty.

“ Thirty-five curates, some
“ of whom reside seven,
“ eight, ten, or twelve miles
“ off.

“ The population is “ 82,176 souls. The service
“ is performed about 185
“ times every Sunday.

“ And their Income is now
“ 61,474*l.* per annum.”

Extract of a Letter, signed, An Apologist :—Morning Chronicle, 1st February, 1814 :—

After accusing Mr. Wright, in general terms, “of fallacious and malignant conclusions”—“The Diocese,” (he says) “if I am not mistaken, is Ely. In this Diocese,” (continues he) “is the University of Cambridge, and the churches are more generally served, or the livings held, by Members of that University. These gentlemen are resident in their respective Colleges, and all the Statutes applied to Residence have recognized a just respect for literature, and have granted indulgences to men thus engaged in its pursuit.”—Is this genuine? or is it not Mr. Wright himself in disguise?

“I cannot,” (says he,) “make out from what documents Mr. W. has acquired his statement of the relative amounts of the Ecclesiastical Revenues of this Diocese in the year 1728 and at the present time The increase of a Rectory, from 800*l.* to 12,000*l.* a year, arose,” “from drainage of fens.”

§ 9. Vices of Excellent Church recapitulated.

In the next section, that which presents itself as the best and easiest mode of effecting the change,—which, by the nature of the case, appears to be so imperatively demanded,—will, in its general features, be brought to view. Of the radical corruptions and other imperfections, of which the demand is composed, a conception not altogether uninformative will, it is hoped, by this time have been conveyed. But,—the examination having insensibly drawn itself out to a length, so much beyond what at the outset was expected to be found necessary,—a summary recapitulation, in the form of a list of these same corruptions and imperfections—say in one word vices—of which the fabric of Excellent Church has been seen to be composed, may, it is hoped, for the purpose of a simultaneous view, be found not altogether without its uses.

I. VICES having relation to DOCTRINE.

I. 1. Infallibility, virtually and to every practical purpose, ascribed to a set of men, on no other ground than that of the temporal power possessed by them: men, in whose time the state of the human mind, in the scale of improvement, was to such a degree low, that scarcely on any other subject than this, confessedly the most obscure of any, is it at present an object of regard: all hope of correction being thus as effectually as possible taken away from whatsoever errors it may have happened to them to have fallen into. Say, for shortness, *prostration of understanding and will, before the blindly assumed infallibility of a comparatively unenlightened age.

II. 2. To an extent, proportioned to that on which these men of imputed infallibility may at present be deemed to have fallen into error,—the existing generation of professed instructors in matters of religion,—and the people at large, in quality of their pupils,—are, one and all,—by Catechisms,† Creeds, and Subscriptions to articles of faith, together with fixed forms of devotion, replete with practically useless tenets, on subjects, many of them, confes-

* Chargeable (this vice, No. 1.) to the Scottish Established, but not to any of the Non-Established Churches.

† So far as concerns Catechism and Subscription, but with the exception of Creeds, this vice has been found chargeable on the Established Church of Scotland, though not to so great an extent as to that of England. See further on.

sedly out of the reach of human comprehension,—forced into probable error and certain insincerity,—engaged to keep themselves debarred from the free exercise of their judgments,—and pledged to the delivering, as being in their eyes right and true, those tenets, to which it may, to any proportion, happen to be in those same eyes wrong and false; and to reject, as wrong and false, tenets which in those same eyes may come to be right and true.

Perpetuity endeavoured to be given to that mixture of error and insincerity,* which was a necessary result of an assumption so unsuitable to human weakness.

II. VICES having relation to SERVICE.

III. 1. Spiritual Instructors and guides in matters of religion, appointed,—not by those for the salvation of whose souls it thereby becomes their duty to labour,—but, each of them, generally speaking, by some one stranger, whose own appointment is at best the work of chance,—and whose interest it is, to the extent of whatever number of relatives he may have, for whom he stands inclined by worldly interest or affection to make provision, to provide for them in this way, notwithstanding any degree of unfitness by which it may happen to them to be characterized: this interest being the stronger, the more palpably they are unfit for every occupation to which the successful exercise of intelligence or active talent is necessary. Instructors and guides in religion, appointed by persons more likely to appoint unfit than fit ones.

IV. 2. Fixed forms established for every thing: and

* See Note (+), p. 369.

these exclusively allowed: ideas, if ever imbibed, soon evaporating,—remains a caput mortuum composed of signs. Thought excluded from instruction and worship by the exclusive establishment of fixed forms.

V. 3. In large tracts of country, under the name of Extra-parochial places, the benefit of the instruction and worship, such as it is, never communicated to the inhabitants.*

To whole districts (viz. all extra-parochial ones) the benefit, such as it is, denied.

VI. 4. In many parishes, the whole population left without a Church to resort to,—though in these, as in other places, religious instruction and worship, otherwise than in a Church, continues to be treated as a crime.* Parishes without Churches: worship out of a Church not the less a punishable crime.

VII. 5. In a large proportion of the whole number of the parochial districts, the districts left without a dwelling-house for a Minister; while, in respect to exposure to punishment for Non-Residence, he has been left upon a footing of no less danger than if there were no such obstacle to his Residence.* Parishes without Parsonages: yet Residence, if not in a Parsonage, as punishable as Non-Residence.

VIII. 6. In a great multitude of instances,—the capacity of the house of worship, compared with the number of the parishioners, so large, that to a large, and even to by far the largest part of that number, participation in the benefit of religious instruction and worship has thus been suffered to become physically impossible.* Parishioners excluded by want of Church-room.

* See Note, p. 373.

IX. 7. In many instances, the parochial district so large, or the situation of the place of worship so far from central, that, to a large proportion of the inhabitants, participation in religious instruction and worship has thus been rendered either impracticable, or to such a degree inconvenient, as, on that account, to be generally given up.*

Parishioners, excluded by remoteness of the Church.

X. 8. In the edifices for religious instruction and worship, the disposition made of the space very generally such as, in a large proportion, to put an exclusion upon the unopulent many, by the over-accommodation afforded to the opulent few. Poor, excluded by over-accommodation to the rich.

XI. 9. For want of adequate motives for performance, such as would be, and elsewhere are, afforded by an apt system of discipline, duties of the inexigible class left generally unperformed. See Discipline. For want of motives, inexigible duties left generally unperformed.

III. VICES having relation to PAY.

XII. 1. In a vast proportion of the whole number of parochial districts,—regard being had to the exigency of the service, particularly in the primæval age of almost universal ignorance,—the scantiness of the pay such, as to render the engagement of an adequately instructed and constantly resident Minister, altogether hopeless.

*By scantiness of pay, engagement of an adequately qualified resident Minister rendered hopeless : or, Pay, too small for subsistence.

* See Note, p. 373.

XIII. 2. The pay,—while, as in the case of other taxes imposed for public purposes, exacted of necessity from unwilling hands,—yet not, as mostly in the case of taxes imposed for other public purposes, taken from an universal fund,—but so taken from a local fund, that, in the individual so paid at his expense, each neighbour beholds the sole author of the suffering produced on his part by the exaction; while, in many instances, by the person so paid for it, either service is not rendered, or, if rendered, is seen to be of little or no worth, compared with the price so paid for it,—and palpably excessive, when compared with the pay received for the like service in other parishes.*

By misassessment of the pay, the receiver rendered odious.

XIV. 3. From the nature of the subject-matter on which it is imposed, the mischief of the tax enhanced by unprofitable vexation,—and by the prohibition which, to an indefinite extent, it has the effect of putting, upon that application of labour which would have been the most profitable. The tax by which the pay is levied, (viz. a tythe on produce) unprofitably vexatious, and frequently, in regard to the most profitable application of labour, prohibitive.

XV. 4. In a great number of the districts, the pay, by so enormous an amount, viz. from twice to some score times—greater than in others, in which no reason can be assigned for regarding it as insufficient, (service not inferior either in quantity or in quality, being in those same districts performed for it,) that, in the eyes of the people from whom it is exacted, the difference constitutes a burthen imposed upon them without need or use : money exacted to no purpose but to be wasted. Pay, by excess oppressive.

* The vices, thus distinguished by an asterisk, are all of them such as would, in the nature of the case, be capable of being removed by money: and for the exaction of money for these purposes there cannot be, on the part of the supporters of Excellent Church, any want of readiness. But, by the correction of these unessential imperfections, supposing them corrected, the other vices, that belong to the essence of the system, would they be removed, or so much as diminished? Consider well the list, and you will find that, so far from being diminished, the mischievous efficacy of the whole system would be increased: to an enormous degree the pressure of the expense increased, and, in return for this increase of pressure, no good effect produced.

XVI. 5. In a great number of the districts, the pay to such a degree excessive,—as, by enabling a man, to invite him to expend the greater part of it in pleasures, or pursuits, not only foreign, but adverse to the service : no adequate motives, if any, being at the same time provided, for securing, on his part, the adequate performance of his duties. Pay, by excess seductive.

XVII. 6. For exigible services of the occasional class, pay, in the instance of each service, exacted in equal quantity from the richest and the poorest,—and thence, to the poor, oppressive. Pay, by disproportionality excessive.

XVIII. 7. By pay,—received without performing or intending to perform any part of the duty, on the pretence of performing which it is exacted,—the parochial offices in question, about half of them, more or less, say about 6,000, converted into Sinecures. By bad discipline, Cures corrupted into Sinecures.

XIX. 8. In masses of various sizes,—some of them as far as some dozen or even score of times as large as many an one, for which the entire duty of a benefice is performed,—lots of pay established, as if for spiritual service, but without any such service, either rendered or so much as prescribed. Pay without service, in originally established Sinecures.

IV. VICES having relation to DISCIPLINE.

XX. 1. By the name of Bishops,—with Archbishops over them, and Archdeacons under them, together with Chancellors, Commissaries, Surrogates, and other Judges appointed by them,—and, in the way of technical procedure, cognizance taken,—not only of matters bearing relation to religious doctrine and service, but of matters purely temporal, having no relation to either: (See above, Section 6.) viz. the Official principal and Dean of Arches, appointed by the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Chancellors appointed by the respective Bishops, with et cæteras upon et cæteras: the whole constituting such a perfect mass of uncertainty and confusion as baffles all description:—so many orders of official persons, with masses of pay more or less enormous, preserved out of the trappings of Popery, under the pretence of their preserving discipline, viz. causing service, apt in quantity as well as quality, to be universally performed: though, all the time, it is by these very men, that the discipline has been brought into, and kept in, the ruinous state in which it has just been viewed.—Discipline, destroyed by Bishops, &c.—paid at enormous rates, on the pretence of their preserving it.

XXI. 2. To these Bishops and Archbishops, seats preserved in the Supreme Body of the temporal government: their situation by this means rendered such as,—while it would draw aside their attention from, if they bestowed any upon, their spiritual duties,—thereby, if the performance of them were of any use, depriving men's souls of the benefit of that use,—fills them with pride and ambition; and sets them to exercise temporal dominion over their fellow priests, and other their fellow Christians, in direct contempt of so peremptory and pointed a prohibition as that delivered by Jesus to those of his followers whose successors they pretend to be.—Bishops, &c. exercising temporal dominion in contempt of Jesus.

XXII. 3. Bishops,—whose service, if any were rendered by them, would consist in the preventing their respective subordinates from receiving pay without performing the service for which it is appointed,—committing in the face of day, and for their own profit, the same sordid sin which they profess to prevent in others.—Bishops, to their own use converting Cure of souls into Sinecure.

XXIII. 4. In pursuance of a recently perfected system, the powers of these Prelates exercised in a manner completely despotic: viz. singly, secretly, without need of discussion before or by others,—without need of reason assigned by themselves,—in some cases without any appeal, in all without effectual appeal,—and on their part without personal responsibility in any shape.—Bishops, exercising over their Parish Priests a recently established corrupt despotism.

XXIV. 5. On principles purely Popish,—for no other purpose than, in open contempt of the plainest and most peremptory prohibitions of Jesus, to give increase to the mass of emolument, temporal power, and factitious dignity, with which they are cloathed,—a separate and altogether useless body of substantive law,—with a correspondent system of procedure and judicial establishment—kept on foot, to no better purpose than that the patronage of the judicial establishment may be continued in the pre-eminently unfit hands of Bishops: complication, plainly useless, and palpably inexcusable,—and with it proportionable uncognoscibility,—thence to good purposes inefficiency, and to bad purposes efficiency,—being thus secured to the rule of action. Law and judicature, complicated and corrupted, to swell by patronage of judicial offices the pomp of Bishops.

XXV. 6. Fees exacted from individuals,—the very poorest not excepted, and in their instance capable of operating with prohibitory effect,—for each of the several occasional parts of the service, viz. Baptisms, Marriages, Churching of Women, and Burials: these being services, with the exception of the ceremony of Churching, taken for the subjects of the evidentiary documents on which family rights in general are made to depend: services, on the performance of which, according to intimations more or less determinately expressed, and more or less generally conveyed and received, the chance of salvation is moreover in some way or other dependent. By fees exacted by Priests, the poor excluded in reality from temporal rights, and pretendedly from salvation.

XXVI. 7. In whatever instances the mode of exercising the discipline is not, as above, despotic,—fees in like manner exacted: fees, i. e. money, exacted in the way of taxation, by the receivers for their own benefit; and having, as in the case of other taxes, the effect of a prohibition, excluding every one who is not able to pay them from all participation in the benefit, to the receipt of which they are attached.—By fees, all but the rich excluded from justice.

There stands Excellent Church. Behold her in puris naturalibus. These are among her vices. More, at any time, if wanted. Enquire, as above, of the Diocesan Secretary. Who shall make up the per contrà side of her account? Who shall make out the list of her Excellencies?—Come forward, Dean Kipling;—Come forward, Dean Andrews;—Come forward, Bishop Burgess;—Come forward, Bishop Marsh;—Come forward, Bishop Howley;—Come forward, Archbishop Sutton;—“Defenders of the Faith and so forth.”—Come forward, Legion,—Saints of all sorts and sizes, buttoned up into unity in the waistcoat of the Quarterly Review. Shut up your common-place books;—blow aside your metaphors of all work, your bubble generalities;—speak plain for once, if you dare and can;—examine the uncorrupt side of your Diana, if you can find it.—Take counsel together; give in with one accord the list of all her Excellencies:—or do they not already stand summed up in the one grand total—Decency?

Think not out of the invisibility of your challenger to make a plea for silence. The strength of his cause is not in his force but in your weakness. If in the title page his name and description stood at full length, by how much the shorter would be this list of Vices?

Of the above vices, though of late years under Excellent Church herself, in the hands that have been mentioned, some of the most flagrant may be seen to have received increase,—yet when viewed in the lump, and without any distinction which in this place would be worth remark, they may be stated as constituting so many symptoms of the hereditary disease, brought by her into the world from the womb of her Holy Mother, once of Babylon, now of Rome.

Of these same vices, what is there that will be found chargeable upon any Protestant Non-Established Church?—not one.—From no small number of them, where it is on the footing of a visitor only, and not as mistress that she has place, even Holy Mother herself may be seen to be free. May she not, reader? Take in hand the Table, and look over it in this view.

Of all these same diseases, two and no more in reality, one other in appearance, have been found not yet purged off, in the constitution of the Established Church of Scotland. The two real (it has been seen already) are the two cardinal and intimately connected vices, which have been stated as having relation to doctrine, viz. 1. Prostration of understanding and will before the blindly assumed infallibility of a comparatively unenlightened age. 2. Perpetuity endeavoured to be given to that mixture of error and insincerity, which is the necessary result of an assumption so unsuitable to human weakness.*

* To the mischief, of an arrangement so palpably repugnant to common sense and sincerity—an arrangement which admits not of any thing like a justification, nor so much as an extenuation, other than the force of custom—of that power in which whatever is most flagitious has somewhere or other found its support—in a system in other respects so admirably conducive to the support of piety and morality,—it affords no small consolation to observe two most important defalcations: defalcations, by which taken together, the amount of it is reduced to a small matter, in comparison of that which has place under Excellent Church.

1. In the first place, of whatever there may be of insincerity, the practice is but the act of a moment; viz. the moment at which the signature, expressive of the assent, is attached: that moment over, room remains open at all times for the application of a proposition, which (it is hoped) will have been found sufficiently established in a former part of this work (viz. Preface, p. xxiv.), that, without breach of sincerity, a man may entertain, and without violation of any engagement, declare and maintain, opinions to any amount contrary to those, his assent to which had at any former point of time been declared and recorded. It is not—this bitter dose—it is not,—as in and by the fixt forms of Excellent Church,—in the shape of Creeds, of Prayers, and in so many other shapes, on every occasion of devotion, brought up again and re-swallowed.

2. In the next place, to the Clergy—less than a thousand in number,—with no other addition than that of the Professors in the four Universities—all or most of them—is the obligation and practice of swallowing the poison, such as it is, confined: neither to the Laity at large, nor so much as to the Lay Students in the Universities, does it extend itself.

In the case of the first institutors of this practice, a sort of extenuation cannot but present itself: viz. that perhaps in no sect of Christians,—Protestants any more than Catholics, or members of the Greek Church,—was any instance in those days to be found, of a set of men exempt from the same mixture of blind diffidence and blind confidence. On the part of each man diffidence in the rectitude of his own opinion; confidence in the opinions entertained, or supposed to be entertained, by a set of men frequently unknown to him:—confidence in the rectitude of a man's own first thoughts;

3. The one which is such scarcely otherwise than in appearance, is the one designated by the words, "Instructors" diffidence in the rectitude of the same man's more and more mature thoughts to the end of life. Second thoughts are best, says the familiar proverb, grounded on the experience of every thinking moment of every man's life. No;—say the establishers of these institutions: first thoughts alone are good for any thing: all subsequent thoughts put together are nothing worth.

In the situation of the first Reformers, and other founders of free Churches—without being acquainted with each other's opinions on the points of controversy, they could not in their perilous contest with the supporters of existing establishments, act in concert with each other, nor therefore with any tolerable prospect or chance of success: a confession of faith, or something equivalent, was therefore in their situation, generally speaking, necessary. In the composition of this bond of union, two errors are in the present instance visible. One is—instead of minimizing the number of points decided upon,—maximizing it, and thereby maximizing the field of probable disagreement: the other was—the omitting to give to the measure the declared character of a temporary one, subject to revision in happier times: in times calmed by security, and enlightened by a course of reflection and experience.

By the circumstance of the vastness of the body of doctrine,—coupled as it is with that of the immaturity of the age at which it was penned,—it seems not altogether easy to say whether the combined folly and immorality of the practice are increased or diminished. Supposing the mind to apply itself to the subject, they are surely increased: if in any respect they be diminished, it must be by the consideration of the palpable grossness and manifest impossibility of the belief thus professed to be entertained: the utter incredibility of any proposition, by which, in the universality expressed by it, the declaration should be seriously asserted to be sincere. It is on this ground, that, in the instance of the Church-of-England, the practice in question is vindicated, or rather apologized for, by Paley. "No man alive" ever could believe all this: therefore there is no harm in any man's solemnly and publicly declaring that he does believe it, every tittle of it:—such is the argument. But the apology, such as it is, what does it amount to?—what, but a declaration, that,—among these professors of piety and pure morality—of which if sincerity forms not a part, it seems difficult to say what other virtue does,—insincerity of the grossest kind is nothing less than universal: that, to the extent of this practice, the profession of piety has the practice of immorality for its universal accompaniment. And, from an imputation from which, otherwise than by the means above proposed, it is so impossible for them to free themselves, have they nothing to fear in the event of their continuing exposed to it?—What have they to fear from the casting it off? What have they not to fear from the continuing under the reproach of it? Instead of piety, will it not be by vice that they will thus stand distinguished from the Laity: that Laity, whom it is their profession to guard from vice?

and guides in religion, appointed by persons more likely to appoint unfit than fit ones.—In this case, why only in ap-

By this universality,—supposing it to have place,—true it is, that the comparative weakness and guilt, and thence the scandal, will be done away,—in the instance of this Church, as in the instance of all other Churches: but, by any such circumstances, or by any other, can such weakness and guilt, when absolutely considered, be truly said to be removed? And, to the founders of the institution—to them alone—not to any person by whom it is purposely kept up at present—does this extenuation, such as it is, apply itself.

To this sad disease of the intellectual as well as moral part of man's frame,—so simple and so gentle, yet so effectual, is the remedy which the nature of the case presents, that—considering that it applies not to the Established Church in question alone, but to every other Established Church—the mention of it must not, even in this place, be omitted. Preserving the self-same formulary,—viz. in the present instance, the confession of faith, containing the two Catechisms, the long and the short (so they are distinguished)—to the set of words expressive of belief, substitute a set of words expressive of a promise never to teach or to utter, in any place of public worship, any doctrine contrary to any thing therein contained. Not that, by an engagement to this effect taken in itself, any error, if any there be to be found in that vast body of abstruse doctrine, would thus be purged off. But,—for the correction of all such error, all other places—and in particular all printers' workshops—remaining open,—that, sooner or later, these weak parts, whatever they may be, would drop off by degrees,—is a prediction, the fulfilment of which seems as natural and probable as the hope of it is delightful. Thus,—by a cathartic, or rather an alterative, the mildness of which will surely not appear disputable,—the immorality, which is the only really foul spot in the case, would be carried off at once:—and whatever there may be of error, be made gradually and imperceptibly to evaporate.

By no acceptance given to an amendment to this effect, would any ac-pearance? Answer. Because that which is in appearance a complete appointment, is in reality nothing more than an initiative, controuled and capable of being defeated by a negative in other hands:—by an independent, apt, and efficient negative, actually controuled, and by all candidates, as well as by all Patrons, universally known to be so.*

knowledge of insincerity be made, any self-condemnation be passed, any humiliation be incurred. From every man,—if any such man there be now living, by whom, to every proposition without exception contained in the book in question the firmest assent is given,—might even the proposal to this effect come, as completely free from all inconsistency, as from any one, if any such there were, by whom not so much as one single proposition in it were believed. “These” (he might say) “from the first were, and now to the last continue to be, my own opinions. Of all who dissent from any of them, the opinions are consequently, in proportion to the degree of their distance from these of mine, in my eyes erroneous. But, what I know but too well is—that among persons, possessing means of right judgment not inferior to my own, for every one that agrees, there are many more that disagree with me. Under these circumstances, is it in the nature of the case, that of every one of the whole number of these persons, by whom all this vast assemblage of opinions is professed to be entertained,—persons, by every one of whom a comfortable subsistence for life, which otherwise he could not have had, is obtained—the belief applies to it with the same universality as my own?—If not, then, of the continuance of the obligation in question the effect is—to give birth—and to what good end?—to a perpetual course of insincerity:—of insincerity, and where?—in the bosoms of a class of men, in whose instance not only the practice, but the bare suspicion of that vice is more pernicious than in the instance of any other.”

What?—among so many, and those surely not ill-paid, professors of piety and the purest morality, shall there be no one who will be preserved by shame, from the reproach of leaving altogether to a layman the praise of standing forth the only advocate of sincerity in a Christian Church?

* To the English reader, the following sketch of the state of the Patronage in the Established Church of Scotland may be matter of curiosity, if not of use. It has been made out from one of the lists annually published in the Edinburgh Almanack. In it, the persons and classes of persons of different descriptions, in whose hands the patronage of the several pa-

In the above portraits,—drawn in miniature indeed, but from the life,—not to speak of Scotland, behold now on the parochial benefices appears to be vested, are as follows; the subjoined figures being expressive of the number of benefices possessed by them respectively; viz.

1. Individuals	590
2. The Crown	250
3. Individuals and the Crown alternately	30
4. The Town Councils of various Towns	41
5. The Parishioners at large	13
6. The University of St. Andrew's	7
7. The University of Glasgow	1
8. The University of St. Andrew's and an individual alternately	1
9. The University of St. Andrew's and the Crown alternately	1
10. The Town Council of Edinburgh (the Parishes being outlying) ...	3
11. The Town Council of Glasgow (the Parishes outlying)	1
12. The Directors (Quære, of what?)	2
13. The Heritors (Land-owners) of the respective Parishes	2
14. The Kirk Session (governing body, corresponding to the Vestry) of the Parish	1
15. In litigation	1
	944
Deduct Parishes	895
Add Churches styled Collegiate, each having two Ministers.	49
Total number of Parochial Benefices as above	944

1. The great difference turns upon the difference between the description of the persons by whom the examination is performed, and thereby that test of aptitude applied, without which admission into the order of men in question cannot take place. Under Excellent Church there is but one person to examine, and of that sole Judge the candidate himself has the choice, and at this trial no other person is ever present. See above, § 7. The test is therefore in this case but a sham. Under the Church of Scotland, the tribunal by which so important a species of judicature is exercised, is a many-seated one: the Presbytery of the Presbytery bound in which the benefice is situated; a many-seated and open judicatory, which while in one hand the picture of Excellent Church, on the other hand the picture of Schism:—the picture, in which are comprehended all those Churches, of which, in the declared opinion of the present Bishop of London, Dr. Howley, the members are, all of them, as such, in a state of constant “guilt.” Such excellence and such guilt—which then is most eligible?

some measure it sets the lead to, is at the same time checked and controlled by, the opinion of the people at large: the acts of this judicatory being moreover in this as in other cases subject to ulterior tribunals, one above another, viz. the Synod of the Synodical bound, and lastly, to the General Assembly; tribunals in every one of which a number of Laymen in considerable proportion have seats: and moreover,—in addition to the examination before the Presbytery,—service, consisting of a prayer and sermon, the sermon sometimes, the prayer constantly, pronounced either in the Parish Church before the congregation, or in the Presbytery room before the Presbytery, in an open audience. In this case then, that which in name and to a first appearance is an absolute choice,—is in effect, but an initiative, subjected to a negative: and that negative applied—not arbitrarily, but on a judicial inquiry, performed with the substance as well as the forms of judicature.

2. In one respect,—viz. that of security for intellectual aptitude, so far as depends upon appropriate learning,—this Established Church possesses, it is evident, an indisputable advantage over the generality even of Non-Established Churches. But if, generally speaking, in respect of this qualification,—which, after all, is but a collateral and not an effectual one,—the Clergy of the Scottish Established Church have the superiority over those of the English Non-Established Churches,—it is not in the nature of the case that, in the essential article of appropriate zeal, the superiority should not in general be on the other side. Of these the two qualifications, which is it that with reference to the great ends in view, is the most effectually conducive? A question this of no small importance in itself, but which, considering that under Excellent Church there is no tolerable security for either, belongs not to the present purpose.

§ 10. Facienda in the way of Reform.

Of the vices by which the system of Excellent Church has been found distinguished, such as presented themselves, twenty-five in number, as being on this occasion worth putting upon the list, have just been brought to view: by every one of these, so far from being subservient, it will have been seen to be rendered adverse to the joint interests of piety, morality, and economy: by every one of them, distinguished from the system common to all Protestant Non-Established Churches: by all of them but two, and those it is hoped not very difficultly removable, from that of the Established Church of Scotland.

Of the plan, a brief sketch of which here follows, the design is to shew how this same system may be most effectually purged of all those vices:—how that which is at present corruption may put on incorruption.

On this occasion, with joint aim,—to two antagonizing yet not irreconcilable objects—both of them leading and all-comprehensive objects—has the endeavour been all along directed.

Main or positive object.—To place the business of religious instruction and worship in England upon a footing as beneficial to the joint interests of piety, morality, and economy, as the nature of the case admits of.

Secondary or negative object.—In so doing, to produce as little disturbance as possible to established habits, expectations, and prepossessions.

Both these objects being steadily and constantly kept in view,—for guiding the pen in the pursuit of them, the following rules have presented themselves in the character of leading principles.

I. In regard to doctrine.

1. Respecting doctrine, let no change be attempted by the hand of government.

II. In regard to service.

2. In so far as in service doctrine is involved, no change: let the established fixt forms of discourse be preserved inviolate.

3. On the occasion of such change as the principle of preserving doctrine without change leaves liberty for making in regard to service,—let all established habits and prepossessions be conformed to, so far as is consistent with the essentials of the reforming change.

III. In regard to pay.

4. Service, in perfect conformity to the now established doctrine being continued on its present footing, let all pay,—over and above what is necessary to the securing the performance of that service according to the fixt forms,—be defalcated, and applied to the real exigencies of the State.

5. Let the change be so ordered, that all particular pecuniary interests existing at the time, whether in possession or fixt expectancy, shall rather be gainers than losers: and so in regard to powers and dignities.

IV. In regard to discipline.

6. The existing system of discipline having been shewn to be adverse rather than subservient to the three great interests in question, let it, as the existing functionaries drop off, drop off along with them:—and in the same gradual way let a system, characterized by the joint attributes of efficiency, simplicity, and frugality, take its place.

LEADING PROVISIONS OF THE PROPOSED REFORM.

I. In regard to DOCTRINE.

1. Abolition of all recorded Declarations of belief concerning Doctrine.

II. In regard to SERVICE and PAY.

II. 1. On death or removal of Incumbent, if there be no Curate, Parish Clerk to read, in addition to his own, the Minister's part of the Service; the proposed Homily Sermons included. (See § 4.) For the additional labour, length of time employed not being increased, let half as much of his present pay be allotted, out of the Poor's Rates.

III. 2. Power to Vestry to appoint for this form any other person as their choice, suppose a boy who has made himself perfect in reading in a parish school, but with no greater pay than that given to the Clerk.

IV. 3. The Clerk or other successor to the quondam Minister to be ordained or not ordained as to the constituted authorities shall seem meet. N. B. Already a sort of person called a Clerk in orders is not without example under the Church of England.

V. 4. Of the surplice fees, these being paid mostly by the lower classes, let the part added in each instance to the Clerk's fee be less than as above: instead of half as much, say one-fourth as much, or rather in lieu of both the Clerk's and Minister's fees, the smallest piece of coin being paid by the party or parties for making the entry in the Register, let the present amount of the Clerk's fee, with the above addition, be charged upon the Parish.

VI. 5. Instead of the Clerk, or substitute to the Clerk as above, Power to the Vestry to choose a Minister ordained upon the present footing. But, to the formation of his pay, none to contribute but those who choose to do so. —N. B. The Minister is at present (it is believed) chosen by the Vestry in some of the London Parishes: a Lecturer, i. e. an additional Preacher, certainly is.

VII. 6. In each Parish, reserving to the present

Church service the days and hours customarily employed therein, power to the Vestry to allow the use of the Church to any person or persons at pleasure for the purpose of divine worship, according to any form of the religion of Jesus.

VIII. 7. In the case of an Incumbent having a Curate, if it be in the situation of the Incumbent that a vacancy happens in the first instance, let the duty and pay of the Curate be continued to him so long as he continues Curate; the remainder of the pay of the Incumbent lapsing into the General Church Reform Fund, to be composed as hereinafter mentioned:—if it be in the situation of the Curate that the vacancy happens, then let the duty be performed by the Clerk or other person as above; the Incumbent retaining his share of the pay, and the Curate's lapsing into the Church-Reform fund.

IV. In regard to DISCIPLINE.

VIII. 1. On death or removal of a Bishop, power to the Crown to nominate (suppose) an Archdeacon of that or any other Diocese,—to execute, without seat in the Lords, all other powers, with the title of Vice-Bishop; and out of the profits out of the Church-Reform fund, a salary, commensurate to time and labour employed, without regard to dignity.

IX. 2. On a vacancy in the office of Vice-Bishop, power to the Crown to appoint a successor.

X. 3. On death or removal of an Archbishop, power to the Crown to nominate either a Bishop or an Archdeacon,—to exercise, without seat in the House of Lords, all other powers, with a salary, on the same principles as above.

XI. 4. As Incumbents and Curates die off, let Vice-Bishops' sees be consolidated.

V. In regard to the CHURCH-REFORM FUND, and the masses of Pay of which it is to be composed.

1. Lands how to be disposed of.

XII. 1. On the death or removal of an Archbishop or Bishop, let the lands and houses belonging to the Province or See be taken possession of by the Escheator,* to be sold by auction: the produce to go to the Church-Reform fund. Till sale, profits to be paid into the existing Augmentation Offices. No lot to be knocked down at a price below what will be sufficient at the time to purchase a government annuity equal to the then existing annual value.

XIII. 2. So, on death or removal of any Dean, Canon, Prebendary, Precentor, or any other such Sinecurist, holding in severalty.

XIV. 3. Power to any existing Archbishop, Bishop, or Sinecurist, to join in the sale of the immovable property, or any part of it, and in lieu of the present income, to accept for life the government annuity purchased with the produce of the sale. N.B. In this way very considerable additions to existing income would in many instances be to be made.

XV. 4. In a Chapter holding its possessions jointly,—on death or removal of any member, let his share be paid in as above to the Augmentation Offices.

XVI. 5. Power to majority of the Chapter to join in sale as above, and convert the whole property into government annuities as above.

XVII. 6. So in regard to Fellows, of University and other Colleges.

* (Escheator.) For this purpose the office might need be revived.

XVIII. 7. Adequate compensation to Scholars entitled to succeed to Fellowships; and to Scholars in endowed Schools entitled to succeed to Scholarships and Fellowships in Universities.

XIX. 8. On death or removal of Incumbent having no Curate, like provision in regard to Glebe belonging to Livings.

XX. 9. On death or removal of Incumbent having glebe and Curate, let the pay of the Curate be continued to him, till his death or removal, in the form of a government annuity, without expense; together with the Parsonage, if occupied or let by him.

II. Pecuniary dues, how to be disposed of.

XXI. 10. On death or removal, as above, let Easter-Offerings cease.

XXII. 11. Other pecuniary dues, not saleable,—or if saleable, till sale,—let them be paid into the Augmentation Office, as above.

III. Tythes in Kind, how to be disposed of.

XXIII. 12.—1. On death, or removal of Incumbent, let all tythes in kind cease. In lieu of them let an assessment be made, payable, by the occupant, in the manner of the Land-Tax. The assessment to be made as in the case of the present Assessed Taxes: in case of alleged excess, power to Occupant, Landlord, intermediate Lessee, or other person interested, to appeal to a Jury sitting at the Quarter Sessions. Against overcharge, viz. by alteration in the value of money, or value of the land in question and its produce,—provision by re-assessments periodical or occasional: but, in no case any increase to be given to this commutation-tax, on the score of any increase in the value of the produce.

XXIV. 13. Where the patronage is in the hands of an individual or individuals,—on sale of glebe or pecuniary dues, let a proportionable part of the purchase-money be given to the Patron, in compensation for the Advowson : so in the case of tythes in kind, a government annuity, equal in value to his share of the purchase-money, which the annual produce of the above-mentioned commutation-tax would fetch, if sold in the manner of the Land-Tax.

XXV. 14. Where the patronage is in the hands of the Crown, let no such allowance be made to the Patron. By this means that vast mass of the matter of wealth, operating in the hands of the Chancellor, in the shape of matter of corruption, would be sunk, and the Constitution relieved from the pressure of it.

XXVI. 15. With a view to compensation on this score,—the several cases, in which the patronage is in the hands of corporate bodies of different descriptions,—to be considered ; and, according to the nature of each body, compensation allowed or refused.

XXVII. 16. To a Patron,—having, at the passing of the Act, a son of not less than—say fourteen years of age, whom he was breeding up for the Church, for the purpose of his being presented to the benefice,—on oath made to this effect, on the sale of the several elementary parts of the value of the living, as above, let extra compensation be made.

XXVIII. 17. After death or removal of an Incumbent,—let no tythes in kind, not at that time received or claimed, be at any time claimed on behalf of the Church Reform fund.

XXIX. 18. Where, instead of being in fee-simple, the whole in one hand,—the value of the Advowson is, in any way, by will, settlement, or otherwise divided amongst divers persons interested,—let division be made of the compensation money accordingly.

XXX. 19. To augment the reward for real service, and, at the same time, save University Colleges from dilapidation and University Towns from desolation,—in regard to a certain proportion of the Fellowships in each College, power to the Crown, on the death of a Fellow,—instead of causing his share to be received at the Augmentation Office,—to nominate to the vacant situation a wounded or superannuated officer in the sea or land service:—the officer giving up his half-pay and every other allowance.*

XXXI. 20. On the death or removal of any Scholar on the foundation, power to the College, and in their default, to the Crown, to allow to any such land or sea officer, without his giving up his half-pay or other allowance, the gratuitous use of the chamber so become vacant.†

* Within the memory of man, not only have Fellowships and Scholarships been added to existing University Colleges, but new University Colleges founded. How blind the imitation! how deplorable the infatuation! as if Protestant monks were of any more use than Popish ones. Learning, indeed? Has learning been the object? For ages no need has there been of the supposed purchased learning: from first to last, never has there been any security for it.

† To the Church—in every honest sense of the word Church—not to speak of any such meritorious public servants as above—by giving to any other person whatever any one of the Church Sinecures, original or factitious (that would not be given in augmentation of insufficient pay to an officiating parish priest), would any injury or detriment be done?—To religious instruction the defender of the country has not contributed any thing:—true; but as little has the idler, so inappositely styled reverend.—By the defender of the country as such, no dishonour has been cast upon the clerical profession: upon the Church, or that sense of the word Church. But by the Reverend Sinecurists, dishonour has been cast upon the Church:—if to any body of men it be

For illustration of the applications proposed to be made of the above-mentioned leading principles, the above-mentioned proposed leading provisions will, it is hoped, be found to suffice.

Ireland! Ireland!—He that has the courage, let him apply all this to the case of Ireland.

Spoliation of the Church!—Plunder of the Church!—Subversion of the Church!—Destruction of the Church!—Oh horrible!

Spoliation, plunder, subversion, destruction, of a fictitious entity!—Well, all fictitious entities that ever were figured, suppose them despoiled, plundered, subverted, destroyed at one stroke: where would be the objection, so long as no real entity of the class of existing persons were found, that would be the worse. Of these individuals what one is there that would in any way be the worse for it? To persons in possession—to persons having right in expectancy—the option of either retaining simply what they have, or adding to it—such throughout, as to them, would be the effect of it.

a dishonour to have among them—and in the scale of opulence even at the head of them—a set of depredators, obtainers of money on false pretences. A Clergyman, who is never to officiate any where, he surely is the last man by whom any mass of pay so deserved should be obtainable. Where a Curate is kept, the pay of the benefice is divided between the Curate and the Incumbent: between the Curate who does every thing, and the Incumbent who does nothing. In this case, according to the ceremonial of Excellent Church, it is necessary that, by every person who officiates, the ceremony called taking Orders shall be performed. Be it so: but the one who never does officiate, to what use should he take Orders: to what effect can he, but to disgrace them? As matters stand at present, where would be the mischief done to any body or any thing, if every Patron of a living were allowed to put into his own pocket the Incumbent's share, with power of appointing the Curate, so long as he conforms to the obligations imposed by law on a Reverend Incumbent, who, in this same way, turns over his duty to a Curate?

On whom then does the loss by the spoliation fall? Upon those persons who, but for the change in question, would, to obtain this or that share of the money, have passed themselves off for receivers of the Holy Ghost. Deplore their fate?—deplore then along with it the fate of the hapless innocents, who, had a certain man intermarried with a certain woman, would have come into existence.

Remain as the only description of persons who would be real sufferers from the change,—those Clergymen, in whose bosoms, at the commencement of it, or at the time of the first authoritative proposal of it, any special hope of preferment, over and above what they were in possession or fixed expectation of, should have already taken root. Being indisputably real,—and this independently of the existence of merit in any shape in company with it,—to every feeling mind which contemplates it, the eventual mass of suffering thus circumstanced, cannot but be matter of well-grounded regret. By no such mind will this part of the subject be contemplated with any such apathy, as that which was manifested by Saint Perceval and his still living and flourishing Executor, who,—to find money to put into the pockets of unexpecting Curates, being bent upon stripping Incumbents, some of them of nearly half their income,—went to work upon them, upon the true Procrustes plan, plane in hand, as if they had been so many deal-boards.

But, how truly soever matter of regret,—compared with the evil put an end to and the positive good produced,—in whose eyes, unless it be those of the sufferers themselves and their immediate connexions,—by what, even the most feeling and scrupulous mind, can any mass of evil of this description be, with any propriety, regarded as constituting matter of objection?—By the signature of peace,—in an infinite variety of shapes, an incomparable greater body of expectation is always defeated, and suffering of the same kind created, than would be by the here-proposed change: yet, that, for the exclusion of this suffering, war ought to be carried on for everlasting—is surely more than ever expressed itself in the form of a serious proposition,—how numerous soever may have been the breasts by which the correspondent wish has been entertained.

Alas! it is not hope of future increase to present opulence, but even all tolerable assurance of present subsistence, that, by the late change, though it be from war to peace,—the products of peace having been anticipated and consumed in unjust war,—has been torn out of human bosoms in such countless multitudes!

Yet true it is, that of this concluding plan, death of Excellent Church has from the very first been the acknowledged object. Death?—Yes: but of what part belonging to her? Her Doctrine?—No: that is left by it untouched: left to all those by whom it is approved:—left to them to make the most of it.—Her Service?—No: that is left to her not only untouched but better secured than ever: the performance of it secured with a degree of uniform regularity never hitherto exemplified. Her Doctrine? Once more, no: that is embodied in her Service: and, her service remaining untouched, her doctrine—so much as is embodied in her service—is left untouched along with it. What is not embodied in the service is contained in her Articles. These Articles then, if it be any satisfaction to her votaries, let them be added to the Service, and any number of times, in the year or the day, read as part of it: subscribed at those same times, or at any other times, by as many as please, though not by any who do not please: subscribed, but neither from hope of gain for doing so, nor from fear of loss or suffering for not doing so:

subscribed,—and command by authority being obtained,—(and would it be refused?) made poetry by the Poet Laureat, set to music by the reverend and fortunate performer on the violincello, or any more accomplished and successful votary of St. Cecilia, if any such be to be found: sublimed into poetry, sanctified by sacred music, and in this attire added to the royal psalms.

If neither over her service, nor over her doctrine, would the proposed death have dominion, over what part then?—What part? What but that which, from first to last, has by all doctors been considered as her vital part, even that part in her which is of gold. Of gold, according to the most authentic accounts, was one of the thighs of the philosopher Pythagoras: of the same precious matter is the heart of Excellent Church. In the Royal Navy,

“Hearts of oak are our ships, hearts of oak are our men;”

according to one of the most popular of our Tyrtæus's: not less incontestably of gold is the heart of Excellent Church. Worshipped as she is,—for what else is it that she is ever worshipped, by those whose “understandings and wills lie prostrate” at her feet?—Pass by a couple of men of the labouring class in conversation,—note the words for half a minute,—beer is sure to be one of them:—that which beer is to those real labourers in the vineyard of industry, benefice is to these pretended labourers in the vineyard of the Lord on the seventh. Sit down in a company of Church-of-England Clergymen, or in any company where there are two such Clergymen: what are then and there the topics?—Belong they to religion?—to morality?—to literature?—No. One you may be assured of, and that the one which calls forth the most universal and lively interest:—that on which neither tongues nor ears can ever tire:—the value of this and that one of those good things which are called livings, and of those still better things which are above livings :—those good things for which the appearance of something is by somebody to be done, and those still better things for which not even that is by any body to be done.

The life then of this Excellent person being in her gold, —taking away her gold, you take away her life : her life you divest her of, and instead of it put on death : here then is Thanasia. But that death is a most easy one : an easier one was never imagined in Sybaris. Here then is Euthanasia. No spasm : no convulsion : a death which no man will feel :—a death for which all men will be the better, and scarce a man the worse.

Yes :—this will indeed be,—if any one there ever was (in the gravest and most important sense), a death unto sin : yea, and at the same instant a new life unto righteousness.

Of the money, which upon this plan would by degrees find its way into the proposed fund,—the quantity applicable to the exigencies of the public—the benefit which accordingly would thus be produced in the shape of economy—would not be inconsiderable.

But in this case even that benefit is but a secondary one. In regard to religious doctrine and instruction, no immediate or certain change, it is true, would (it has been seen) be—because, consistently with liberty and sincerity, no such change could be made by it. But the great mischief of which the system is the perennial source—the mischief done by it to morality and good government—would be cleared away : to morality, by the perpetual dominion which has been exercised by the above-mentioned confederacy of vices : to good government, by the support, which, through the medium of corrupt and corruptive influence, has been seen given to despotism.

Of the produce of the fund thus created, the most obvious application is the transfer of it to the Sinking Fund. But to this it would be but as a drop to the ocean: and of no such addition can any expectation have ever been entertained by the public creditors.

For public instruction at large, other funds there are, and those amply sufficient,—if of the masses absorbed by the speculation of trustees, and of those misapplied by the ignorance of former ages, a proper application be now made to that use. To the Education-Committee of the House of Commons, honest and intelligent men look on this occasion with wistful, yet—considering on whom every thing ultimately depends—little expecting eyes.

Relief from taxes—this is the application which, in the state to which the country has been reduced, presents a claim superior to every other.

From taxes? Good. But from what taxes? From those of which, while the apparent mischief is greatest, the real mischief is least?—From a tax on intoxicating liquors, for example?—No: but from those taxes which are in the contrary case:—of which the prohibitory effect operates on those benefits, the value of which is at the same time greatest in reality, and, by contingency or remoteness, rendered least obvious, or least acutely sensible, to unscrutinizing eyes: taxes prohibitive of health, justice, communication: communication for supply of commercial wants—communication, for supply to the most crying of all wants—remedy against misrule.

Under what tax will men be least impatient? this has been the question—this the only question—with the man of finance. Under what tax will men's sufferings be least?—under what greatest? This (says he to himself) is their concern, not mine. Thus it is that the activity of power has taken its direction from the undisguised object of its contempt—the impatience of ignorance. “Ignorant impa- tience of taxation!" as if, supposing in their breasts the least spark of feeling for a nation's misery, the ignorance of those by whom, could ever have been exceeded by the ignorance of those on whom the taxes have been imposed!

By a supply such as that here in question—a supply which, how moderate soever it may prove, would come from a quarter to which official expectation can scarcely have ever directed itself—is presented one of those rare occasions, on which, on the field of taxation, it is possible for inveterate error to receive any considerable remedy. But on this, as on every other quarter of the field of political abuse, where?—where, alas! are the hands, to which remedy can be looked for with any ray of hope?

vious application is the transfer of it to the Sinking Fund. But to this it would be but as a drop to the ocean: and of no such addition can any expectation have ever been entertained by the public creditors.

For public instruction at large, other funds there are, and those amply sufficient,—if of the masses absorbed by the speculation of trustees, and of those misapplied by the ignorance of former ages, a proper application be now made to that use. To the Education-Committee of the House of Commons, honest and intelligent men look on this occasion with wistful, yet—considering on whom every thing ultimately depends—little expecting eyes.

Relief from taxes—this is the application which, in the state to which the country has been reduced, presents a claim superior to every other.

From taxes? Good. But from what taxes? From those of which, while the apparent mischief is greatest, the real mischief is least?—From a tax on intoxicating liquors, for example?—No: but from those taxes which are in the contrary case:—of which the prohibitory effect operates on those benefits, the value of which is at the same time greatest in reality, and, by contingency or remoteness, rendered least obvious, or least acutely sensible, to unscrutinizing eyes: taxes prohibitive of health, justice, communication: communication for supply of commercial wants—communication, for supply to the most crying of all wants—remedy against misrule.

Under what tax will men be least impatient? this has been the question—this the only question—with the man of finance. Under what tax will men's sufferings be least?—under what greatest? This (says he to himself) is their concern, not mine. Thus it is that the activity of power has taken its direction from the undisguised object of its contempt—the impatience of ignorance. “Ignorant impa- tience of taxation!" as if, supposing in their breasts the least spark of feeling for a nation's misery, the ignorance of those by whom, could ever have been exceeded by the ignorance of those on whom the taxes have been imposed!

By a supply such as that here in question—a supply which, how moderate soever it may prove, would come from a quarter to which official expectation can scarcely have ever directed itself—is presented one of those rare occasions, on which, on the field of taxation, it is possible for inveterate error to receive any considerable remedy. But on this, as on every other quarter of the field of political abuse, where?—where, alas! are the hands, to which remedy can be looked for with any ray of hope?

APPENDIX, No. V.

RECENT MEASURES OF PRETENDED REFORM OR IMPROVEMENT—THEIR INUTILITY AND MISCHIEVOUSNESS.

INTRODUCTION.

IN the last section but one of the preceding number of this Appendix, has been presented to the consideration of the sincere Reader an exposure of the Vices under which the system of Excellent Church was regarded as labouring.

In the last section, a compressed sketch of those arrangements, which have presented themselves in the character of remedies: the most conducive to the great ends in view of any that could be found.

Meantime, by the hand of power, the existence of imperfection, in some shape and degree, having been recognized,—in the character of a system of remedies to such acknowledged imperfections, or, to speak authentically, “a system of measures for strengthening the establishment of the Church of England:” (Speech of the Earl of Harrowby, p. 1.) a set of arrangements of a widely different nature have been devised: arrangements, some of which have already been carried into effect; while others (as hath been seen, p. 266) have in general terms been announced as being still in preparation: a storm, which, having long been brewing, is, or at least has been, on the point of bursting upon our heads.

A standard of reference and comparison—a standard,—by reference to which may be ascertained, in the first place, what, in a system directed, or professed to be directed, to the proper ends, wears the character of vice or other imperfection,—in the next place, what arrangements promise to be best adapted to the removal of these imperfections,—having been, as above,—established,—thus it is that, supposing that standard to be what it aims at being, what remains to be performed, of the task of applying to it the several authoritative arrangements in question, need not occupy much ulterior space.

Of the government plan, begun upon by the political Saints about twenty years ago, and still pursuing,—the leading measures, will, it is believed, be found all of them referable to one or more of the seven heads following, viz.

1. Increasing, on pretence of diminishing, the number of Non-Resident Incumbents.

2. Increasing the number of Resident Curates.

3. To that end, out of the pockets of Incumbents and Patrons, taking money, and forcing it into the pockets of Curates.

4. For increasing the value of English Livings, exacting from the population of the three kingdoms the annual sum of 100,000*l*.

5. Regulating the occupations of agriculture, in the case of a Parish or other Priest.

6. Over Incumbents and Curates lodging DESPOTIC power in the hands of Bishops.

7. Announced, and remaining to be executed. From Christians and others, of all persuasions, money to be exacted sufficient to render the number of Church-of-

England Churches “commensurate to the whole population.”

The following are the statutes by which the above-mentioned objects have, with the exception of the one last-mentioned, been pursued :—

1. The Statute, 36 G. III. c. 83, 14th May, 1796, intituled “An Act for the further support and maintenance of Curates within the Church of England; and for making certain Regulations respecting the appointment of such Curates, and the admission of persons to Cures augmented by Queen Anne’s Bounty, with respect to the avoidance of other benefices.”—Call it for shortness the Act of 1796; or, the first Curates’ Act; or, Curate-pampering Act.

2. The Statute, 43 G. III. c. 84, 7th July, 1803, intituled, “An Act to amend the Laws relating to Spiritual Persons holding of Farms; and for enforcing the Residence of Spiritual Persons on their Benefices, in England.”—Call it for shortness the Act of 1803; or, if its title to the appellative should be found to have been made good, the first sham Residence enforcing Act; or, the first Non-Residence promoting Act.

3. The Statute, 53 G. III. c. 149, 20th July, 1813, intituled, “An Act for the farther support and maintenance of Stipendiary Curates.”—Call it for shortness the Act of 1813; or, the second Curates’ Act; or, Curate-pampering Act.

4. The Statute, 54 G. III. c. 175, 30th July, 1814, intituled, “An Act to explain and amend several Acts relating to Spiritual Persons holding of Farms; and for enforcing the Residence of such Persons on their benefices, in England, for one year, and from thence until six weeks after the meeting of the then next Session of Parliament.”—Call it for shortness the Act of 1814; or, with the proviso above-mentioned, the second sham Residence enforcing Act; or, the second Non-Residence promoting Act.

5. By Statute, 56 G. III. c. 6, 22d March, 1816, the last-mentioned Act is continued, without amendment, until the 5th July, 1816.

6. And, by Statute, 56 G. III. c. 123, 1st July, 1816, to 5th April, 1817.

Follows now, under the above heads, a small part of the multitude of observations which have been suggested by the provisions made in relation to them.

§ 1.—I. Giving Increase to the Number of Non-Resident Incumbents.

Of the additions which thus recently, under the head of Licenses, have, by the Act, 1803, 43 G. III. c. 84, being “An Act to amend, &c. and for enforcing the Residence of “Spiritual Persons on their benefices,” been in that shape openly made to the multitude of Non-Residents, and thereby of Sinecurists,—evidence stands already on the face of the official abstracts, as herein reprinted in Section 7 of No. IV. of this Appendix, p. 320. Of the additions which, to an unlimited amount (for the augmentation of Church-of-England decency), have altogether, without warrant, been made to the same goodly fellowship of the eaters of the bread of idleness,—viz. by the so studiously organized, so carefully nursed, and so religiously pursued system of Episcopal connivance,—some account may already have been seen in the 7th and 8th sections of that same number. Nor yet is this the whole, or so much as the most prominent part, of that which, in this same Act, self-styled an Act for enforcing Residence, has been done for the increase and establishment of Non-Residence. In a still more straight, direct, and open manner, as well as in a, beyond comparison, more commodious shape than through the medium of a License,—(an indulgence refusable, and not to be granted but upon conditions),—has the same accommodation been afforded and extended, by additions made to the original stock of Exemptions, as established by Henry the Eighth. That, after having done all this for the swelling of the account of Non-Residence, a set of men, or so much as a single man, should, in any situation, be found so intoxicated with uncontroled power, as to conclude with affixing to the Act by which it is done the title of an “Act for enforcing Residence,” presents itself as a matter of fact in its own nature so difficultly credible, that, for the satisfying the Reader that the case is really so, a simple reference presented itself as hardly sufficient. Lest misconception or misrepresentation should be suspected, the following Note gives a reprint of the section (43 G. III. c. 84. § 15.), from which the copy, made by Henry of this part of the Popish system of indulgences, has, in these times of No-Popery! received its enlargement.*

* The numeral figures here inserted are not in the Act: they are inserted for distinction sake, and for relief to the Reader's eye in its travels through the labyrinth:—the break by which the first figure is preceded, makes the distinction between the old matter and the new.

“ §. 15. And be it further enacted, That no spiritual person having, or “ holding any office, in such manner as the same under any of the provi“ sions of the said first recited Act, or of an Act, passed in the twenty-fifth “ year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled, An Act that every “ Judge of the High Courts may have one Chaplain beneficed with Cure;
 “ or of another Act, passed in the twenty-eighth year of the reign of “ King Henry the Eighth, intituled, The Bill for Non-Residence of Spi“ ritual Men and their Benefices; or of another Act, passed in the thirty-“ third year of the reign of King Henry the Eighth, intituled, An Act for “ the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and others to have Chaplains; “ would exempt such spiritual persons from Residence, or from the penal-

§ 2.—II. Increasing the Number of Resident Curates.

III. To that end, out of the pockets of Incumbents and Patrons, taking money, and forcing it into the pockets of Curates.

“ ties and forfeitures in the said Acts contained for Non-Residence;—
 “ 1. Or actually serving as a Chaplain of the House of Commons;—2. Or
 “ as Clerk of his Majesty’s Closet;—3. Or as a Deputy Clerk thereof, dur“ ing the time of their respective attendance;—4. Or as a Chaplain-Gene“ ral of his Majesty’s Forces;—5. Or Brigade-Chaplain on foreign ser“ vice;—6. Or Chaplain on Board any of his Majesty’s Ships;—7. Or of “ his Majesty’s Dock-Yards;—8. Or in any of his Majesty’s Garrisons;— “ 9. Or Chaplain of his Majesty’s Corps of Artillery, during the times of “ attending the duties of such offices respectively;—10. Or as a Chaplain “ to any British Factory;—11. Or in the Household of any British Amba“ sador, or public Minister residing abroad, during the time of his actually “ residing in such Factory or Household, and performing there, at all due “ times and seasons, the duties of such his office;—12. Or as Chancellor,
 “ or Vicar-general, or, in his absence, the principal Surrogate or Official “ in any Ecclesiastical Court of any Diocese, whilst they are residing “ in the places where their respective offices are exercised;—13. Or as “ Minor Canon, or Vicar Choral, or Priest Vicar, or any such other pub“ lic officer in any Cathedral or Collegiate Church, during the times for “ which they may be required by the Canons, or local Statutes thereof, to “ reside at such Cathedral or Collegiate Church, and actually reside and “ perform duty at the same;—14. Or as Deans, Sub-Deans, Priests, or “ Readers, in his Majesty’s Royal Chapels, at St. James’s and Whitehall;—
 “ 15. Or as Reader in his Majesty’s private Chapel, at Windsor or else“ where;—16. Or as Chaplain at the Royal Military Asylum, at Chelsea, “ or Royal Military College, at High Wycombe, or Teacher at the Royal “ Military Academy, at Woolwich;—17. Or Chaplains at the Royal Hos“ pitals, at Greenwich and Chelsea;—18. Or as Chaplains to the Royal “ Hospitals for Seamen, at Haslar and Plymouth, whilst they shall respec“ tively reside and perform the duties of their respective offices;—19. Or “ as a Preacher or Reader in any of the Inns of Court, or at the Rolls;—
 “ 20. Or as Bursar, Dean, Vice-President, or public Tutor, or Chaplain, “ or other such public officer, in any College or Hall, in either of the Uni“ versities of Oxford or Cambridge, during the period for which he may

For this part of the system, the person to whom Excellent Church is principally indebted is, as already observed,

“ respectively be required, by reason of any such office, to perform the “ duties of any such office, and actually shall perform the duties of the “ same ;—21. Or as Public Librarian, or Public Registrar, or Proctor, or “ Public Orator, or other such public officer, in either of the said Universities
 “ during the period for which he may respectively be required, by reason “ thereof to perform the duties of any such office, and actually shall per“ form the duties of the same ;—22. Or as Fellow of any College in either
 “ of the Universities, or of Eton or Winchester College, during the time
 “ for which he may be required to reside by any Charter or Statute, and ac“ tually resides therein ;—23. Or as Warden or Provost of Eton or Win“ chester College, during the time for which they may be respectively re“ quired, to reside, or shall actually reside therein ;—24. Or as Schoolmaster
 “ or Usher in the same, or as Schoolmaster or Usher of Westminster
 “ School ;—shall be liable to any of the Pains, Penalties, or Forfeitures,
 “ in the said first recited Act, or this Act contained, for or on account of “ any Non-Residence on any Dignity, Prebend, Benefice, Donative, or “ Perpetual Curacy, any thing in the said Act, or this Act, contained to
 “ the contrary notwithstanding.”

Note well the estimation in which salvation of souls is held by the penners of this clause. With the exception of a small part—a part which, till of late, was, if not still is, as small as a man could be had to serve for—the pay allotted for the salvation of souls is stripped off from the labour, and given to every Incumbent who is fortunate enough to obtain any one article in the above-mentioned enormous list of preferments. This detachable mass of pay, is it needless to the purpose of salvation? Then why leave it attached?—Is it needful?—Then with what colour or decency, other than
 Church-of-England decency, presume to attach it?

Included, in no small proportion, in this list of preferments are a set of complete Sinecures. Here then, on no other ground—for no other merit—than the good fortune of his having, by the necessary breach of probity, obtained one Sinecure,—so it is, that, from an office of matchless importance and supposed laboriousness, a man is suffered to strip off the greater part of the pay, allotted to it under the notion at least of its being necessary: to strip off as great a part of its pay as possible,—and out of it, for his own benefit, to carve another Sinecure.

Take the converse of this case. Of the whole number of benefices with cure of souls, in the instance of the greater part, the quantity of pay attached to the office is declared to be insufficient. Well then, was ever any

p. 255, the Earl of Harrowby. For the principal provisions, see in the second Curates' Act—the Act of 1813;—for the reasons on which they were grounded, see his Lordship's Speech.

On an occasion such as this, salvation of souls being, of course, in every body's mind—if not in truth, at any rate in profession, the ultimate end in view,—in the character of intermediate ends, two objects, in themselves altogether distinct, appear to have engaged, in close conjunction, more or less of his Lordship's attention : viz. 1. On the part of the class of official persons in question, viz. Curates, securing appropriate official aptitude. 2. In default of habitual Residence on the part of the Incumbent, such proposition made, as that of taking any one of these useless offices, and, in a permanent way, attaching the whole, or any part of the pay of it, to any one of these supposed insufficiently paid soul-saving and laborious offices? Never, never—who is there that would have endured it? This would be robbing Excellent Church, stripping her of her jewels—stripping her of every thing to which she owes her Excellence?—Oh no : where addition to pay is to be made, it must be—not by subtraction from Sinecures, but by addition to the taxes.

As to persons already in possession—under the thus existing system of almost universal delinquency, to have bestowed upon them the most perfect indemnity—to have continued to them by law a possession obtained by breach of law—yes : all this might and would have been well : in all this there would have been nothing but what might have been justified by the uti possidetis principle (See App. No. IV. § 2, p. 198). But in an Act, calling itself An Act for enforcing Residence, thus wantonly to go to work, and heap together, in addition to the one originally and so unwarrantably established by Henry the Eighth, a still more enormous mass of Non-Residence,—... once more, what assurance! Not only are probity and sincerity thus violated, but consistency. If giving despotic power over the rest of the Clergy to Bishops be a right thing,—as in the case of the other batch of indulgences, established in the shape of Licenses, it is assumed to be,—why not in these cases likewise give to good discipline the same supposed security?—why not subject this tribe of Incumbents, as well as the other, to the same supposed salutary yoke?

For this part of the system, the person to whom Excellent Church is principally indebted is, as already observed,

“ respectively be required, by reason of any such office, to perform the “ duties of any such office, and actually shall perform the duties of the “ same ;—21. Or as Public Librarian, or Public Registrar, or Proctor, or “ Public Orator, or other such public officer, in either of the said Universities
 “ during the period for which he may respectively be required, by reason “ thereof to perform the duties of any such office, and actually shall per“ form the duties of the same ;—22. Or as Fellow of any College in either
 “ of the Universities, or of Eton or Winchester College, during the time
 “ for which he may be required to reside by any Charter or Statute, and ac“ tually resides therein ;—23. Or as Warden or Provost of Eton or Win“ chester College, during the time for which they may be respectively re“ quired, to reside, or shall actually reside therein ;—24. Or as Schoolmaster
 “ or Usher in the same, or as Schoolmaster or Usher of Westminster
 “ School ;—shall be liable to any of the Pains, Penalties, or Forfeitures,
 “ in the said first recited Act, or this Act contained, for or on account of “ any Non-Residence on any Dignity, Prebend, Benefice, Donative, or “ Perpetual Curacy, any thing in the said Act, or this Act, contained to
 “ the contrary notwithstanding.”

Note well the estimation in which salvation of souls is held by the penners of this clause. With the exception of a small part—a part which, till of late, was, if not still is, as small as a man could be had to serve for—the pay allotted for the salvation of souls is stripped off from the labour, and given to every Incumbent who is fortunate enough to obtain any one article in the above-mentioned enormous list of preferments. This detachable mass of pay, is it needless to the purpose of salvation? Then why leave it attached?—Is it needful?—Then with what colour or decency, other than
Church-of-England decency, presume to attach it?

Included, in no small proportion, in this list of preferments are a set of complete Sinecures. Here then, on no other ground—for no other merit—than the good fortune of his having, by the necessary breach of probity, obtained one Sinecure,—so it is, that, from an office of matchless importance and supposed laboriousness, a man is suffered to strip off the greater part of the pay, allotted to it under the notion at least of its being necessary : to strip off as great a part of its pay as possible,—and out of it, for his own benefit, to carve another Sinecure.

Take the converse of this case. Of the whole number of benefices with cure of souls, in the instance of the greater part, the quantity of pay attached to the office is declared to be insufficient. Well then, was ever any

p. 255, the Earl of Harrowby. For the principal provisions, see in the second Curates' Act—the Act of 1813;—for the reasons on which they were grounded, see his Lordship's Speech.

On an occasion such as this, salvation of souls being, of course, in every body's mind—if not in truth, at any rate in profession, the ultimate end in view,—in the character of intermediate ends, two objects, in themselves altogether distinct, appear to have engaged, in close conjunction, more or less of his Lordship's attention : viz. 1. On the part of the class of official persons in question, viz. Curates, securing appropriate official aptitude. 2. In default of habitual Residence on the part of the Incumbent, such proposition made, as that of taking any one of these useless offices, and, in a permanent way, attaching the whole, or any part of the pay of it, to any one of these supposed insufficiently paid soul-saving and laborious offices? Never, never—who is there that would have endured it? This would be robbing Excellent Church, stripping her of her jewels—stripping her of every thing to which she owes her Excellence?—Oh no : where addition to pay is to be made, it must be—not by subtraction from Sinecures, but by addition to the taxes.

As to persons already in possession—under the thus existing system of almost universal delinquency, to have bestowed upon them the most perfect indemnity—to have continued to them by law a possession obtained by breach of law—yes : all this might and would have been well : in all this there would have been nothing but what might have been justified by the uti possidetis principle (See App. No. IV. § 2, p. 198). But in an Act, calling itself An Act for enforcing Residence, thus wantonly to go to work, and heap together, in addition to the one originally and so unwarrantably established by Henry the Eighth, a still more enormous mass of Non-Residence,—... once more, what assurance! Not only are probity and sincerity thus violated, but consistency. If giving despotic power over the rest of the Clergy to Bishops be a right thing,—as in the case of the other batch of indulgences, established in the shape of Licenses, it is assumed to be,—why not in these cases likewise give to good discipline the same supposed security?—why not subject this tribe of Incumbents, as well as the other, to the same supposed salutary yoke?

—securing, in as many instances as may be, the performance of that article of ecclesiastical duty on the part of the Curate.

In regard to official aptitude, though in this as in other cases, it is not itself exactly the same thing as money,—yet, as hath been shewn already (App. No. IV. § 4. Pay),—according to his Lordship's theory, expounded by this his Lordship's practice, the degree of this aptitude being exactly as the quantity of money,—thus it is that, by seeing what he has done for securing the money, we shall see what he has done, and the whole of what he has either done or endeavoured to do, for securing the aptitude.

3. First then, in regard to the money: and thereupon as to the fund out of which it is to come. The pockets, those into which it is to come, being the pockets of Cu-rates, those out of which it is to come are the pockets of Incumbents:—that is to say, of the future race: (for, as to the existing stock, much against the bent of his Lordship's stoicism, by some of his own friends (p. 18) they have been saved from his Lordship's gripe :) meantime, on the death or removal of each existing Incumbent, out of the pocket of the existing Patron, if then he be in existence:—for thereupon down falls the value of the Advowson, in a scale ending at 0, or somewhere thereabouts.

Without the aid of this, his Lordship's liberality,—money was all along finding its way, and would have continued to find its way, from the one pocket into the other: call this the free amount:—the money which his Lordship provides is therefore not the whole amount in each instance paid and received, but the difference between the free amount and the whole amount: call it the forced addition.

Next as to the quantum of the whole amount.* In the first place comes a lowest minimum : the least sum that, under the name of Curates' salary, is to be paid and received in any circumstances. This is 80*l.* a year : and, as in the instance of this lowest, so in the instance of each hereinafter mentioned minimum, the whole profit of the living, if it be less than the minimum, goes out of the pocket of the Incumbent into that of the Curate instead of it.

* In the account of this profit are surplice fees to be comprized? No answer in the Act. Charming nest for doubts! Is it not, Lord Endless?

Above this comes a series of minimums, rising one above another according to circumstances. If the number of the parishioners amount to three hundred, the addition to the lowest minimum is 20*l.*; total 100*l.* (Section 7) : number five hundred, addition to minimum 40*l.*; total 120*l.* : number a thousand, addition to minimum 70*l.*; total 150*l.*

Ipsa facto fixations and augmentations, the above : to these (Section 13) succeed two discretionary ones ; seat of the discretion, the holy bosom of the Bishop. Incumbent's profit, "exceeding" 400*l.*, even though numbers fall short of the three hundred, discretionary addition as high as 20*l.* (p. 10), total as high as 100 : Incumbent's pay, as before, exceeding 400*l.* (p. 17) ; then, if numbers amount to five hundred, fixed addition, as above, 40*l.*, total fixed salary 120*l.* ; discretionary addition as far as 50*l.* more ; total maximum 170*l.* Incumbent's profit, as before, 400*l.* ; then, if numbers amount to one thousand, fixed addition, as above, 70*l.* ; total fixed salary (p. 10) 150*l.* ; discretionary addition as high (p. 17) as 50*l.* more : maximum 200*l.* All this over and above the use of the parsonage, of which presently.

So much for additions, fixed and discretionary. Then came (Section 11, 12) certain discretionary deductions, for taxes, and repairs ; seat of the discretion, Right Reverend bosom, as before.

At the same Right Reverend discretion (by Section 10) further deductions, where the Incumbent is "Non-Resident, or incapable of performing the duties from age, sickness, or other unavoidable cause," in the License, statement of the existence of "special reasons"—the reasons themselves consigned to a secret Register: a separate book not inspectable, but with leave of "Bishop, Ordinary, or other proper authority."

At the same Right Reverend discretion, where a Curate is allowed to serve two parishes, or three parishes (by Section 9) deduction as far as 30*l.* from each, but so that in no one the remaining salary shall be less than 50*l.* or the whole value of the benefice.*

To the above are added various provisions, adapted to particular cases,—forming a body of detail which, for any

* Suppose three livings, profit in each above 400*l.*, population in each above a thousand: under this 9th section, coupled with sections 7 and 13, Curate may, if Bishop pleases, have out of each, 200*l.*; out of all together, 600*l.*: the Incumbent in each being left with 200*l.* and a fraction. In the scale of absurdity this is the highest point, and this too high to be probable:—but, below it might be found no small number of probable ones.

Profit of living, suppose 449*l.*: population more than 1000. Of Curate's salary, the minimum is 150*l.*, Bishop may make it 200*l.*: by leaving in the pockets of the parishioners the odd 49*l.* and thus reducing Curate's maximum to 150*l.*, Incumbent may save 1*l.*: regard for his own pecuniary interests, kindness towards his parishioners, desire of their esteem and goodwill, dislike towards the deputy thus forced upon him, indignation at the oppression to which he is subjected by this law—which is there of the above causes that might not of itself suffice to produce the effect? So far as concerns the easement thus given to the parishioners, here—thanks to the husbandman's sleep—here we have wheat springing up among the tares sown by him.

Endless would be the task of particularizing all the doubtful or indubitably incongruous cases, liable to spring out of the complicatedness of a mass of arrangement, the uselessness and mischievousness of which will be seen as we advance.

such purpose as the present, it seems needless to bring to view.

Anxious is the care taken to prevent the Curate from keeping out of his pocket any part of the salary which it is determined he shall have : agreement to any such effect (Section 15) declared void : to any part of the forced addition, not received by him, not only does the Curate himself remain, but moreover his personal "representatives" remain, entitled, with treble costs : debt and costs to be put into the respective pockets, in a summary way, by the Bishop. Along with "the gross value of the benefice," Incumbent applying for License is, among other things (Section 18), to state, "what salary he proposes to give to "his Curate." To Incumbent, no License for Non-Residence without such statement : to Curate (Section 19), no License to serve as Curate, till such statement has been given in by Incumbent.—For the concealment of these particulars, another secret Register.

To persons who, in virtue of Exemptions, stand ipso facto and without License, entitled to the indulgence of Non-Residence,—the above obligations are, in one way or other, extended. Howsoever entitled to this privilege, never by law has an Incumbent had it in his power to enjoy it without the existence of a Curate to do the duty :—No Curate, no Non-Residence. By the Act of 1796 (Section 6), power was given to the Bishop to deprive of his Curate any Incumbent, even though exempt by ipso facto exemption : first he was to force a License into the Curate's pocket : then, on his taking it out again (which he might do whenever he pleased) Incumbent, thus remaining without a Curate, remained without the benefit of the Exemption : bound thereupon either to give up the benefice, or to do the duty of it himself. Upon the back of this obligation,—the imposition of which was thus left dependent upon the discretion of the Bishop,—comes a clause in this Act of 1813 (Section 19), forcing, or seeming to force, the Bishop to impose it: “it shall not be lawful” (says the Act) “to the Bishop to grant the requisite License to the Curate, unless the Incumbent has given in to him the statement required.” And here we have a third secret Register.

So much for securing official aptitude: now as to the provision for insuring Residence. By the Act of 1796, power was given to the Bishop for allowing to the Curate the use of the Parsonage, if he chooses to have it: to the same Right Reverend person, by this Act of 1813 (Section 3), power is given to make the man occupy it, when he does not choose it.

On a short view of this mass of complication, of which such features only as seemed most prominent could here be offered to the Reader’s eye, several subjects for observation have been presented:—1. The elements of official aptitude in this case, according to his Lordship’s view of them. 2. The principle of making agreements for other people. 3. The considerations on which the gradations in the amounts of forced salary have been grounded. 4. Under such a system as hath been seen in regard to service, the importance attached to Residence. 5. The confining of the indulgence to the richer benefices. 6. On the part of the whole system, the probability it presents of being efficient with reference to any of its professed purposes.

I. Elements of official Aptitude in this Case—what the proper ones.

The situation of a Curate being the official situation in question, what in that situation, in his Lordship’s conception, are the elements of official aptitude?—Answer. Liberality of education; liberality of views; and decency of appearance. "How can we expect," (says he, p. 16, in a passage already above referred to,) "how can we expect, considering the Church only as a profession, that men, who have necessarily received a liberal education, and who ought to be men of liberal views, will continue to enter into a profession, in which the blanks bear so large a proportion to the prizes?*" How can we expect that persons, whose incomes hardly afford the means of subsistence, will be able to keep up that decent appearance which is almost indispensably necessary to secure the respect of their parishioners?"—Not indeed in the way of direct assertion is it that these endowments are, with reference to the office in question, presented, we see, in the character of elements of official aptitude. But is it the less true, that in this character it is that they are presented?—No, indeed, for such they are assumed to be: and, whatsoever be the strength given to direct assertion, that with which assumption operates is still greater. How opposite to liberality, any state of things in which there is any deficiency in them!—in Excellent Church sense, which is the only endurable sense, how opposite even to decency—to common decency! And,—except that it increases with the money put into the reverend pocket,—let a man read this speech of his Lordship's ever so often, no other indication will he find in it concerning the elements of official aptitude.

Different—he cannot but confess—far different—is the conception, which, with reference to this same office, it has been the lot of the Renegado Graduate to have formed to himself, in regard to these same elements of aptitude.

Duties, as above, are all of them either exigible, or in-

* If, for so many past hundreds of years, they have continued to enter into it, why not for any number of future ones?

exigible: at every turn comes the demand for this analysis: at every turn came the analysis, and lays bare Excellent Church to the very bone. All character notoriously scandalous out of the question,—for all exigible duties, through the virtue of the fixed forms, any one man, so he can but read, is as good as any other—any one boy as good as either: the part that remains unemployed of the Parish Clerk, as good as either the whole boy or the whole man.

Not so as to the inexigible duties: with reference to which, a few words on the subject of official aptitude shall here be said:—the Reader being still besought to bear in mind, that the field of Church-of-England dominion is not a field, in which, under any system of arrangement, they can ever, on any tolerably substantial ground, be expected to be possessed and manifested: always excepted what has been already mentioned as the rare product either of accident or policy,—here and there a Christian hero amidst a swarm of idlers.

Appropriate active talent, appropriate learning, appropriate zeal, appropriate humility—these, in the breast of a Christian Priest,—be he Incumbent, be he Curate, be he Priest of a Church, in which the abomination of Sine-curism, and the visible sign of it—the name and office of Curate—is unknown,—these may be stated as the elements of official aptitude: appropriate active talent, praying and preaching without book,—in season and out of season,—from the head and heart, and not from the eye:—appropriate learning, viz. in that shape, in which that man, and he alone possesses it, who has the Bible at his fingers' ends:—appropriate zeal, that zeal which has for its object the salvation of souls, not the catching of the loaves and fishes:—appropriate humility, viz. that which, so far from spurning them, seeks out with preference, the ignorant, the indigent, the ill-mannered, even the profligate, so long as the endeavour to give increase to their welfare in any shape, spiritual or temporal, affords a ray of hope; seeking out always the souls, whose need of the physician is greatest, in preference to those, whose demand, if any, for his assistance, is least imperative.

Sir (I hear his Lordship saying), what is the sort of Curate you have been finding for me? Your man—he is no better than a Sectary, or a Methodist. May be so, my good Lord: for, in truth, very different are the functions we have been thinking of: I, that of saving souls: your Lordship, that of occupying, with graceful decency, the place opposite to your Lordship's at your Lordship's table.

Possession of profane learning—is that what his Lordship meant by “liberality of education?” Is that the endowment which it was his wish and endeavour to secure to his Curate? Surely it cannot be unknown to him by what means, somewhat more effectually than by the possession of so much money, it may be secured to a man: if not, it is high time he should learn it. The examination,—the public examination,—by which, in the Universities, trial is made of a man's aptitude for a degree—let examinations such as these be employed as trials of a man's aptitude, in the respect in question, for a Curacy,—a trial of this sort would be a somewhat better security than is afforded by the word liberality, when employed by lips such as his Lordship's, in the designation of the sort of education which a functionary of that sort ought to have:—instead of confining it to the road which leads to a University degree, let him set up the turnpike either at the entrance into the road which leads to each particular parochial benefice, whether in the shape of an Incumbency or a Curacy,—or at that earliest stage, at which the road leads in common to all such parochial benefices at once : viz. exactly at the very point, at which, to a real and efficient barrier, the indulgence of the Bishop's Chaplain substitutes a phantasmagoric image. Without the examination, the liberal education,—that is, if it means any thing, the having, for a certain length of time, existed within the precincts of the University,—will not do any thing :—in a word, let him establish in England, and for the English Church, that trial and that test which is so notoriously and universally efficient and sufficient in the Scottish—establish the examinations, you may do any thing : and the liberal education, with the Universities in and by which it is administered, may, without much loss, be dispensed with.

II. Next as to the forced agreements :—

On an occasion such as this, to what possible good use can the force—the coercive force—of government be employed? In what possible way can it be thus employed without producing a net balance on the side of mischief? Suffer the parties to settle the matter between themselves, both will have been contented, or no agreement will have been made. Enter Marplot with his regulation,—and now, in so far as it has any effect, out of every two parties one is, as with but too much cause he may be, discontented,—feeling the money forced out of his pocket, and thus in a double way a sufferer : first by the loss, and himself then by the sense of the injury that caused it. Marplot, shall we say? or rather Machiavel in the disguise of Marplot?

But what matters it who is contented, and who not? The great ends are accomplished : the Curates' pay increased, with it increases the security for his official aptitude, and with it the probability—(a sad word that—leave it to the mathematicians : no ; instead of it, spite of self-contradiction, say the certainty)—of the salvation of souls.

III. Thirdly, as to the Gradations in the amounts of Salary.

One principle is—the richness of the benefice: and, if free agreement must stand excluded, and if there must moreover be increase, this principle, at any rate, seems an unobjectionable, as well as an obvious and simple one. The more money a man has,—cæteris paribus, the more he can afford to part with. How small soever, on the one part the benefit, on the other part the burthen is at any rate the less.

It was too simple and too rational to be abided by. Upon the back of this are mounted two other principles: and new complication is produced, and confusion thickened. In the first place (p. 22) comes “extent of the labour ;” the advantage of “making the remuneration bear some proportion to it :”—but, no sooner is it started, than it is discarded for another, which in his Lordship’s view it “may best be inferred from :” and that is, “number of the parishioners.” At this time his Lordship (not to speak of the hearers and non-hearers, whose persuasion was led captive by his eloquence) his Lordship must surely have been nodding: for, in the real nature of the case, nothing will any one find by which any ground is afforded for this inference.

Here then, for measuring out the quantity of the pay, are two quite different standards set up—set up close together—and to neither of them is any regard paid. All this while, in the practice of this same office, stood before the Noble Reformer’s eyes an arrangement, which he had but to copy, and the two standards would, both of them, have been conformed to,—and, without labour, or so much as thought, the remuneration been carved out and adjusted to the two standards with almost mathematical nicety. Two species of service he might have seen, stated and oc- casional: the stated, the reading of the Minister's part in Morning and Evening Service, with or without a sermon: the occasional, the reading of the Minister's part in the several offices for Marriage, Churching of Women, Christening, and Burial. In the stated parts of the service, for the remuneration of which the forming a scale of gradations has imposed such a tax upon his Lordship's genius, the extent of the labour varies not an iota: not an iota either with any other circumstance, or with the "number of the parishioners:" in the occasional parts, it varies very exactly with the number of the parishioners. For the stated parts of the service, the pay allotted is in each Curacy a fixed quantity, viz. a fixed salary: for those occasional parts of the service, the quantity of pay varies with, and is in exact proportion to, the number of the occasions in which, as above, the service is performed: a fee, called a surplice fee, being paid on each. Allotting in every parish the same salary, to that part of the labour which, in every parish, is, or at least should be, the same,—had the proportioning of remuneration, in regard to those parts of the service of which the number performed in the year varies in different parishes, and that upon a wide extended scale, been the object really in view,—nothing would have been easier. The salary allotted for the unvarying part of the labour being the same in every parish,—in any given parish suppose the amount of these fees to be such as is deemed sufficient, the object is already accomplished: suppose it not deemed sufficient, all that would have been wanting would have been to count the fees of each sort as they stand on the Parish Register, and from the Parish Fund, to make to each such fee such addition as should be judged requisite.—Not that this plan of arrangement would be a good one: for, in comparison with that mode, which his Lordship found in universal use, and giving universal content,—and which, at his Lordship's instance, Parliament has been at such pains to prohibit,—it is obvious how bad an one it would be. Parishes might be found, in which the surplice fees do not yield so much as 2*l.* a year: others, in which they yield more than 200*l.* and, in those which do not yield the 2*l.*, a Curate it is intended shall live.—Not that the plan would be an endurable one: but what is the point, and the only point in question, it would be in exact conformity to these his Lordship's rules.

Did ever any such notion occur to his Lordship, as that of its being better for the souls that the Service—the stated parts of it—should be performed eight times a month,—viz. on each Sunday Morning and Evening Service both than only,—as in some parishes,—according to the Diocesan Secretary,—once a month?—No, never:—at any rate in the character of a desirable arrangement: for, if it had,—with the same simplicity and certainty might it have been accomplished, in the case of the stated as in the case of the occasional Services;—and thus remuneration made to bear not merely “some proportion”—and we have seen how rough an one—to imaginary extent of labour, but a proportion—and that to any degree of nicety an exact one—to real extent of labour.

No: this would have been too simple:—no force put upon men's wills,—no violation of property,—no nullification of agreements,—little exercise for legislative power:—none for legislative wisdom:—above all, no subjecting of the greater part of the whole body of Parochial Clergy—officiating and not officiating together—to the arbitrary will of six-and-twenty important idlers, dressed up to look wise:—Residence,—that Residence which it is either found impossible to enforce, or determined not to enforce, by Bishops,—would be enforced, and with the utmost degree of certainty, and, with every desired degree of constancy, without Bishops.

“Extent of labour, primâ facie, best inferred from the “numbers of the Parishioners!”—What reasoning!—yet upon the sole strength of it is, that from 80*l.*, through four or five straggling gradations—wide-stretching gradations—has Parliament, at the instance of Lord Harrowby, raised, or made a shew of raising, the pay of this office to as high as 200*l.* Upon the strength of this same reasoning, Saint Perceval and Sir William Scott—such, if we may believe his Lordship (p. 23), was the force of it upon their minds—would have swelled the amount as high as to 250!

On this occasion, presents itself to recollection an old book, which,—were it only to save appearances,—cannot be too seriously recommended to the perusal of the Noble Reformer, with whom appearance is every thing. This old book is called the New Testament:—if, in the library of Lord Harrowby, no copy of it happens to have place, his friend, Mr. Vansittart, who has copies plenty to dispose of cheap, can help him to one. A story is there told by one Jesus of Nazareth: it is that of certain labourers in a vineyard. At different hours of the same day, different gangs had come in, each gang making its agreement for the same price. The time for payment came,—as if they had been reading the speech of Lord Harrowby,—those who had come in earliest began to grumble:—why grumble (said the husbandman with whom they had made the agreement), you have all of you that which you agreed to take? no force upon any of you: why should you have any more?—True it is, that, for the same money, those who came in after you, have indeed laboured less: but what are you the worse for it? By excusing them from so much labour I did them a kindness indeed : but giving you, as I do, what you were content to take,—it being the whole of what I promised,—I did you no injury :—is it for your eyes to be evil, because I am good? In the declared judgment of Jesus this answer was a good one, and ought to be regarded as a satisfactory one. Not so, in the judgment of the Earl of Harrowby, Sir William Scott, and their fellows : they knew better things. And so did Excellent Church,—and so did all those of her sons,* whose concurrence was given to these clauses !

If, after all, this theory of Excellent Church's, thus adopted and applied to practice by the Noble Reformer, be a sound and true one,—viz. that, to souls of parishioners, chance of salvation is as the quantity of money, in the shape of official pay, put into the pocket of the Parish Priest,—(Incumbent or Curate makes not, it is presumed, much difference)—on this supposition, a plain course is marked out, for all those to take, who to a belief in this theory, add a due regard for their own souls. In the Isle and Diocese of Ely, indication has already been given of a Parish, in which the quantum of this soul-saving Mammon rises as high as 12,000*l.* a year. To this most fortunate part of that fortunate island should these men then repair and take up their abode. Here would be a spot on which to plant the Bench of Bishops !—Here would be a spot on which, at any rate as often as religion were the order of the day, Parliaments should be held !—Here would be a spot for a new Cathedral, with its Dean and Chapter : the Dean some Bishop, who, in addition to his Bishopric, has not yet Sinecures enough :—the Chapter—of whom could it be better composed than of the penners of the Quarterly

* Supra, App. IV.

Review? more particularly such of them as have niches already in other Chapters. For increase of sanctity, Church of England Saints flocking in from all quarters to this blessed spot, the whole surface would thus be covered with a great city,—a new Jerusalem:—were it only by Easter-offerings, the quantity of that holy matter, with which, in this holy office, official aptitude, and with it assurance of salvation to souls increases, would there receive a prodigious increase: the whole surface being covered by house by the side of house, each portion of it would be covered by story mounted upon story, until at length the force of gravity, without need of any such interposition as we read of in the parable, should set limits to the increase.

IV. As to the Benefit to be expected from such Residence.

The means employed are (as will be seen) as they could not but be, of a compulsory nature. If, in any determinate and assignable shape, there were any security, or sufficient reason, for the expectation, that by, or in consequence of, a Church-of-England Minister's Residence in the Parish in which he serves as Curate, in contradistinction to any other spot of his own choice, any real service could be rendered to mankind,—here would be a good to set against the mischief from the compulsion, whatever it be. But, for any such expectation what sufficient or substantial reason can be found? Employ here the necessary and so often mentioned analysis. Of the duties incumbent on that office, all such as are of perfect obligation might, to a much greater extent, and to much greater certainty, be performed (it has been shewn) by the Parish Clerk alone, than at present they are by the Parish Clerk and a Minister together :* and, as for duties of imperfect obligation, the fulfilment of them, is it, in any degree worth regarding, probabilized by Residence? That there scarce exists a diocese, in which a number of instances of their being, in a more or less considerable degree, performed, would be to be found, seems altogether probable.† But, in whatever instance any degree of performance is given to them, such performance is on the whole a work of supererogation. In respect of reputation, it is of course, by all parties interested, made the most of: speak of the general worthlessness of the system, these instances, rare as they are, are produced as proofs to the contrary:—and thus it is, that, by the support given to the totality, of a system essentially and radically bad, more general mischief, beyond all comparison, is done, than what is equal to the greatest good, which, in the small number of particular instances in question, is or can be done by the fulfilment of these duties. When a system is to a certain degree bad,—the worse it becomes, the better: the worse the more scandalous,—and the more scandalous, the nearer the abuse is to its remedy.

All this while, under Church-of-Englandism, is it really in the nature of the case, that, in the situation of Curate, not to speak of that of Incumbent, Residence in the Parish should, generally speaking, be productive of any clear benefit in any shape to the Parishioners?—In the

* Supra, App. No. IV. § 3. Service:—§ 4. Facienda.

† Under the system of corruption and misrule, partly from accident, partly from policy, thus it will be always happening, that, throughout the establishment, out of some large number, of those who are placed in official or other elevated situations, there shall be some one in whose instance a portion of merit, real or supposed, absolute or relative, is to be found. Thus, on the Bench of Bishops, out of the six-and-twenty, you have commonly one or two at a time, whose characters, whether by design or accident, keep up the reputation of the order from sinking outright.

Army—in the Army properly so called—hope of preferment is, no doubt, really necessary to the securing of appropriate service:—in the metaphorical Army of the Church militant,—in the “Noble Army” of these supposed “Martyrs” to their sacred duty,—scarcely can any thing be more adverse than that hope, to the constancy and perfection of correspondently appropriate service. Incumbent or Curate, rich or poor,—pursuit of pleasure—of pleasure in the ordinary sense of the word—is the natural, the ordinary, the principal, business of the Church of England Parish Priest:—if rich, the pursuit of his own pleasure at his own expense:—if poor, the pursuit of the pleasures of every man, in whose patronage the eye of ambition can descry a ray of hope.

In the Scottish Established Church no such pursuit of pleasure will you see. Why?—because in that Priesthood there is no such opulence as enables the Priest to pursue it at his own expense:—and because in that Church there is no such thing as preferment:—no preferment for a man to pursue, while pursuing, and by pursuing pleasure, as above, at the expense of others.

In the Priesthood of any Non-Established Church still less can there be any such pursuit of pleasure. Why?—because while there is not any such opulence, there is at the same time hope of preferment: so opposite may, under different circumstances, be the effects produced by the same cause.—Of preferment?—yes: but whence?—from the favour of this or that individual in the character of Patron?—No: but from increase in the numbers of the congregation:—from the increase in that favour, of which appropriate good service is—if not absolutely the sole, at all times the most probable and promising, cause.

Against the number of these, whose character, by such works of supererogation as have just been mentioned, is rendered heroic, set down on the per contra side those whose character,—by dissipation, and incongruous behaviour in other shapes,—is rendered scandalous :—on which side is the balance most likely to be found?

V. Confining to the richer Benefices the Indulgence of Non-Residence.

Thus much as to what is professed and placed in front, viz. augmentation of Curates' pay,—augmentation of the number of Resident Curates. Another part of the plan there is, that comes in as it were by a side wind: being that which, in a wholesale way, disposes of the fate of a group of Incumbents, nor that a small one. These are they, in whose case, on the occasion of the conversion, which to their own profit they make of Cure into Sinecure, the quantity of money stripped off from the profit of a benefice is, according to the measure taken of it by the eye of opulence, comparatively small: upon an average, according to his Lordship (p. 22), not more than 54*l.* a year :—in this case, "the practice" (he says, p. 21), "is by no means creditable to the Church:" accordingly he puts an end to it :—if the whole pay does not amount to what in my judgment is proper for you to allow to your Curate, no Sinecure must you carve out of it :—serve the benefice yourself, Sir, or give it up. Upon any such petty scale (I think I hear his Lordship say) depredation shall have no License from me. I will not suffer it. I have no sympathy for it. A paltry sum! What son, what brother of mine, would stoop so low as to pick it up?—And now comes the demand for a dictum, in which the most engaging frankness is employed in smoothing away the austerity of rigid discipline :—" Pluralities and Non-Residence," says he (p. 7), "are certainly no necessary part of the Establishment of a Christian Church." Nobly said, my Lord; but suppose the amount two, three, ten times, a hundred times, as much—does the magnitude of the wrong convert it into right? Oh yes (says his Lordship); to be sure it does, so as the sum is but large enough (p. 21): the case is then reversed: the thing is become an object: it would suit a son or a brother of mine very well:—it may save my estate a rent-charge—the arrangement is a useful one:—a man of my rank may find his convenience in it:—I see nothing in it that is not creditable. Accordingly, no sooner is the plunderage swollen to this interesting pitch, than he and his associates hold out to it a protecting hand: they authorize and confirm it,—for so to do is the chief part of the business of this suite of statutes. Comes now the demand for those two aphorisms, by which this part of the account is settled. “A strict injunction of universal Residence” (says he, p. 21) “would neither be practicable nor desirable. I am “equally averse to the abolition of Pluralities.”

Apply this reasoning to depredation, in any of those hazardous shapes, in which, Noble Lords and Honourable Gentlemen, having so many sure and safe means at command, have no need of practising it, and in which it has accordingly been all along punishable. If it exceed not—say the sum of 5*l.*—the plunder of a shop (suppose) is regarded by them as not worth stooping for. Here then comes the demand for the candid acknowledgement, and the maxim of rigid discipline. Plunder of a shop to so low an amount as 5*l.* is a practice that would be “by no means creditable” to the House, or to any member of it. The practice of shoplifting, to any such petty amount, “is certainly no necessary part” (p. 7), “of the establishment of a Christian Church,” any more than of good order, legitimacy, prerogative, or privilege. But, at some point in the scale above this, it has risen to such an amount as to catch the eye, and produce a sense of pruritus in the hand. Now comes the time for the maxims of liberality and indulgence : practised in the manner in which shoplifting is practised by Noble Lords and Honourable Gentlemen,—“ a strict injunction of universal” abstinence from it (p. 21) would neither be practicable nor desirable.

Behold here a line of distinction that runs all over the field of depredation :—it is a right thing or a wrong thing, according as the shape, in which it is practised, is or is not of the number of those shapes, in which a member of the corporation of the ruling few has or has not need and opportunity of having recourse to it. To convert to his own use the contents of a shop, no need has he of any such uncreditable and hazardous practice, as that of snatching them out through the shop window, and running off with them. He gives his orders for them openly and above board :—they roll into his house from all quarters :—he exhausts Bond-Street :—he borrows money to the right and left :—he buys land :—he settles it on his family :—the land goes to his family :—the loss remains to his tradesmen and to his vendors :—a just punishment to each of them for judging of his probity from his situation and expenditure, and for not knowing to what extent he was in the same way cheating the others.

In the eyes of Sir Samuel Romilly, depredation in this shape is “ by no means creditable” to Noble Lords or Honourable Gentlemen. Session after session he therefore tries to put an end to it. Taught by the superior authority of the Master of the Rolls, Noble Lords and Honourable Gentlemen pronounce as often—that, “ a strict injunction of universal” abstinence from swindling in that shape “ would neither be practicable nor desirable.”

Follow the scent thus given you, honest Reader, if you have the courage,—hunt over the Viner and the Statute

Book,—soon will you find distinctions of this sort, in quantity sufficient to fill a volume. When you have done so, call then upon the Noble Lords and Honourable Gentlemen, beg of them to give up these things;—what you will then find will be—that, depredation, when committed in a liberal shape, is part of the privilege of Parliament: that as for you, you are a Jacobin and a Leveller, and that it is anarchy, and not common honesty, that you want to introduce.

VI. Prospect of Efficiency with regard to the professed Purposes.

A consideration, which in this view should never be out of mind, is—that of this, as of every other part of the licensing system, the efficiency depends altogether upon the conception, which it may happen, on the one part, to the Incumbent,—on the other part, to the Curate, to be entertaining,—concerning the need they respectively have of any such mutually troublesome yoke: and whether to any very considerable extent, and for any considerable degree of permanency,—under so well organized and well-established a system of connivance, as may have been seen,—any very strong conception of such need is likely to have place,—will be for any Reader to judge, whose patience has, in the last preceding Number of this Appendix, carried him through the 7th and 8th Sections.

The date of this second Curates' Act, viz. the year 1813, being posterior to that of the latest of the three Returns, of which the Abstracts have been seen, viz. 1811,—this charge of connivance in one place and neglect of duty in another, has, it may be seen, for its ground,—when applied to any time subsequent to the date of this last Act,—not any particular matter of fact, nor in short, any thing stronger than mere presumption and inference. Well then, inquire of the Diocesan Secretary, and see what he says as to the matter of fact.

Twentieth of July, 1813, is the date of the Act: 6th of November following comes from Mr. Wright a letter, of which so much as relates to this subject is in the words and figures following:—

“ In spite of the Canon Law and injunction of Arch“ bishops, out of 439 Curates, employed for Non-Resident “ Incumbents, only 100 [of them] are licensed; and of the “ 439, only 116 are Resident, either in the parish or Par“ sonage-House, a very small proportion of them in the “ latter.”

Six months after the passing of the Act had already elapsed;—all that time had it had for the production of its effect;—when the public received from this same Diocesan Secretary the following additional information:—

“ Indeed (says he, Letter V. 18th January, 1814),
 “ such is the dislike of these persons to place their Curates
 “ in a more independent situation, that the Curates’ Act, “ so laudably brought forward last session, remains in “ most dioceses unattended to, although the Bishops are “ now so stimulated by this beginning of what I intend to “ do, that they are sending circular Letters in all direc“ tions from their Secretaries and even Chaplains.”

All this was unquestionably true; for never has it been questioned. These were among the facts, of which, if untrue, the untruth would in course have been made manifest, had any acceptance been given to his offer of being examined, as embodied in his Petition of the 21st of April in that same year, herein above reprinted.

Such, from this part of the plan, being the prospect of advantage,—neither can the price exacted for it, still less the price which, had it depended upon the Noble Reformer, would have been exacted for it,* be left wholly without notice.

Flaming indeed on this occasion was his zeal for Excellent Church: icy his sympathy, if he had any, for the sufferings of individuals. An Incumbent, whose Curate had been in use to be content with 35*l.*,† would,—if his living produced him more—though it were but a farthing more—than 400*l.*, have, all of a sudden,—in lieu of the less than ten per cent. income-tax, which on this score he had been in use to pay, leaving him 365*l.* a year—(to which income his expectations of him and his family had been allowed to attach themselves from two to fifty years or more together), would have found this tax raised upon him to 50*l.* per cent.:—would, in a word, have found himself stripped of half his income. By some persons of more feeling, or more consideration than zeal,—this part of the project was, it seems, defeated: of the imaginary benefit, the commencement was,—in the instance of each benefice,—postponed to the death or removal of the Incumbent: and thus, though the intended benefit to the reputation of Excellent Church was thus cut down, so much of the burthen as had been intended for the shoulders of Incumbents was taken off. Still, however, as above noticed, a Patron,—who, upon the death or removal of the existing Incumbent, had a son in readiness to receive the

* Speaking of objections made by persons in the main friendly to the measure, “those objections” (says he, p. 18) “were chiefly the application “as to Incumbents actually in possession; and, &c. . . . limited as that “Bill was to livings of above 400*l.* per annum, I did not feel the weight of “this.”

† According to his own statement (p. 9), among those livings alone that are under 150*l.* a year, he found no fewer than 600 in which the salary was, upon an average, no more than 35*l.* a year: consequently, in about half the number of instances, more or less below that mark.

living, with a neat income of 365*l.*,—will upon that event have found it reduced, as above, to 200*l.* Insensible to the idea of the thunderstroke above-mentioned, no wonder the Noble Lord's sympathy should be in the same state, with regard to this loss, for which the Patron and his son may have had more or less time to prepare themselves.

But the Noble Reformer has found a theory for all this : and by this theory his breast has found a coat of mail provided for it. It lies (this theory) in the word property. "But" (says he, p. 6) "this, it is said, is a violent transfer of property. My answer" (continues he) "is, that it is no violation or transfer of property at all; . . . our property in our freehold estates is absolute ; that of the Church is conditional." Thus far the Noble Reformer.

Violation of Property ?—Is that then the heart and substance of the objection?—Not it indeed. The objection is—that, without equivalent good in any shape, here is so much human suffering produced. In that, and that alone lies the evil ; and if this be not an evil, does his Lordship know of any other that is ?—This evil, is it removed, or so much as lessened, by the employing of this word, or that other, in designating the operation by which it is produced?—All the property in the world, what is it worth, but for the sensible good produced by it, or the sensible evil produced by the want of it?

Now,—if, to take effect during the lives of the occupants, or even though it were not till after their respective deaths,—any man had (some Lord Stanhope, for example) stood up with a proposal to abolish in the lump the great State Sinecures, or the great Church Sinecures,—what would the Noble Reformer have said to it?—would it have been any thing less than Jacobinism?—Yet, by an abolition of these nuisances, not to take place till after the death of the occupant,—not an atom of individual suffering—unless the cessation of indeterminate longing be to be placed to the account of suffering—would be produced.

But the treasury of corruptive influence—this, in the eyes of the ruling few—sacred and profane together—is the ark of the covenant: this is not to be touched:—on this depends the constitution for its existence. Why?—because by the one will ought all other wills to be determined:—to one interest ought all other interests to be sacrificed:—before that one will, accompanied or not by understanding, ought all other wills and all understandings to be laid and to be kept “prostrate.”

So intimate is the connexion between sinister interest and interest-begotten prejudice—of the sincerity of the Noble Reformer there seems no particular ground for entertaining any doubt:—and the same may be said of the Right Honourable Reformer, whose executor it is his boast to have been; as well as of an indeterminate proportion of those who in this, and other parts of the field of government, have been acting with them, and brought the affairs of the country to their present pass. Of their sincerity there seems little reason to doubt:—but on that account have they been the less mischievous, or are they—such of them as we are still burthened with—the less dangerous?—Alas! no: but by so much the more so. The more sincere, the more ardent and pertinacious. If (what seems not altogether improbable) it should seem to them that the salvation of their own souls depends upon their pursuing to the uttermost the principles thus acted upon as above, what are we—what are we, the subject-many—the better for their religion and their sincerity?—Alas! we are all the worse for it.

§ 3.—IV. For Increasing the Value of English Livings, exacting from the Population of the Three Kingdoms the Annual Sum of 100,000l.

The history of the fund, to which this comes as an addition, presents some curious enough particulars.

Ever since the year 1703, being the third year of Queen Anne, that same original fund has been in existence. It is composed of the produce of a part of taxes first imposed on ecclesiastical benefices in general, originally by the Popes; and, by King Henry the Eighth and his Protestant successors, continued in quality of successors to these same Catholic rulers. The hold taken by the Popes had been unsteady and incomplete. Henry included within his grasp (26 H. VIII. c. 3.) all ecclesiastical benefices without distinction: First Fruits were the whole income of the first year; tenths, were a ten per cent. income-tax upon the income of each succeeding year. The amounts being of course, from the first, as low as individual self-defence on the spot, struggling against distant tyranny, could contrive to make them,—and for the decrease in the value of money no correspondent increase being ever made,—thus it is, that, upon an average of twelve years, ending with the year 1814, the sum total annually received from the whole number of benefices in England,—with the exception of those which, by the Act of Queen Anne, were exempted, in consideration of their not yielding more than 50*l.* a year,—money of that time, amounted to no more than about 14,000*l.*: (14,037*l.* 17*s.* 10½*d.*)

Various topics of observation here suggest themselves:—1. Worthlessness of the original object;—2. Insufficiency of the means originally provided;—3. Amplitude of the means more properly applicable to the same object ;

—4. Wastefulness of the new addition, anno 1809.

1. First, as to the worthlessness of the original object.
—What was that object?—salvation of souls?—increase in the value (quality and quantity taken together) of the official service?—No such thing: for, from that time down to the present,—now upwards of a century,—not of, so much as a single step, taken towards the production of any such increase, are any traces to be found. 1. Appropriate qualification, on the part of the Incumbent. 2. Increase or security given to the number of times in the year on which service shall be performed ; 3. Residence of a Minister within or near the Parish :—in relation to no one of these points, by authority of government, has any condition been ever established, or sought to be established.—Statutes at Large—Burn's Ecclesiastical Law—no trace of any such thing any where.

Among the papers printed by order and for the use of the House of Commons,—in and for six successive years, from 1810 to 1815 inclusive, may be seen papers, having each of them for its title, “ *An Account of the Steps taken by the Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty, towards the sum of 100,000*l.* granted by Parliament for the Relief of the Poor Clergy :* ”—in no one of them is any such trace to be found.

Among these same House of Commons documents for the year 1815, may be seen a folio of 139 pages, with this title :—“ Papers relating to Queen Anne's Bounty, and to Parliamentary Grants for the Augmentation of the maintenance of the Poor Clergy : ” 1703—1815. Date of the order for printing, 27th February, 1815 : No. 115.—Throughout this whole volume, the same sacred silence. Of the host of saints, by which that Honourable House is sanctified,—not one, at whose instance, information in relation to the attention shewn to any one object except the money, was obtainable.

The number of souls saved will be as the aggregate amount of the money put into the pockets of the established Clergy :—such, once more, is the fundamental principle :—such has been the principle acted upon from the first—acted upon to the last—acted upon throughout the whole of the ecclesiastical department. To so many others that have been seen add this further proof, of the dominion exercised over practice by the maxims herein-above ascribed (App. No. IV. § 4) to Excellent Church.

Of any steps, in any one instance, taken by any person or persons, towards the forwarding of any one of the above-mentioned essential objects,—the only trace that has been found shall here be mentioned :—it consists in the following passage in one of those letters of the Diocesan Secretary so often mentioned, viz. Letter II. Morning Chronicle, 20th Nov. 1813:—

“ On a recent proposal, by the Governors of the Boun“ ties of Queen Anne, to augment some livings, if the “ duty was increased, one Incumbent proved satisfactorily, “ that, if he received the augmentation, and caused the “ duty to be performed once every Sunday, instead of once
 “ a fortnight, he should receive two pounds per annum less “ than he received without the augmentation ;—another,
 “ where the duty is only once a month, not only declined
 “ the augmentation, with an increase of duty to once a “ fortnight, but stated, as other Churches were near, he “ thought it would be a good plan to dilapidate the Church “ entirely,—so that he wanted to get rid of the duty alto“ gether,—but he did not say one word about giving up
 “ the living, although a small one.”

II. Insufficiency of the means originally provided.

III. Amplitude of the means all along more properly applicable to the same object.

From the days of Henry the Eighth, down to those of Queen Anne, not any the slightest symptoms of concern in relation to this matter : where, in the eyes of the retainers of the Monarch and their retainers, the pay, clogged as it was with the duty, was not worth their acceptance,—souls and their salvation were not worth a thought. The throne being filled by a weak woman, up steps Excellent Church, and seats itself by her side. The produce of the above-mentioned antique assessment is now, by the piety of the Queen, bestowed in augmentation of the small benefices. Pompous is the language in which the grant is announced and established. What does it amount to?—In round numbers, 14,000*l.* a year and no more.

Not to speak of Bishoprics and Archbishoprics—among the twenty-six nests of acknowledged idlers, styled Chapters, headed by Deans,—more than one might be mentioned, each of which would, by its suppression, or at any rate with the addition of one other, have furnished towards this same object a larger contribution.

By the suppression of no one of these seats and sources of corruption, would any tax on the public have been imposed. By that in question, as by every other manifestation of Royal bounty, a tax to the annual amount of it has been imposed : for, royal revenue being never sufficient for royal bounty, taxes are the means by which the everlasting deficiency is everlastingly supplied.

In regard to efficiency with reference to the ends in view,—whatever were these ends, the prospect afforded by such a contribution was altogether ludicrous. A calculation may be seen in Burn's Ecclesiastical Law, title, First Fruits and Tenths. At the time of making it—(the time not specified, nor is the omission any great loss)—226 was the number of years that would have elapsed, before the arrival of the day, on which,—on the supposition that livings, under the value of 50*l.* a year, money of the then present time, were the only ones to which the augmentation was to be applied,—they would—the whole number of them—have been raised up to that amount.

Here then came a dilemma.—Salvation of souls being the professed object,—the money thus bestowed, under the notion of its operating in the character of a means towards that most important end, would it, with reference to that end, be in any degree efficient?—would it be altogether inefficient?—On neither supposition is any such remotely operative arrangement a defensible one. Is it in any degree efficient?—what is to become of souls before the instrument of salvation has been in readiness to operate?—why are these to be left unsaved, any more than those, if any, who will have to come after them?—Is it altogether inefficient?—The money thus bestowed is then, the whole of it, with reference to the ends in question, bestowed in waste. And, at the end of the 226 years, what, in point of pecuniary sufficiency, is produced? Of no one of the several Reverend principals in question, does the pay as yet amount, to one-fourth part of that which, at present, in the declared opinion of Parliament, the deputy of every such principal would have, if his quantum of pay were sufficient.

IV. Wastefulness of the recent Addition, Anno 1809.

Paper money being plenty, political piety not less so, shame alone scarce,—May 20th, anno 1809, comes from the throne a message, calling upon Parliament, by one magnanimous effort, to fill up the gulph almost at once. For a certain number of years, 100,000*l.* each year,—the thing is done.—100,000*l.* a year?—what is 100,000*l.* a year?—compared with our expenditure on objects of infinitely inferior importance, a mere drop added to the ocean. Thus it is that, by every instance of past or present waste, argument is made, and that a conclusive one, for any future waste.*

On this head, to say any more in this place than has been said already—would be but repetition or anticipation.—100,000*l.* a year thus thrown out of the window! and what is the result?—Of the plan, such as it is, the completion is accelerated:—but the principle—the vicious principle—remains in all its absurdity,—and, with the acceleration given to the pretended benefit—the unfelt benefit—the

* Well:—why, all of a sudden, at more than a hundred years distance, outbid, and to such a degree, the piety of the High-Church Queen?—The answer is ready. Oh (says the Earl of Liverpool), (Cobbett's Debates, xiv. 830—832)—this is for a “class of men who, of all others, were most serviceable to the country!”—Say you so, my Lord?—why then they are more serviceable—every man of them—than Marquis Camden with his 23,000*l.* a year; or even Lord Arden, with his freehold 38,000*l.*: something more than this 38,000*l.* is therefore the least part any of them should have.—Here may be seen a specimen of the reasoning, on the ground of which expenses are incurred and taxes imposed.—It shews how the money has gone, is going, and will continue to go—unless and until . . . it is needless to add the rest.—Speech from his Lordship—Address accordingly, nemine contradicente.

But these, it may be, are but the Reporter's words.—Yes, so it may be. But, by these same Reporters, how much oftener are not speeches mended than marred?—Well then—compare the reasoning, as above, with the reasoning in the Earl of Harrowby's Speech—the produce of his own closet:—see whether in respect of closeness, between the imputed reasoning of the First Lord of the Treasury, and the undoubted reasoning of the Lord President of the Council, there be much to choose.

too real and severely felt burthen is proportionably increased: the burthen thus increased, and still the interest of the existing stock of souls sacrificed to that of their future contingent successors.

In the whole of this business taken together, one circumstance there is, capable of being regarded as a source of satisfaction,—and it is the only one.—This is—that, of the mass of money thus designed to be wasted, a proportion—and that by much the larger one—is yet capable of being saved. Of the 700,000*l.* thus furnished within these seven years, nothing (it appears) but the interest hath as yet been thus applied;—as to the principal, having been invested in Government Annuities, it remains untouched:—capable of being applied to better purposes. Old fund and new fund together,—there remains, at the disposal of the Governors, to the value of about 1,200,000 3 per cents. Particulars are not worth loading the page with:—the sources from whence this conclusion has been deduced, are the annual papers above spoken of, and the large mass of papers of Feb. 1815, p. 8.

To this heavy and immediately imposed burthen,—imposed for future contingent, nor that any thing more than ideal benefit,—not a parallel, but a contrast, is afforded by the augmentation given the year after to the underpaid benefices of the Church of Scotland.*

Out of the 944 parochial benefices belonging to that Established Church, the number of those of which the stipends remained below the annual sum of 150*l.*, was 170:

* Taken from the House of Commons Paper, intitled Report of the number and value of the stipends of the Scotch Clergy under 150*l.* per annum: made out under the inspection of the Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland.—Date of the order for printing, 23d March, 1810, No. 161.

to raise every one of them up to that mark, the sum required was 8,713*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.* By a Statute of the year 1800 (50 G. III. c. 84), 10,000*l.* was accordingly provided for that useful and altogether unexceptionable purpose.

Useful and unexceptionable?—how so?—if the annual 100,000*l.* granted for the English Clergy, was useless and indefensible?—Answer, in few words:—1. Under Excellent Church,—Service, over and over again proved unprofitable, or little better:—under Scottish Church, eminently and incontestably profitable: exigible duties well performed; inexigible performed, and universally performed. 2. Under Excellent Church, the benefit looked to from the augmentation, if not altogether ideal, at any rate future contingent as well as remote: under Scottish Church, immediate. 3. For Excellent Church, the amount of the burthen imposed on the United Kingdom, ten times as great as that imposed for the Scottish Church: while the population of England is not more than between five and six times that of Scotland.

In regard to Scotland, one regret still remains: it is—that to the 8,700*l.*, 17,000*l.* more was not added. Though, in comparison with what it is in England the temptation is as nothing,—still, while the profit of some benefices being as high as 300*l.*, that of others has been no higher than 40*l.*,—hope of translation, and thence the pursuit called preferment-hunting, scarcely even in Scotland can have been altogether without example: scarcely even can it reasonably be expected to be completely so, where the difference is as great as it still remains, viz. the difference between 150*l.* a year (the present minimum) and the 300*l.* In the Scottish Church, give but money enough—and a very moderate sum will suffice—the appetite for translation may be every where and completely extinguished—not only actually extinguished, but manifestly seen to be so.

But, under Excellent Church, while Bishoprics and Archbishoprics remain, what is the number of hundreds of thousands—not to speak of millions—that would be necessary?—Calculate, any one, who has curiosity and leisure.

* * Note, mislaid for the moment, intended to have been tacked to the end of the paragraph in p. 439, concluding with the words “contingent successors.” Subject of it, the time, at which the benefit to the future contingent souls may be expected to receive its completion.

According to the short account, given, in Cobbett's Debates, xiv. 830—832, of a speech of the Earl of Harrowby's in the Lords, June 1, 1809, on the occasion of the King's Message—1703 being the year in which the First Fruits and Tenths were allotted to this purpose, 203 years, reckoning from that year, was the length of time, that would have elapsed, ere all the livings then under 50*l.* would, out of that fund, be raised up to 50*l.*: 510 more, (together 723), ere all the livings then under 100*l.* would be raised up to 100*l.* But, with this 100,000*l.* in his hand, viz. with this sum once paid, or with the 100,000*l.* a year, (it does not exactly appear which) “much gratified” was the Noble Lord, by the thoughts that the original 203 years would be reduced to 39 or 40: at the end of which time no living would remain of less value than 50*l.* a year. Well, but this 50*l.* a year—a sum which, by 30*l.* a year, fails of being sufficient for the lowest paid Curacy—when this is gained, what is it that is gained?—and how stands the matter in regard to the time necessary to raise the 50*l.*, as above, to 100*l.* a year? “Gratification being the object, the period would have been rather too distant, had the fixation of it been committed to calculation. It was, therefore, left to imagination:—a more pleasant accountant than Cocker. By 50*l.* even then, will the provision be short of the sum, spoken of in the character of a minimum, in the Royal Message, by which the measure was introduced:—by 50*l.*? yea, and by 100*l.* a year, short of the sum, which, when the living is ever so little more than 400*l.*, may, out of it, be allowed to a Curate. See above, pp. 409, 410.

The grant was to be once for all: it was to be annual and continual: the one or the other, according as Honourable Gentlemen and Noble Lords should please. Continuity, i. e. perpetuity, gave universal pleasure. True it is, that, in the Lords, symptoms of opposition had for the moment broke out. In argument accordingly (the determination being all the while otherwise) 100,000*l.* once paid was to be the whole: to that sum did the prudential arithmetic of the Earl of Harrowby then confine itself:

§ 4.—V. Regulating the occupations of Agriculture, in the case of a Parish or other Priest.

Note first the inconsistency as well as inutility of the apparent endeavour:—note afterwards the real and sinister object at the bottom of it.

Unless by license from a Bishop, a Clergyman not to act as a husbandman—nay nor so much as to take a few square yards to add to his garden, how scanty so ever may be the allotment attached to his parsonage!

A Parish Priest forbidden to act as a farmer? What inconsistency! what hypocrisy!—When was hypocrisy ever so blind? That which it not merely allows, but on pain of starvation forces him to do, it at the same time forbids his doing, punishing him in case of his doing it: punishing him, unless it shall have happened to him to have obtained a license, the obtainment of which is at the same the 39 or the 40 years accordingly was the time, during which "the most serviceable men in the whole country" would have to wait for this minute part of what was their due. Yet, six days after, 7th June, 1809, Annual Register for 1809, pp. 171, 172,—by the Chancellor of the Exchequer no secret is made of its being destined for perpetuity: accordingly, the 39 or 40 years are now shrunk to 4 years. Resolution, unanimous. Chancellor of Exchequer's "satisfaction, great." "Suggestions for improvement, and the formation of a system (he said) would be considered afterwards." So far Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer:—these suggestions, this system, and the proof that the men in question "were of all others the most serviceable to the country" will all come out the same day. Whatsoever the men themselves may be, to the grand object from which every thing proceeds, and to which every thing tends—to the corruptive influence of the Crown, this job for the raising of their income will in no small degree be "serviceable." In no small proportion are the livings thus enriched, in the gift of the King, that is, of the Chancellor. No doubts appear, on this occasion, to have issued from the official manufactory of doubts.

time made to depend—not on his own will, but on the free and un conjecturable will of another person, in whose breast personal interest may, in any imaginable shape, set up an inexorable bar to it.

To take the word farmer,—since upon this word, with its conjugates to farm and farming, every thing must turn. Of that which a farmer, as such, does, what is there that from first to last a Parish Priest is not by law, not only allowed, but on pain of perishing for want, compelled to do? A farmer, in one sense of the word, is, indeed, he who, by a species of contract, takes to farm, i. e. to cultivate, a quantity of land belonging to another person, paying him rent for it. In another sense, however, a man is said to farm his own land: and, so far as it is his own land alone that he farms, no such contract has place. But—the quantity and quality of the land occupied, and the manner in which it is occupied, being the same in both cases, what difference can it make to piety—what to official duty, whether a man does or does not pay rent for it?

In the contract, therefore, it can not be, that the objection lies, to the complex course of operation, whatever it be, for the designation of which the word farming is employed?—No: it is in the occupation: in the occupation in which, in consequence of such contract, the sort of man in question will be engaged.

And—that occupation—what is it?—what but the very occupation, which, from first to last, the sort of man has been forced to pursue—by the law itself forced to pursue—on pain of perishing?

Glebe and tithes—in one or other of these shapes was Parish Priests' pay originally received all over the kingdom. In one or other of these shapes, or in both together, received it was at the first in every country parish, without exception: and in the greater part of the whole number of parishes, in these same shapes, or in one of them, does it continue to be received or receivable, down to this day.

In so far as it is in the shape of glebe that the pay is received by him, the occupation of this functionary, unless he lets the land to farm to others, must be that of an agriculturist: in so far as it is in the shape of tithes, and, (as in most cases they are,) these tithes are the tenth part of the produce of land,—in this case likewise his occupation can not but be that of an agriculturist: the very occupation, for the exercise of which, land is taken to farm.

Increase of piety—increase of the quantity of time and labour proper to be employed in official duty—in these—one or other, or both of them—may all the pretences alleged, or rather insinuated—the pretences for the sort of restraint in question—be found.

Buying, producing, selling—to these three may the operations of the farmer—profane or sacred, impious or pious—be reduced.

1. As to buying—it is not in buying that the rub can lie:—buying is an operation (which the most Reverend person in existence, the Archbishop of Canterbury—which the “most religious” person in existence, the King of England—can not be exempted from the performance of.

2. As to producing,—unless he can find somebody to take the land of him to farm, (which is what he is never by law required to do, nor has ever in his single power to do,) from this glebe of his, in so far as it is out of that that the pay is to come,—by this glebe of his, unless it be by extracting produce from it, how is any thing that can serve for pay to him to be obtained?

3. Remains the operation of selling. But, the produce of his glebe, so far as he is paid in glebe,—and his tithes, when it is in kind that they are taken by him, unless it be from his selling of them,—how is it that, (with the exception of that part of each, which it is in his power with the help of his family to consume)—how is it that any thing that can serve for pay to him can be obtained by him? Neither by corn, nor by grass, could either his own or his wife's nakedness be covered, with any tolerable degree of decency: the first horse or ass they met with in their way to Church would expose them to shame. By fig-leaves, yes; but by no law—Ecclesiastical, Common, or Statute—is the husbandman any where compelled, as yet, to grow figs for fig-leaves.

With piety, therefore,—in the judgment at least, either of the founders or the upholders of the Parochial Priesthood,—no one of these three operations, of which the occupation of a husbandman is composed, can be inconsistent.

Supposing any one good thing aimed at,—remains as the only good thing that can have been aimed at by these restraints, increase of the quantity of time and labour employed in the performance of these same sacred and official duties. Of official duties, meaning always in the shape of duties of imperfect obligation, as above distinguished: for, as to duties of perfect obligation, consisting in the reading of what is to be read,—for the performance of these,—in so far as it is intended they should be performed,—modes of coercion, rather more direct and efficient than any that can be applied by the mere interdiction of husbandry management, are actually in force. Now then, as to this point—what is the least additional quantity of land, the occupation of which would suffice, to produce the bad effect, of preventing the fulfilment of these obligations;—of preventing it in the instance of a Parish Priest, by whom, but for this cause of seductive avocation, these same obligations would be fulfilled?—Such is the problem, the solution of which has, by State piety, enlightened by State wisdom, been committed for solution, to the piety, enlightened by the wisdom, of each Bishop. This problem solved,—the quantity next below this noxious quantity at which the corruptive quality has its commencement, would be the quantity, the license for which could never experience a refusal, from that tender mercy, which finds so sure an abode, in every such Right Reverend breast.

Another problem.—One Parish Priest (suppose) there is, who, in the produce of glebe, or in tithes, has 7,000*l.* (or 12,000*l.* a year, is it?) to dispose of, for the purpose of converting it into pay for his own use: another, for the like holy purpose, has 10*l.* a year and no more. The Priest whose sacred means of maintenance amount to 10*l.* a year and no more—suppose him under the temptation of taking a farm of a hundred a year, in hopes of making a correspondent addition to it in that profane shape. By which of the two concerns would the greatest force of seductive avocation be applied? by the 110*l.* a year, or by the 12,000*l.* (or though it were but the 7,000*l.*) a year?

The Priest, who has the 7,000*l.* a year in produce to dispose of, disposes of it without need of applying for a license: the Priest who has but 110*l.* a year to dispose of for the same purpose, why is it that he has been forced to make application for a license?—to make application for it, and to depend upon the uncontrolled will of his Bishop for the receipt of it?

Thus much as to the case of the Parish Priest. But neither is there any want of Priests, who are not Parish Priests; and who, for not being that, any more than any thing else that is of any use, are full as well paid, as if, in that shape or some other, they were of ever so much use. Holy as they are, those persons not being charged with duty in any shape, here there is an instance, in which avocation from duty, if that be the evil to be prevented, has no place. Yet, in this instance, no less than in the other, for the prevention of the evil, be it what it may, is the same burthen of decision, imposed on the piety, enlightened by the wisdom, of the Bishop.

Well then—if so it be, that, by selling, with or without producing, the produce of land, the hands of a son of Excellent Church are really rendered unclean,—an effectual mode of preventing this uncleanness—a real remedy, such as it is, is, as it always has been, at the command of those same hands, by which that sham remedy was applied. Laying out of the case the case of glebe,—which in comparison is but as a mole-hill to a mountain,—this remedy—(need it be mentioned?) is commutation of tithes. By this means the inconsistency could at any rate be done away. If then, under the notion of securing either piety or fulfilment of sacred duty,—husbandry, in the case of a Priest, doing duty or not doing duty, were prohibited simply and absolutely,—nothing objectionable would remain but the absurdity and the hypocrisy: if, instead of being simple and absolute, the prohibition were rendered dissoluble by a license, nothing would remain but the absurdity, the hypocrisy, and the despotism: the barefaced erection of a system of despotism, to—not to say for—the corruption and demoralization of all parties concerned:—subject many as well as ruling few, in all their various shapes, included.

Now then for a few questions.—

The Clergy of the Established Church of Scotland—are they, any of them, engaged in farming? and if any, are any of them, in any and what degree or shape, the worse for it?

The Clergy of the Non-Established Churches—are they—any of them—engaged in farming? What temptation so ever there may be in it, do any of these men stand in need of penal laws, or Bishops, to keep them out of it?

Look at the plan above proposed in this work. The Parish Clerk—or the Bell-taught School-boy—could he be a farmer? would there be any need of penal laws, for keeping him out of the business? together with Bishops, for keeping him out of it, or letting him into it?

From which of the two opposite courses has piety—has sacred duty—most to fear? from patriarchal, though it be profit-seeking industry? or from prodigality?—from carefulness in the shape of husbandry? or dissipation in the shape of fox-hunting, shooting, gaming, drinking, or amorous intrigue?—In which place has it most peril to encounter? in the market-house, or in my Lord's dining-room, with my Lady's drawing-room by the side of it?—Questions these as fit for the meridian of the British Forum, as unfit for that of either House.

Of these inconsistencies, flagrant as they are, we shall not have far to look for the cause. For covering the cherished profligacy, a veil of sanctity was therefore requisite. For decency—Church-of-England decency!—something in the shape of a veil was thought necessary: but, so the shape were in that sense decent, no matter how thin the texture.

A pretence was found in the already mentioned statute (21 H. 8. c. 13.). In this most curious effusion of transparent hypocrisy,—antecedently to those provisions by which, “For the more quiet and virtuous increase “and maintenance of divine service, the preaching and “teaching the word of God, with godly-and-good-ex“ample-giving . . . the increase of devotion and good “opinion of the lay-fee toward the spiritual persons,” sinecurism was established,—eight sections full of details and words (§ 1 to 8.) are occupied in the labour of preserving from this profanation the sacred brotherhood. For giving effect to all this piety, the force of penalties was of course employed. When, by the malice of Informers, the peace of Excellent Church came, as above, to be disturbed,—that part of the Act had, along with the rest, engaged the notice of those invited servants of the law. By the Act of 1803, for defeating their endeavours in that service, arrangements of a temporary nature were, in this as in the other cases, provided. That done, common sense and common honesty called for a pure repeal. Policy,—beholding matter, capable of being employed with advantage in the composition of the yoke which was in preparation, took up this part of the Act with the rest, and in the manner that will be seen, converted it to that pious use.

§ 5.—VI. Over Incumbents and Curates, lodging despotic power in the hands of Bishops.

In Number IV. of this Appendix, § 6, p. 294, four occasions may be seen, on which, the means that appear to have been employed for the attainment of this end, come into operation:—Examination for Holy Orders—Licensing for Non-Residence—Apportionment of Curates' Stipends—Determining, in the instance of each Parish or other Priest, whether he may have, or shall not have, land in his occupation, and the produce of land under his management.

I. As to Examination for Holy Orders:—power thereupon of granting or refusing admission.

Confined as it is in its exercise to a single point of time,—in the character of an instrument of eventual vexation, this power can scarcely be in any considerable degree formidable:—the result being—(see p. 295) habitual and general laxity and inefficiency in the whole system of the discipline, not undue severity in the exercise of it.

II. and III. As to Licensing for Non-Residence, and Apportionment of Curates' Stipends.

It is by the joint operation of the powers exercised on these two occasions, that, among Incumbents who are Non-Residents, of all those, whose condition is that of an habitual and never repentant sinner, men's wills have so plainly been endeavoured to be kept, and doubtless in no inconsiderable proportion are kept, in a state of "prostration" at the feet of their respective Bishops. Of these, the number indicated by the above discussion, seems to be—about one half of the whole number of existing Incumbents.—To these add, without any exception, the whole body of stipendiary Curates.

IV. As to the determining, in the instance of each Parish or other Priest, whether he may, or shall not, have land in his occupation, or the produce of land under his management.

Respecting the origin of this power, and the principle on which it has been conferred, see the last preceding section.

In respect of its extent, and incidental consequences, this power has much more of efficiency in it, than to a first view may be obvious. In the class of Incumbents,—especially the more opulent,—are to be seen, in no small proportion, those who, to the sacred office of Parish Priest,—converted or not, as above, into a sinecure,—add the profane office of a Justice of the Peace. In the exercise of this profane office, such of their wills as, by the virtue of their sacred office had been laid prostrate, as above, at the feet of the Bishop, found their way of course, and without need of any special intimation, on every “decent” and “useful” occasion, from those holy feet to the feet of the Minister: viz. in the first place, these same holy wills themselves,—and, in the next place, along with them, in general, the wills of those, whose lot, in virtue of the powers attached to that Lay Office, is more or less at their disposal: and, in particular, the keepers of those houses of general resort, in which, in so large a proportion, along with the bodies, the minds of the people receive their food.—And here may be seen one of the knots of the family alliance, by which Excellent Church,—and her not much less Excellent Sister, State,—are knit together in such mutually delightful harmony.

Bent down together under the double yoke, all these amphibious functionaries, by an attraction altogether natural, aggregate themselves to the class of “useful Magistrates :” Magistrates useful, in that official sense of the word, the explanation of which, may, in the Plan of this work, pp. xlv to xlix, be found in the joint case of the worshipful poisoner, and the Very Reverend the declared scorner, of ale-drinkers.

In this way it is, that—by the same sacred hands, by which, without prejudice to his Godhead, the body and blood of a God are put into the mouths of prostrate sinners,—indication may, on each proper occasion, be given—given to Victuallers and others—of the side on which it is proper to vote at Parliamentary and other Elections.

Judicature—and in so many instances to the value of a man’s whole subsistence—judicature exercised by a Judge, acting singly, in secret, without need of discussion or examinable evidence,—and without appeal, unless it be to another such Judge, acting in the same unbridled manner—such is the sort of judicature committed to each Bishop.—Now if this be not despotism, what else is despotism? If, acting in such a situation, a Judge be not a despot, who else is? If this be not establishing despotism, in what other way can despotism be established? If for its object the power thus conferred had not the establishment of this despotism, what other and better object had it? what other and better object could it have had?

Looking this objection, together with another, in the face—"seeing it urged with great force," and even by those who would otherwise have been "friendly to the object of the measure,"—"even if the provision had been more general," (says the Noble Reformer, p. 18) I should not have felt it:" "I should not have felt it," (says he) and this is all he deigns to say of it. In the President of the Council, behold here then a man, who brings in, and causes to be passed into an Act, what he calls (p. 1.) "a system of measures for strengthening the establishment of the Church of England;"—and who, upon its being observed to him, that, by this system, the greater part, if not the whole of the Clergy of the Established Church are put in subjection, under the individual and arbitrary will of six and twenty men of their own order, laid prostrate by this and other means, under the separate, sinister, and corruptive influence of the Crown,—coolly observes, that "even if these provisions had been more general, he should not have felt the objection!" Such are the laws by which—such the men by whom—we are governed!—Men whose uncontested object—men whose thus avowed object it is—to hold their fellow-subjects—to hold an entire class of their fellow-subjects in a state of the most abject servitude!—An entire class! and what class? even that class, on whose instructions it is moreover their avowed object to cause all the others to depend, for their eternal, and in the mean time for their temporal, welfare. Thus then have they been suffered to take into their power the whole stock of this "salt of the earth:"—to take it into their power—and to what purpose, but to poison it?

Oh but, (says his Lordship) despotism is indeed your word, but "influence"—nothing more than "influence"—is mine. If then so indeed it be, that, by any opponents of mine in the House, establishment of despotism was objected to my system, no such account of it have you from me.—Influence—increase of the influence given to the Bishops over their Clergy—increase given to the influence of lawful and acknowledged superiors over their respective subordinates—In the case in question, any more than in any other, what in all this is there that ought to be regarded as an objection?—an objection, and that too a peremptory one?

O yes, my good Lord, influence is that, which this Act of yours has laboured to produce:—influence?—yea, and as your Lordship acknowledges, "increase of influence." But, by being influence, is despotism the less despotism?—One species of influence indeed there is which is not despotism: for it is not power:—this is the influence of understanding on understanding:—it is the sort of influence, which, at this moment, this pen is employing its endeavours—its honest howsoever weak endeavours—to exercise. Moreover, other species of influence there are, which are not despotism, though they do come under the denomination of power: such is the influence exercised by a Judge, as such, when exercised under those checks, by which judicature is distinguished from despotism:—from the exercise of power altogether arbitrary.—The power, exercised under a body of laws, according to which, on payment of so much a head, if tried and convicted, (which he will never be,) a man is allowed, because he is white, to kill, because they are black, as many slaves, of his own or any body else's, as he pleases—this too is influence:—but is it the less despotism? With or without his name to it, suppose a man addressing to your Lordship a letter, saying—Before the Session is at an end, bring in a Bill, for blowing up Excellent Church, instead of patching it up and varnishing it, or I will deal with you as your departed friend was dealt with—by no such flagitious attempt to exercise influence over it, would your Lordship's steady and intrepid mind be wrought upon:—true: but that which by the supposition would be attempted to be exercised, would it with the less strict propriety be susceptible of being designated by the name of influence?

The instrument, by which the will of that Assembly,—the use of which, if it had any, would be the exercising a control over the servants of the Monarch,—is laid and kept constantly and legitimately prostrate at their feet,—is not influence the name by which it is called? called as universally as arsenic is called arsenic?—As easily as the name of influence has been given to parliamentary corruption, as easily might the name of sugar have been given to arsenic; as it has actually been to a poison extracted from lead:—but the drug itself, would it be the less poisonous?

Call it influence—good, my Lord, and welcome: but, if its mode of operating be considered, continue as you began—speak out boldly and honestly—prefix to it the adjunct despotic—call it despotic influence:—if its effects on the character and conduct of both parties be considered, prefix to it the adjunct corruptive—call it corruptive influence. On these conditions—and is there any thing unreasonable in them? On these conditions—but not otherwise—not any the smallest objection on this occasion, will there be, to the use of the word influence. But, with this accompaniment—with an accompaniment thus explanatory—will your Lordship's avowed insensibility to the objection still remain?—remain not only unshaken but avowed?

§ 6.—VII. Announced, and remaining to be executed. From Christians and others of all persuasions, money to be exacted, sufficient to render the number of Church-of-England Churches “commensurate to the whole population.”

Of the announcement here in question, the evidence may be seen in No. IV. of this Appendix, p. 266.

Great, and every day increasing, is the number of churches, provided by the piety and liberality of so many congregations of the sincere and zealous followers of Jesus. But, the contributions of which the fund is composed, being purely and exclusively voluntary, one capital one among Excellent Church's maxims, viz. maxim the 7th, (p. 237) is violated. In the collection of the money, no power is exercised. Moreover, the congregation,—being mostly schismatics,—are, as such, men of “guilt ;” worshippers of God, and not of the English hierarchy. Hence the determination already announced—announced at this season of unprecedented distress—the determination to exact more money, for the erection of more of these costly edifices.

But, to every new Church there must be an Incumbent at least, if not an Incumbent and a Curate. For every Incumbent there must be a Parsonage House, with Out-Houses, Garden, Field more or less ample, and other appurtenances: nor can the House be habitable without furniture.

For the number of the new Churches requisite, the Population Tables will of course be the standard of reference resorted to: for,—whatsoever knowledge there may be to the contrary,—the presumption will of course be—so many inhabitants of a certain age and upwards, so many members of the Established Church, all eager to crowd into the new Churches.

Before building and after building, the Churches and the Parsonages will form a foundation for more wholesome and coercive laws :—laws for forcing the unwilling to pay Ministers for serving in them ;—laws for forcing the Ministers to give unnecessary pay to their Curates : laws for preventing Ministers, when they have received the pay, from going off with it to spend it elsewhere :—to spend it elsewhere without service,—without rendering that service, which, wherever rendered, is, if rendered, in the very nature of it so unprofitable.

A prophecy will here be hazarded. No such application will ever be made. How unable so ever to procure removal of established abuse, reason is sometimes sufficient for preventing, or at any rate for checking, increase.

Spontaneously on this subject the lips of the Noble Reformer will never open themselves : interrogated at any time, his answer will be—this is not the time.

Unhappily, from no inspired pen does this prophecy come. Should it be disfulfilled, then will be the time, for all men, in whose eyes waste is indefensible,—hypocrisy, fraud, and extortion, odious,—to come forward and remonstrate ! Presbyterians, Independents, Quakers, Baptists, Unitarians, Catholics, Jews—all worshippers of God according to conscience—all these, but above all, all honest Church of Englandists—then will be the time for them to make themselves seen and heard.

Prepare for that day, Earl of Harrowby ! Prepare for that day, Lord Viscount Sidmouth ! Prepare for that day, Commander of the faithful, Duke of York !

FINIS.

Bentham, Jeremy,

Church-of-Englandism and its catechism examined ...

London 1817

Brit. 53 me

urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb10278612-0